LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, January 26, 1960, being the first day of the First Session of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of the Province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable J. Keiller Mackay, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met,

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, having entered the House, took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): I am commanded by His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, to state that he does not see fit to declare the causes of the summoning of the present Legislature of this province until a Speaker of this House shall have been chosen according to law; but today at a subsequent hour, His Honour will declare the causes of the calling of this Legislature.

His Honour was then pleased to retire.

Clerk of the House: Members of the Legislative Assembly, it is my duty to call upon you to elect one of your number to preside over your deliberations, as Speaker.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Clerk, and hon. members of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of Ontario: His Honour's withdrawal from the House has of course indicated that organization of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of Ontario first requires the election of one who will occupy the honoured position of Speaker. Traditionally since Confederation, a new Speaker has been chosen by each Parliament, as in Ottawa where the tradition has been to alternate the Speaker between the French-speaking and English-speaking sections of Canada. In Ontario the tradition has been generally to elect a new Speaker for each Parliament. There have been, of course, exceptions to this, but the Speaker elected today to preside over the Twenty-sixth Parliament will be the twenty-fifth Speaker since Confederation.

Before making the nomination, may I express a word of thanks to hon. Alfred Wallace Downer, the Speaker in the House immediately preceding, who is the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. Captain Downer has since assumed other responsibilities which no doubt will be the subject of discussion in this House. He was a distinguished Speaker in the long tradition of Speakers in this province. The member for Dufferin-Simcoe entered this House in 1937, at the same time as myself. Here we might pay tribute to the other Speakers of that time. I very well remember hon. Norman O. Hipel, who was a very distinguished Speaker of this House and a very kindly gentleman; hon. James Clarke, from Windsor; hon. W. J. Stewart; hon. James Hepburn, from Prince Edward-Lennox; hon. M. C. Davies and the last Speaker, hon. A. W. Downer.

The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe has made a distinguished contribution to the tradition established by Speakers in this assembly since Confederation. He and his wife, whom we also thank, presided with very great dignity in the function in which the Speaker is the host for the people of Ontario.

At this time, seconded by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), it is a very great pleasure to place a nomination under the name of William Murdoch, hon. member for Essex South. He has been an hon. member of this House since 1943, and of course in that time has acquired very considerable seniority—because there is a very great erosion in the membership of the House as hon. members who have been here for a considerable period of time will have noted.

In presenting the name of the hon. member for Essex South, may I say that it is of particular pleasure to present to this House the name of one who in every sense is a true Canadian. Mr. Murdoch, a native of Leeds, England, arrived in this country in 1923. To him as with our forebears in most cases, it was largely an unknown land.

The hon. member has made a fine contribution to the province and to this country—which is now his country—in a host of ways: as a farmer; as a citizen of a community which is one of the rock-rib communities of this old province of ours; as a member of a service club and of fraternal organizations; as a member of his church where one of his accomplishments—I may say quite unknown to myself until today—is as organist of his church.

He has also made a fine contribution as a member of the municipal council and as an hon. member of this assembly for nearly 17 years, where his activities among us are so well known as not to require any elaboration. He has been a worthy hon. member of this House and as well an honoured member of the great riding of Essex South which will likewise be honoured by his election to this high office.

It is a very great pleasure to nominate the hon. member for Essex South, seconded by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that William Murdoch, Esquire, hon. member for the electoral district of Essex South, do take the chair of this House as its Speaker.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Clerk, hon. Prime Minister, and hon. members of the Legislature: it is my pleasure to second the nomination. I do so in the knowledge that this particular position to which we are electing one of our hon. members today is probably as important a position in this legislative assembly as any other.

You know, Mr. Clerk, that the tradition and the evolution of the Speakership has come to us from the Middle Ages. Over the last few days I have made some investigation and find it goes back to about 1377, to a time when there was a conflict between the Sovereign and the members of the Commons. That conflict eventually resolved itself by the election of a member of the legislative group to act as a liaison officer between the Commons and the Sovereign.

Traditionally and historically, that position has evolved until today it is the respected position of the one member in the legislative assembly who is expected to act in a non-partisan and impartial way.

The hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Murdoch) has been in this House since 1943. He had the opportunity to participate in debates and to play his part in this legislative assembly. He now has the opportunity for greater service to all of us; service not only to his party, not only to the hon. members of the party with which he is associated, but to all this legislative body. I think I am speaking for all the hon. members when I say that we are very cognizant of the historic significance of this particular legislative assembly, an assembly that in all probability will be required to pass upon many important decisions that will affect the lives of all of us.

Therefore, it is imperative that the man who assumes this responsibility carry out the tradition and historic responsibility of impartiality and direction of the affairs of this assembly.

Mr. Clerk, it is a pleasure for me to join with the hon. Prime Minister to second the nomination of the hon. member for Essex South.

You will permit me, Mr. Clerk, in passing, to make some reference to one of us who has served during the period of time that I have been in this House. I cannot go back as the hon. Prime Minister can, over a series of Speakers. The only Speaker I know, and with whom I am familiar, is the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer). Mr. Clerk, I can only say, of the man whom we are nominating today, that if he serves this position as efficiently and impartially and effectively as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe did during the last session of the Legislature, we will have elected a man who is cognizant of the tradition and the responsibility of this position.

It is my pleasure, Mr. Clerk, to join with the hon. Prime Minister and second the motion to elect as Speaker of this House Mr. Murdoch, the hon. member for Essex South.

The Clerk of the House: Are there any further nominations?

There being no further nominations, I declare the nominations closed, and I also declare hon. William Murdoch to be duly elected to be Speaker of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members, it is with a deep sense of gratitude that I accept the honour which has been bestowed on me at this time. I do wish to thank most sincerely the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) for the very kind words which I heard, on my behalf. I wish to thank all my hon. colleagues in this chamber for their vote of confidence. And I do recognize the responsibility and obligations which I now assume on their behalf.

Very many distinguished hon. members of the Legislature have graced the Speaker's chair, and particularly I am mindful of my immediate hon. predecessor—so much so that I feel unequal to the task of following their example. Therefore, I must rely—as I know I can—on the generosity and the goodwill of the hon. members, and I shall pray at all times for the necessary strength and wisdom. I do look forward to the new duties which I now assume.

I trust that I can be sufficiently tolerant to give to every hon. member his hard-won right of free expression and yet conduct the affairs and the business of this assembly with impartiality and justice—of course preserving at all times the dignity and good order that are so necessary to our proceedings.

I pledge my loyalty to our most Sovereign Lady, Queen Elizabeth, and her chosen representative in this province of Ontario, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor.

Once again I thank most sincerely the hon. members and pray for guidance and for blessing in all our deliberations. I shall do my best.

The House will now adjourn during pleasure.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor then re-entered the House, and took his seat upon the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me and not to the assembly whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and their country, hereby claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to your person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from you the most favourable consideration.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the assembly to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that the proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temperance and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow the constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the assembly shall have ready access to His Honour upon all suitable occasions and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. J. Keiller Mackay (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

It gives me great pleasure to inaugurate the first session of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of Ontario and to welcome you today as you take up your duties. I extend a special welcome to those members who are here for the first time, knowing that they will uphold the great traditions of this Legislature.

The past year has been one of outstanding economic achievement. Our population, income, output and volume of consumer spending were all higher in 1959 than in the previous year. Employment increased more rapidly than the labour force and unemployment was reduced. Production and living standards reached their highest levels in the history of the province. The results achieved have fully justified the confidence that we expressed a year ago.

Turning to 1960, we are advised that nearly all economic indicators suggest a year of continued expansion and progress which will carry us to new heights of prosperity.

This session is important not only because it is the first of this Parliament, but also because it is the first of a new decade—a decade which promises to surpass all others in development and in improvement in the well-being of our people.

There is, of course, no room for complacency. The opportunities of today will be the challenges of tomorrow. Rapid population and industrial growth impose heavy responsibilities and demands for services. Notable as our accomplishments have been, we cannot stand still, we must press ever forward, mastering problems, overcoming difficulties, stimulating expansion, providing better services more economically and, at the same time, raising the money to do the job.

This has been the foundation upon which the programme for this session has been built. This is our creed.

As our programme unfolds you will find, among many other matters, proposals for raising standards and extending the benefits of education, for bettering health and welfare, improving conditions of employment, reinforcing municipal institutions, enhancing the efficiency and safety of motor vehicle traffic and of agricultural operations, strengthening democratic parliamentary procedures, raising the efficiency of government operations, and last but far from least—for upon its success depends the fulfilment of all other policies—promoting the sound economic development of our province.

The very complete and far-reaching re-organization of The Department of Municipal Affairs which you will be asked to approve will facilitate the consideration and settlement of municipal problems. It will also transfer to The Department of Municipal Affairs many of the present functions of the Ontario municipal board. Reports will be given to you as to the nature, extent and progress of winter work. To assist the municipalities it is proposed to vote an additional amount of provincial revenue for municipal purposes.

Additional improvements in the province's grants structure for education will require substantially larger appropriations. The growth need factor, which was introduced in the school grants formula to give special assistance to rapidly expanding school areas, will be refined and improved.

Among other things—effective January, 1959—a contribution will be made towards the cost of sites of new schools. You will be asked to vote funds to extend facilities for an increase in teacher supply together with the maintenance and improvement of present standards.

With the unprecedented growth in the number of school children and the demand for teachers, extraordinary measures have been adopted. A new teachers' college will be commenced at the Lakehead and existing colleges will be expanded.

To provide further opportunities for the recruitment and training of teachers for our secondary schools, the Ontario College of Education, with the co-operation of Queen's University and the University of Western Ontario, will operate summer courses at Kingston and London this year.

As has been predicted the enrolment in our universities has begun its rapid climb. Through our assistance, the universities have been mobilized to meet the need. New universities have been established; others are expanding. Plans to avoid the wastage of student talent are being broadened and extended and to insure that every student of ability and ambition who wishes to proceed to university will have the opportunity.

So successful has the new scholarship plan for grade 13 students been that you will be asked to approve funds to make similar awards in 1960-1961. The committee of university heads has recommended a formula for the payment of Queen Elizabeth II scholarships from the $500,000 contributed by the province last year.

In addition to scholarships, the province will again provide several million dollars in bursaries and loans. Last year, the appropriation for these purposes was doubled and this year additional funds will be requested. These various educational programmes will require appropriations totalling nearly double the entire budget of the province just 15 years ago.

The growth in superannuation and old age security plans has been a notable advance in human betterment. Many people have been spared the anxiety of financial distress in their declining years through superannuation and pension benefits.

On the other hand, the actuarial requirements of many company and institutional pension plans constitute a serious barrier to the employment of men and women in middle life, at a time when their powers of accomplishment are frequently at their peak. This is not only a grave social injustice but constitutes an intolerable economic wastage of human talent.

To overcome this disability the government has encouraged the adoption of transferable or vested pensions where employees change jobs. The government is, however, conscious that much remains to be done, and has appointed a special committee of technical officials to study and make recommendations leading to a solution. The extension of portable pensions is one of the foremost aims of this government.

Studies in geriatrics and methods of adjustment of elderly citizens to their environment will be carried out. Homes for the aged are being expanded. The year 1960 will see a number of important expansions in municipal-provincial establishments. The proposals of the department concerned will be submitted to you.

You will be asked to approve a grant to the Ontario branch of the Canadian Association of Consumers to assist them in their work of providing services to the consumers of this province.

Significant advances have been made in finding opportunities for employment for our expanding Indian population, and in providing education for those who will give example and leadership to other members of their community.

The programme of modernizing mental health care and treatment is being intensified. The re-organization authorized last year is well under way. Very great progress has been made in modernizing and fireproofing our Ontario hospitals, and you will be asked to vote substantial additional amounts for this purpose.

While older facilities are being modernized, notable progress is being made in expanding new facilities.

This year will see the completion of several hundred beds at the Cedar Springs Hospital which will be devoted entirely to the care of children. This is a year earlier than was planned. An equal number of beds will come into use at this hospital next year. The new infirmary type of hospital will be proceeded with at Goderich, Palmerston and Owen Sound.

These new hospitals are designed to relieve institutions such as Orillia of patients who have grown elderly, and permit these fine institutions to be devoted entirely to the care of children and, where possible, to fitting them for normal lives.

Special measures are being introduced to provide for a large increase in the number of nurses and nursing assistants. Included in the list of new projects, for which funds will be required, will be a two-year training course for nurses which will commence next September. The certified nursing assistant programme is being doubled, and over 1,100 will be trained in our hospitals this year. There will also be an expansion of training schools in hospitals. The objective will be to train more nurses and nursing assistants more quickly without lowering standards.

The Ontario hospital services commission has completed its first year of operation. The distinguished success of the programme reflects the careful planning that went into it as well as the insight, understanding and co-operation of the physicians, the hospital boards and administrators, the insurance companies and, of course, the administrative skill of the commission itself.

Ninety-four per cent. of Ontario's population is now protected from the financial hazards of hospitalization. This plan is the greatest of its kind in America and full details of its operation will be given to this House.

Hospital insurance has added to the financial strength of our hospitals. The implications of out-patient services are being considered and plans to promote the convalescent type of hospital will be developed. You will be asked to vote funds to permit special grants to be made to hospitals for capital and debt retirement purposes.

Supplementing our extensive health services, a new physical fitness programme will be inaugurated. This is a complex subject and an important one. It embraces many individuals and organizations. Our objective will be to co-ordinate efforts and to establish practices that are conducive to good health and physical fitness.

The House will be asked to approve of an inquiry into the cost of drugs used in Ontario public general hospitals and in Ontario Hospitals as well as other institutions operated by the province.

Further steps will be taken to widen treatment for alcoholism, a subject in which Ontario is well in the lead. Funds will be requested for experimental projects involving group therapy for first offender drug addicts. Progress has been made during the year in revamping the province's reformatory system. The programme to be placed before you will provide for additional reforms to meet the specific needs of the offender. Amendments will be made to The Industrial Farms Act, The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act, The Reformatories Act and The Training Schools Act.

During this session, there will be an opportunity to give further expression to our interest in the betterment of mankind everywhere. This has been evidenced by our acceptance of world refugees suffering from tuberculosis and by our activities in a variety of other fields, including technology, science and education. A system of student exchange in our teachers' training institutions is already in effect and it will be extended to include other countries. Many students are attending Ontario universities under the auspices of the Colombo Plan. Indeed, under Ontario's university system, we are now providing educational facilities and training for 1,500 students from other countries.

Amendments to The Labour Relations Act will be placed before you which are designed to strengthen the organization and machinery provided by the Act for the settlement of disputes and the provision of good labour-management relations. The workmen's compensation board will adopt a new schedule enabling widows under The Workmen's Compensation Act to be paid the same compensation. Legislation will be introduced to regulate private employment agencies.

The report of the committee on the organization of government will be submitted to you and full opportunity will be given for a discussion, not only of the committee's recommendations, but of aspects of the problems which are of importance to individual members. Several of the committee's recommendations have already been implemented.

A re-organization of The Department of Municipal Affairs, the Ontario municipal board and The Department of Agriculture has been carried out, while that of the treasury board is under way.

The answers to our problems concerning the preservation of parliamentary procedures, executive responsibility and administrative efficiency must come from the experience and the thoughtful contribution of many people. It was to further these processes that the committee was given its highly important duties. In this examination of the workings of our form of government and our administrative processes, Ontario has given strong leadership. Members will have the opportunity of discussing and advancing proposals for strengthening our democratic way of life and for improving the efficiency of our form of government.

Funds will be required to enable the Ontario water resources commission to continue its rapid progress in assisting municipalities to obtain adequate water and sewage works and to abate pollution.

The province in partnership with the federal government and the municipalities will engage in additional land assembly and rental housing projects. You will be asked to make provision for nearly 1,600 public housing units now under construction and others that are in the planning stage—including assistance to municipalities in the redevelopment of blighted urban areas.

During the coming year, motor vehicle registrations will exceed two million. You will therefore be asked to authorize improvements to the Queen Elizabeth Way and the extension of highway No. 401. The Ontario section of the Trans-Canada highway will be open by the end of this year. Plans and agreements with adjoining states for major bridges and skyways, such as the new bridge over Pigeon River, the international bridge at Sault Ste. Marie, the skyway over the Welland canal at Homer, and the causeway over Rainy Lake, will be placed before you.

Members will be asked to approve an agreement with the federal government for a 5-year programme of resource road construction in northern Ontario and also additional mining, forestry and community access roads. A very significant part of our highway and road budget you will be asked to approve will go to the municipalities to enable them to improve their facilities.

Increasing emphasis will be placed on minimizing motor vehicle accidents and saving lives. The driver examination system is being strengthened. Amendments to the highway laws will be submitted to keep pace with the new concept of traffic and administrative requirements, including the provision that by next year Ontario drivers will be assigned a permanent driver's licence number.

At the present session it is proposed to appoint a select committee to review the present provisions and operation of the unsatisfied judgment fund and to examine into protective automobile insurance and other related plans.

To insure that Ontario agriculture will be in the forefront of progress, a number of changes are being effected. The administration of the department is being strengthened.

As a result, in part, of the studies of the agricultural marketing inquiry committee of Ontario—whose interim report will be available for consideration at this session—there will be a co-ordination of all research in the province relating to the production, handling, transportation, storage and marketing of agricultural products.

A research foundation for this purpose will be established at the Ontario Agricultural College. Experiments and innovations in other jurisdictions, including the United States, will be closely observed with a view to keeping Ontario agriculture competitive at home and abroad. Action will be taken to provide at the Ontario Agricultural College and its affiliated institutions the best possible education and service for Ontario's farm population.

Marketing organization and problems will receive renewed attention. The matter of crop insurance will be submitted to the committee on agriculture for review. Safety practices related to actual farm conditions will be further extended. There will be increased emphasis on sound farm methods calculated to increase efficiency and the net return to farmers.

Remarkable strides have been made in extending Ontario's parks system. To the 85 provincial parks now established, authorization will be sought for an additional 10 this year. Some 8 million visitors and 500,000 campers used the province's parks facilities last year and arrangements are being made to accommodate an even larger number this year.

Funds will be requested to provide more conservation areas suitable for small parks and green belts. Measures will be introduced to assist municipalities to establish parks complementary to provincial parks.

Ways and means are being studied to give greater encouragement to tourism and tourist organizations. Plans are being made to establish an inland reception centre in Ontario adjacent to highway No. 400 near Barrie to serve central, northern and northwestern Ontario routes.

On all fronts the scientific management of our forest resources is forging ahead. The second 10-year plan to re-survey our forest resources has now been started. Funds will be required for additional field parties and for the special commission that is examining all land disposal and land use policies. Approval will be sought for holding various recreational Crown lands and numerous small harbours on our Great Lakes in safekeeping for the benefit of our people.

Appropriations for forest management and research into the biology of fish and wildlife will be requested. A scientific census will aid in establishing seasons and quotas. The new Wilderness Areas Act passed at the last session is enabling forward steps to be taken to preserve large tracts in their original state. Efforts will be made to assist trappers through the extension of licencing and advice on marketing. Meetings are scheduled with the federal government for conferences on conservation and resource management.

The development of the northern and northwestern parts of the province will receive fresh impetus from policies such as the selective land use for forestry and agriculture; new geophysical surveys; the provision of electric power, natural gas and nuclear energy; and the creation of a seaport at Moosonee. Here surveys are being undertaken; accommodation for 800 people is underway; and all this is but the beginning of events that will shape the destiny of the north country.

The government will make a submission to the Royal commission on transportation.

Proposals are again being submitted to you for a large-scale construction programme involving an extensive variety of public buildings and works, including hospitals, administrative buildings and conservation projects. Long-range plans are being made that will permit Ontario's legislative and administrative office needs to be met as required over the next 25 years.

The acquisition of a large block of property in the Queen's Park area is designed to permit the centralization of departmental activities in the proximity of the Legislature for greater efficiency and the convenience of the public.

The Department of Energy Resources, set up at the last session, is keeping under review the current and future energy needs of the province. In addition to the present code covering inside gas installation, a new gas safety code governing outside installations is being established.

A committee is being appointed to examine and report on drilling for oil and gas in Ontario. It will pay special attention to the impact of off-shore drilling in the Great Lakes.

The Ontario Fuel Board Act will be superseded by a new Act to enable the board to concentrate on rates and other quasi-judicial matters. Other functions previously performed by it will be transferred to The Department of Energy Resources. These and other matters will be submitted for your consideration.

Ontario Hydro's peak load is expected to rise about 6 per cent. annually over the next several years, necessitating continuing large capital expenditures. Part of this programme consists of a 20,000 kilowatt nuclear power generating plant on the Ottawa River and a 200,000 kilowatt nuclear electric station near Kincardine for which the necessary credit will be required.

A re-organization of justice administration to provide a better distribution of the work and to relieve county and district court judges and magistrates of administrative functions will be undertaken. Leadership is being given in the formation of a national committee to further efforts to prevent the sale of obscene and pornographic material. Plans for a police college for the training of all ranks will also be submitted.

A new look at federal-provincial taxation and fiscal relations has become imperative, and therefore two meetings of the Ministers of Finance and Treasurers of the federal and provincial governments were held during the past year, and a plenary conference of the Prime Ministers is to be held in Ottawa this summer.

During the past year, considerable progress was made in obtaining a better understanding of some of the complex questions which beset our federal-provincial relations. Various studies were made by the continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters for the consideration of the Treasurers and for their respective governments.

These studies will form the basis for discussions which are to be held at the plenary conference this summer, at which time we will strive for a fair and equitable settlement of our outstanding problems.

There is no doubt that both the province and the municipalities need additional tax room or revenue in order to carry out their operations. Since the end of World War II the major burden of expansion has fallen upon them and upon their revenues which are not nearly so responsive to economic expansion as those of the federal government. Accordingly, both the province and the municipalities must have additional funds if they are to provide the services for an expanding economy.

The requirements of our country, arising from our economic expansion which must continue into the future, demonstrate the need for a more positive approach by federal and provincial governments to the very real problems brought about by our development. It is more than necessary in this important day of our country's development that there should be full federal and provincial co-operation in a national economic programme, the aim of which is to fully develop Canada's great opportunities in this part of this century.

A re-organization of civil defence services will be made.

Much has been done by my government during the past year to improve the well-being of our civil servants for whose devotion and faithful service appreciation is expressed. New salary and wage schedules have been adopted. Provision has been made for the establishment of a grievance board, composed of two members of the civil service and two part-time qualified members from outside the service, who will hear the grievances. The joint advisory council has also been re-organized.

There will be a number of bills creating new Acts introduced for your consideration among which will be The Land Compensation Act, The Dead Animals Disposal Act, The Wild Rice Harvesting Act and The Agricultural Crops Insurance Act.

In addition, there will be a number of complete revisions of existing Acts, among them, The Telephone Act, The Professional Engineers Act, The Crown Witnesses Act and The Employment Agencies Act.

Many bills will be submitted too for your consideration amending existing Acts. Among them will be The Liquor Control Act, The Liquor Licence Act, The Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgages Act, The Bulk Sales Act, The Certification of Titles Act, The County Courts Act, The County Judges Act, The Crown Attorneys Act, The Devolution of Estates Act, The Division Courts Act, The Evidence Act, The Fire Marshals Act, The Judicature Act, The Juvenile and Family Courts Act, The Interpretation Act, The Mechanics' Lien Act, The Land Titles Act, The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, The Summary Convictions Act, The Negligence Act, The Public Trustee Act, The Registry Act, The Short Forms of Conveyances Act, The Short Forms of Leases Act, The Short Forms of Mortgages Act, The Wages Act.

There will be the Ontario Fuel Board Act, The Department of Energy Resources Act, The Highway Improvement Act, The Department of Highways Act, The Highway Traffic Act, The Public Health Act, The Mental Hospitals Act, The Cemeteries Act, The Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act, The Farm Products Marketing Act, The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act, The Milk Industry Act, The Protection of Cattle Act, The Weed Control Act, The Teachers' Superannuation Act, The Department of Education Act, The Public Schools Act, The Schools Administration Act, The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act, The Separate Schools Act, The Public Libraries Act, The Tourist Establishments Act, The Power Commission Act, The Crown Timber Act, The Forestry Act, The Lakes and Rivers Improvement Act, The Provincial Parks Act, The Public Lands Act, The Surveys Act, The Trees Act, The Mining Act, The Territorial Division Act.

There will be The Municipal Act, The Assessment Act, The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act, The Conservation Authorities Act, The Planning Act, The Day Nurseries Act, The Child Welfare Act, The Homes for the Aged Act, The Public Works Act, The Provincial Aid to Drainage Act, The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act, The Hospital Services Commission Act, The Corporations Act, The Vital Statistics Act, The Succession Duty Act, The Corporations Tax Act, The Financial Administration Act, The Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act, The Hospitals Tax Act, and The Public Service Act.

The public accounts for the fiscal year ending last March will be presented as well as the budget statement of the Treasurer and the estimates of the various departments.

I pray that Divine Providence may guide your deliberations.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I dare at this time to make the motion relative to Hansard. This has been discussed on very many occasions and I hope that this will be acceptable without any changes.

I desire to move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer), during the present session of the legislative assembly provision be made for the taking and printing of reports of debates and speeches and to that end, Mr. Speaker, be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches and the necessary stenographers at such rates of compensation as may be agreed to by him.

Also, that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amount of 1,200 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, to Mr. Speaker, to the clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, to each hon. member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, to the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province as approved by Mr. Speaker, and the balance to be distributed by the clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion be carried?

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question regarding the phrase "as approved by the Speaker" in reference to the newspapers? I thought we had secured from the government a reform to the end that all weekly newspapers would get a copy of Hansard. Is that not the case? What is the situation in respect to weekly newspapers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to the hon. member that I am actually not familiar with the details of this. It was left with Mr. Speaker to deal with in his usual impartial and adequate way, and I think everybody was satisfied last year.

I would suggest that, if this is not satisfactory, perhaps the matter might be looked into by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—or by the hon. member for Grey South for that matter—and if after consultation with Mr. Speaker it is found to be in any way inadequate or unsatisfactory, the matter could be remedied.

But I think we arrived at a solution which seemed to be fair and which satisfied everyone.

Mr. Oliver: I do not intend to belabour this, but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the weekly newspapers of the province should be given a copy of Hansard without having to be approved by the Speaker. That, it seems to me, is putting a responsibility on the Speaker that he should not have to carry. It seems to me that every newspaper in this province should be given a copy of Hansard without any discretion at all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The clerk tells me that they all do receive it.

Mr. Oliver: Oh, that is fine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If there are any which are omitted, I am sure it will be included if the hon. member gives the Speaker the name.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have been familiar with that particular matter for the last 3 or 4 years, and I would like to assure the hon. member for Grey South that every newspaper in the province received a copy of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: I might add that I will be very glad to follow the procedure of my hon. predecessor in office. However, if some new weekly newspaper should come into existence, especially in the riding of the hon. member, I will be very glad to look after it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question on that? Would this statement which has just been made apply also to, for example, trade union newspapers, co-operative newspapers and that type of publication in the province?

Mr. Downer: Mr. Speaker, I can answer that. If the trade union people should ask for a copy of Hansard to be sent to their particular journal, that copy would be sent, as it has been sent, over the years.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, because that controversial matter, which has been the subject of debate for years, has gone through so easily, I am emboldened to make this motion, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that the standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes:

1, On agriculture; 2, on conservation; 3, on education; 4, on energy; 5, on game and fish; 6, on government commissions; 7, on health; 8, on highway safety; 9, on labour; 10, on lands and forests; 11, on legal bills; 12, on mining; 13, on municipal law; 14, on printing; 15, on private bills; 16, on privileges and elections; 17, on public accounts; 18, on standing orders; 19, on travel and publicity.

Which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as shall be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

In moving this motion, I should like to say a few things about it. The committees have been enlarged by the addition of one on energy, but I should like to say something about this motion which is an important part of creating the machinery by which the Legislature will function.

Now, because of that I think on this motion we are given the opportunity of saying something about the organization of government and of this Legislature and the concern we all have in its improvement.

Today I shall table, or cause to be tabled, the report of the committee established by order-in-council, 1920, June 12, 1958, to inquire into the administration and executive problems of the government and to examine into the relationship of boards and commissions with the government and the Legislature. Each hon. member will be given a copy of that report. The report itself is not lengthy. It does not deal with a host of matters which might obscure the importance of the principles with which the report deals. It is worthy of very great consideration.

I have on behalf of the government, the House and the people extended to the chairman and the members of this committee the thanks of all of us.

In returning to this motion, may I refer to the hon. members under date of May 15, 1958, exhibit A to the committee's report on page 87 of the same. I wrote to Mr. Walter Gordon, the chairman of the committee, who I may say has been an adviser of this government for many years in relation to governmental organization and is presently being consulted by the government in relation to some of these matters.

I wrote a letter to him which I refer to the hon. members of the House and also the order-in-council, exhibit B, which constitutes the reference to the committee. In one paragraph of my letter I said:

It is, of course, paramount that government of the people, for the people and by the people should be preserved. On the other hand, democratic government in these days cannot be deprived of the benefits and the efficiencies which come from good business methods. This, I think, is the genesis of such boards and commissions.

In availing itself of these methods, government should not create the means by which the free principles upon which governments exist should be undermined.

In other words, the problem is to preserve democratic government while not depriving it of benefits and efficiencies which go with good business methods.

In my judgment this is one of the very great problems which government of the people elsewhere—not only here—is going to be faced with in these days when the world is growing smaller and when governments in the plain order of things are going to be more concerned with business and economics.

It is something to which this Legislature should give very objective consideration, and the presenting of this motion to the House, which has been read, is one of the first opportunities of making reference to the matter.

It is a problem to which a solution cannot be found in one stroke of the pen. The solution will come from consideration and experience over time.

As is well known, I have felt that our parliamentary system was subject to a good deal of betterment. Perhaps one of the faults that has grown up in the parliamentary system is the concentration of power in the hands of the executive with too little opportunity of expression on the part of the membership of Parliament itself.

Now, I am not stating anything new. I have stated that on very many occasions in this House.

I believe, as I have in the past, that one of the logical ways to remedy this situation is by the development of committee work, which is the subject matter of this motion. Committee work which has some guidance, of course, from the cabinet and from the Legislature of Parliament, in itself can be of the utmost value.

This is the middle course between the extreme to which committee work goes in the congressional system. The development of committees, however, is something about which we can learn from the congressional system. With that in mind, over the last 10 years as head of the government, I have sponsored the development of the committee system.

I think I can say without contradiction that over the last 10 years the committee system has developed here on a basis which is not common to very many other Parliaments or Legislatures. Our standing committees have grown from 11 to 19. In that period of time we have an unprecedented number of select committees, 19, I believe, of which 8 have sat for more than one session. Select committees in this Legislature have changed from being the extraordinary to being the ordinary thing.

May I perhaps be permitted to say that His Honour's address yesterday indicated no contradiction of that fact.

A committee is composed of individuals. Its judgments are by no means infallible; the same holds true for the judgments of all of us.

The committee, however, does stimulate thinking. It is a means by which the views of many can be brought forward for consideration. The recommendations are seldom adopted in toto, and such will always be the case. Very often they provide the basis upon which policies, understood by the members and understood by the people, can be evolved.

I can give numerous examples of that, but I will give two:

The creation of Metropolitan Toronto, as the hon. members who were in the House at the time will recollect, was evolved after the most intensive committee work. I think I can say without contradiction that this great piece of legislation—which I, by no means, say is the last word—has nevertheless worked in a way which was hardly thought possible at that time.

That is also true of hospital insurance—one of the great problems that has been faced by the people of this province and this Parliament.

As a matter of fact, hospital insurance was discussed in several sessions by a committee of this Legislature. Hon. members will recall that this matter was considered as something which was earth-shattering and difficult, and was to cause all sorts of problems. But as a matter of fact it has gone off in a way which has been unbelievably easy—that is, from the standpoint of those who have no knowledge of the work that was put into the legislation.

This brings me to the organization of the House itself. With the growth of committee work, the work of the individual hon. member has become very much more onerous and very much more important. At the time of the constitution of the Gordon committee, one of the very valid points raised in debate in this House on all sides was the fact that all committees were important, and yet because of the nature and extent of their work, it was quite impossible for hon. members to give the desirable attention to committee work.

The result was inevitable. Some of the committee work became perfunctory and therefore was self-defeated. Hon. members of this House have faced that on numerous occasions.

The Gordon report recommended a reduction in the size of the committees, which of course has its good points and its bad points. One of the advantages of a large committee is that it takes in a much broader scope, and helps to develop the viewpoint of the individual member. Not only that, but it makes the viewpoints of the individual members available to the House on a very much broader scale.

I must admit that I am loath to sacrifice this. It might be better to have larger committees and take more time, and this is a viewpoint to which, at this time, I am strongly inclined.

I may say that, in making these remarks to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House, I do not do so in any dogmatic sense. I am trying to find the ways and means of improving the parliamentary system and making it work.

A good deal of consideration has been given to the breaking of the session into two parts, a portion being in the fall and the other portion in the winter or spring, after the fashion of our sister province of Quebec. This has the advantage of providing an intermission.

I have looked into that situation and I have had it looked into very carefully. Such things as private bills are taken care of in the pre-Christmas session. In aggregate, however, I point out that the length of sitting is not appreciably greater than our own. In considering this question, if we were going to do that, it has become apparent that about a year's notice should be given of such things, because of notices particularly in relation to private bills.

Moreover, without certain changes, the splitting of the session into two parts or even more does not meet our problem as I have mentioned.

What I am about to propose by no means precludes the splitting of the session, which I think has some very good points, as I have expressed here before. I think, however, it is necessary to do more than that. As a matter of fact, the problem is not the multiplicity of meetings of the Legislature, it is I think the organization and the methods by which we do business.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, at this session of the Legislature—and I put this forward for the thought of the hon. members—that we should have certain days which would be devoted exclusively to committee work, and that the Legislature itself—the assembly as such—should not meet on those days.

Separate committees could meet in the morning, in the afternoon and perhaps in the evening. Committees of course would meet in the mornings in which the Legislature would be in session, but we would avoid overlapping and avoid the problem of a number of committee meetings of importance being convened at the same time, and accordingly depriving hon. members who have interest in all of them from attending one or more of these important meetings.

It would provide considerably more leisure in committee work. This would be an innovation which never before has been attempted in this Legislature as far as I know, except in one instance. This was a select committee sitting while, I think, the Legislature was in recess for a few hours. It would avoid reducing the membership of the committees. This proposal would require a moderate extension of the term during which the Legislature would meet at this session, but I do not think it would be an unreasonable extension.

Very many examples can be given. For instance, most hon. members here have a very deep interest in game and fish conservation and the work of the game and fish committee. Such a method would enable the deliberate consideration of the problems of this committee and the receiving of deputations without some of the disabilities we have had in the past. For instance, hon. members have had to skimp that work—or so it appeared—when those who had come here on deputations from great distances were perhaps pressed and hurried in making their representation.

In relation to committee work on commissions and boards, I suggest that consideration of the work of some of these boards should be referred to other committees than that on government commissions.

For instance, the board dealing with agriculture could, I think, very easily be considered by the committee on agriculture.

It will be noted, for instance, that there is to be—as proposed in the resolution if adopted by this House—a new committee on energy. This committee might very well consider the work, for example, of those emanations of government which deal with energy, such as the hydro-electric power commission, the fuel board and other matters of that sort, which would reduce the work of the committee on commissions very appreciably.

Also I am most anxious that the hon. members of this House should have an insight into the fiscal problem of our province. Nothing is more important. Sometimes people think that a government, and perhaps a provincial government, has a bottomless barrel from which money can be withdrawn for every conceivable need. At this time, when there are new hon. members on both the government and Opposition sides I want to emphasize—and I know I do it with the approval of some of the hon. members of the Opposition—there is no such bottomless barrel. It simply does not exist.

We are a young country. We have a host of things to do, so many in fact that we have to place them in priority. Some such as education are positive musts; others have nothing like that priority but are nevertheless important. Still others are things we would all like to do if we had the money, but which in very many cases we have to do without. We by no means can do everything, and we have to be selective and careful in what we attempt.

I was quite interested the other day in a speech made by the governor of the Bank of Canada in Winnipeg, where he said that Canadians were living beyond their means. Well, perhaps those are the things we might very well look at and consider.

Mr. Speaker, I refer the House to the Gordon report, with reference to treasury board procedures. I would say that references have been made to the Gordon committee being akin to a Hoover commission, or something of the sort.

Sometimes we are inclined to use these references in a broad way. Of course, the Gordon committee has the elements of a Hoover commission. But I should say it does not have the great disability that the recommendations are obscured by a great mass of detail which, I think sometimes, detracts from a report.

I have come to the conclusion that, generally speaking, the reform of methods comes better from the governmental organization itself rather than by importing others who will tell us what to do.

I have had some experience with those things, and would say that it is difficult for somebody on the outside to come in and, in a few months, tell the government what to do. There are a host of problems in connection with government that really can be assessed only by an open-minded point of view on the part of government and hon. members of the Legislature.

Therefore the Gordon report, in my opinion, has many of the advantages of the Hoover report, with few of the disabilities that are attached to such a lengthy report. The Gordon report is a very concise, good statement, and the recommendations themselves take up, I think, very much less than half of the volume and the balance transmittals and exhibits which were filed with the board itself.

With reference to the treasury board proceedings, we have experienced in the last 15 years an enormous growth in provincial responsibilities. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has referred to a budget presentation I made in this House 16 years ago—in 1944. He, no doubt, will be giving the lecture to his hon. members and his supporters on the excellency of that statement.

I would ask the hon. members to look at the budgetary statements of 1944 and compare them with the statements filed in this House last year, in 1959—15 years later—and see the enormous growth of government responsibilities, a trend common to the governments in all democratic countries. As a matter of fact as we go ahead, it is not going to be any less, and history will show us that it is going to be more.

I was going to read—it would be out of order for me to refer to His Honour's remarks yesterday—but hon. members can read them, and can see what I mean.

The treasury board system here has been developed from our own experience. When I became treasurer 15 years ago, the treasury consisted, as my hon. friends opposite know, of my great old friend, Dr. Chester Walters, and one or two others. The system has now, of course, expanded. The Financial Administration Act of 1955 really gave statutory recognition of procedures which we had developed. At that time, and in fact, before and afterwards we had the advice of Mr. Walter Gordon, who was the chairman of the committee to which I referred.

This goes back a number of years. He collaborated with us in the drawing of The Financial Administration Act of 1955. Since that time the treasury board has assumed very important functions, and reference to it is made in this report.

I propose that we should call the public accounts committee—which in the past has always been regarded as the Opposition committee—and that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and the officials give the hon. members a detailed explanation of our procedures and what we have in mind in connection with the fiscal control required in this province.

I should say that we—and I use this in an all-encompassing way, covering all of the hon. members of this House—are constantly looking for ways and means to better government efficiency and to control government expenditure.

With so great an expansion of government business as we have experienced in the last 15 years—and I am satisfied it will be projected forward into the next 40 years, the balance of this century—inefficiencies are bound to creep in unless we have the ways and means of checking them before they develop appreciably. I can assure hon. members that, in the expansion of most governments and business, this is a problem.

Quite aside from this feature are, of course, the general policies which our people should follow. We have to take some hard looks at the opportunities this province and this country have, assess our strength and our means. Then we must go about the things we have to do, being prepared in a newly developing country to tighten our belts where we have to. If we and our people understand our objectives and problems, then we can all work together toward the common objective for a greater province and a greater country.

As Canadians, I think it is our responsibility to keep our sights high in this country, and in this world. We comprise half a continent with a population of less than 18 million. I think we have to look forward to a very greatly expanded country and a greater population. We have had astronomical growth in this province in the last 15 years. Despite all of the projections of economists, we crossed the 6 million mark this year instead of the 4.5 million mark that was projected some 20 years ago. I think the province is going to do better than that. It has to do better than that.

On the other hand, in so doing it is going to involve sacrifices. We have to determine the ways and means by which we are going to do these things. Some of them we are simply going to be unable to do. Common sense tells us that. We have to have a good look at credit, and I think that a committee is a great place to look at credit, because in an expanding province, such as ours, we have to have credit if we are going to go ahead.

Credit is one of the prime necessities of development.

These are very serious problems to which we should address ourselves and the Canadian people should address themselves. It is a prime responsibility of this Legislature. What I am suggesting I think lays the groundwork for continuing scrutiny and assessment.

With these comments which, of course, are only a preliminary to the discussions which I hope and know will take place throughout this session and succeeding sessions, I move this motion which is necessary for the organization of Parliament, and which I think, in the light of what I have said, assumes greater importance.

It seemed to me that, in proposing this motion, which has to do with the constitution of the organization of this House to do the job which lies ahead, that I should inform the House of some of the results of deliberations we have had over a period of time. I think that what I have proposed should greatly facilitate the work of this House and assist the hon. members. But I repeat that I do not put these proposals forward in any dogmatic sense.

However, the motion is specific, and it is in the general terms of the motion that has been presented in this House for very many years past.

The comments I make deal with the carrying out of the work of this House and its organization, and improving our committee methods and our committee system which has grown so greatly, and to make more effective, in a very real sense, the work and the contribution of every hon. member of this House, regardless of the side on which he sits.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members of the House will agree with much of what the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) has just said. But as I listened to his explanation several inquiries rose in my mind.

Firstly, I was interested in the hon. Prime Minister's reference to his letter dated April 15, or May 15, I believe, of 1958, wherein he created the particular Gordon committee to which substantial reference has been made this afternoon. The hon. Prime Minister made reference to that letter in quite some detail, but I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that likewise included in that same letter was this specific suggestion, and I quote from the letter signed by the hon. Prime Minister:

I quite realize that this is a very large subject but it is one of the very greatest importance. After the committee has concluded its deliberations, and made its report and recommendations, my feeling is that it would be well to submit the matter to a committee of the House representative of all parties.

Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is that the very essence of the Gordon report is its fundamental concern for ministerial responsibility, financial accountability, organizational function, and appeal.

As I hear the hon. Prime Minister make his explanation this afternoon, he suggests that this particular report become the subject of debate in the House during this session and ensuing sessions.

In specific terms he will suggest that the public accounts be called during this particular session. But there is no suggestion that the public accounts committee will be that continuing financial committee of which Mr. Gordon spoke. I hope that the public accounts committee will be the financial committee that will sit between sessions and continuously. The motion certainly makes no suggestion of that.

Then, too, it does seem to me that the motion, as presented, lacks the initiative that was given in the explanation of the hon. Prime Minister. In other words, the motion that we have before us is nothing more than a routine motion that we have had in previous sessions.

The hon. Prime Minister has made an elaborate explanation, a very worthwhile explanation in many respects. But I suggest that the motion will not be implemented in the manner which has been suggested by the hon. Prime Minister unless that motion is amended specifically to assure, firstly, that the public accounts will be a continuing committee of financial accountability; and secondly, that a specific committee be added to the list of 19 specific committees outlined to us this afternoon, as the committee designed and intended to do the very job that the hon. Prime Minister suggested in his letter dated May 15, a specific committee of this House to study this particular report. There is not one of the 19 committees which is going to do the job.

I am very much concerned that what we have here is a very fine and excellent, but platitudinous, reference to what is intended to be accomplished by this very report, and I am very much concerned that, if we pass the motion in its present form, we will add nothing to what we have had in previous years.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we must be concerned about two or three specific things. One is an assurance from the hon. Prime Minister that the public accounts committee will in fact be a continuing committee and not merely a committee that will sit during this session of the Legislature as a standing committee; second, that a specific committee, designated as a new committee to study the significance of the Gordon report, be added to the 19 suggested committees. Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, we should have some assurance that the explanations that were given today, and the intentions that were outlined, will be incorporated in some fashion in this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, those are the observations I would make at this particular time, and I think that on this particular occasion you will probably permit some leeway, unlike the normal strict procedure that should pertain on other occasions. I say this because we are into an area of very large scope.

So at this time I would simply move an amendment to the motion of the hon. Prime Minister, seconded by the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), that the report of the committee on organization of government in Ontario be submitted to a committee of this House, representative of all parties; and, two, that the public accounts committee, which has been designated as one of the 19 standing committees, be instead a committee that will continue to operate in between sessions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to present this formally—and I do not have it written out—I would move, seconded by Mr. Oliver:

That the report of the committee on organization of government in Ontario be submitted to a committee of this House, representative of all parties; and, secondly, that the public accounts committee be designated as a permanent committee.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I make a few general remarks in connection with what the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) has said, and with the motion moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). I would say at the outset that we will support the motion moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I find myself in a generally agreeable mood this afternoon.

In the first place, I think the basic principle that the hon. Prime Minister advanced with regard to parliamentary reform is a very important one. I think if a Parliament is going to meet the needs and the problems of each age, then it is inevitable that a Parliament must evolve, because those needs and problems are changing from year to year and decade to decade. Therefore it seems to me that the Gordon committee has provided us with an opportunity to make this kind of basic assessment.

Now my understanding of the procedure, when the Gordon committee was established, was that they, in effect, would chart the course. It would not necessarily be a course from which we must not deviate, but they would map it out.

I agreed with this very completely because it seemed to me, as was suggested at one stage or another in our discussions a year ago, that although we might have a standing committee of the Legislature, and we might have a select committee of the Legislature, inevitably political considerations would enter unduly in the initial stages. By throwing the problem in the first instance to men of the wealth of administrative experience and general knowledge of government departments, like Dr. MacIntosh and Mr. Magone, along with Mr. Gordon, they were enabled to map the course out in a detached academic study.

Having done that, it seems to me that the hon. Prime Minister was on sound ground in the first instance when he suggested that their proposals would come back for our consideration. The amendment made by the hon. leader of the Opposition that this House should now have an opportunity to study and to decide, in light of our experience and our knowledge of the problems across this province, how they should be applied, seems to me to be an intelligent approach to it.

The second point that I want to make, with reference to the second portion of his amendment, is with regard to the public accounts committee.

I will not go into detail this afternoon, because it would not be in order. But it seems to me that developments in connection with many of the agencies of the government, as well as the government itself, have taken place because there was not an opportunity for that careful scrutiny of the administration and financial procedure of this government.

It seems to me also that the public accounts committee, meeting on a regular basis instead of not meeting at all—as has been the case for quite a number of years—is one way to avoid these practices which degenerate to a point of abuse.

Therefore we in this group will certainly support the amendment, and I hope that the hon. Prime Minister, on further reflection, will be willing to accept it.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a couple of questions before the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) replies? There are two points I want to deal with.

When the hon. Prime Minister got around to saying that he intended to refer this matter to the public accounts committee, he was dealing with the treasury board, and he said that the treasury board could well be asked to come before the public accounts committee and explain the financial set-up of the government and things like that.

Well, there are two things I want to say about that. In the first place, that would be a limited examination of the Gordon report. The Gordon report covered much more, as the hon. Prime Minister knows, than the financial implications of government. It covered such questions, as were pointed out, as ministerial responsibility and all the set-up of government, apart and aside from the financial aspect of the case.

So if the hon. Prime Minister intends only that the treasury board should come before the public accounts committee and allow themselves to be examined, insofar as the financial aspects are concerned, then I say he is missing the boat almost entirely. He is dealing with only one aspect of the problem dealt with by the Gordon report.

The other matter is this: The hon. Prime Minister mentions the public accounts committee. His suggestion, as I take it, is that this matter will be left with the public accounts committee during this session of the Legislature.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister is not safe in assuming that the public accounts committee will not be engaged in other work during the session of the Legislature. Consequently, if that were the case, they would not be able to give full emphasis to this particular problem which is, in itself, very large.

It will not be a question of one meeting or two meetings. It will be a question of constant meetings over a period of time. So I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that, in saying that he will leave this matter with the public accounts committee, he might well curtail the activities of the committee itself in the sphere for which it was created. I think the hon. Prime Minister will see the point in that.

Another point is this: I doubt personally the wisdom of employing a public accounts committee. I think we should follow the line suggested by the hon. Prime Minister in his letter, read by my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) and embodied by him in the resolution now before the House, and that at this time, when we are dealing with committees, there should be set up a committee representative of all hon. members of the Legislature who will sit in examination upon this report, apart entirely from the public accounts committee.

The other further point, of course, is that I believe one of the main recommendations of the Gordon committee was that there should be a continuing committee of some kind to examine into the affairs of government in this province, and that this committee, as set up, might well be that continuing committee.

I urge upon the hon. Prime Minister at this time to move away from his idea of referring this matter to the public accounts committee for the reasons that I have stated, and unquestionably there will be others that did not come to my mind.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the questions raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Grey South, may I say this: what I have said today has in no way derogated—I think that is the proper expression—from the terms of my letter to Mr. Gordon, to which I have referred.

Anything I have said here has been, as a matter of fact, really an addition. I point out to the hon. members these things:

First of all, the amendment—and the hon. members need not feel badly about this, because I am going to refer to this in a moment, and I think I will meet their point entirely—deals with standing committees which lapse at the end of the session. It is the traditional motion to get on with business. I do not think, sir, that this motion, as such, is in order, but I would suggest: Do not feel too badly about that, for this reason—and I give this undertaking to the House—I would like first of all to table the Gordon report. Many of the hon. members here have not seen it. I would like them to see the report.

I am of an open mind as to how this should be considered. It might be considered by a select committee of the House. I did make that reference, I think, in this House some two years ago, or certainly a year ago.

Now, subject to this, the hon. members of the committee—I think with justice—asked that they should not be called as witnesses before such a committee to elaborate upon their report. I think that is fair and reasonable, and should be understood. I do not think it is fair to bring Mr. Gordon and his members here to elaborate and explain things that they have produced in writing, and which is the subject matter for consideration by this House.

Mr. Speaker, I would say this: let the hon. members have the report, let us see what is recommended.

I am perfectly prepared that this report be considered. I am prepared to collaborate with the hon. leader of the Opposition as to how it might be considered. Should it be considered by this House in committee of the whole? I have some doubts about that, but I do not want to take away the rights of all hon. members to express their views about it.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): May I ask a question? What did the hon. Prime Minister have in mind when he dictated that reference to their report being submitted to committee?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I am just trying to explain that, if my hon. friend will listen to me. I am just trying to tell him that.

Mr. Nixon: He is a long time getting to it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend is impatient. May I point out that my own idea is that it should be referred to a select committee of this House. As to whether that is desirable or not, whether that is too restrictive or not, I will await a consultation with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

But I can assure him that there will be the most ample opportunity for the consideration of this report, first by this House as a whole, and secondly, I incline to the submission of the report to a select committee of this House.

Now, does that answer my hon. friend's question?

I am anxious that this should have the fullest consideration, and I would be very glad to consult with the hon. leader of the Opposition in relation to the form that that inquiry should take, an inquiry which in no way would restrict the hon. members of the House from commenting upon this report and its recommendations.

The other question raised by my hon. friend from Grey South is what form, if any, there should be in our conducting a running inquiry into the business of government.

That is a matter which arises from the report itself, and I think that is a matter which, of course, should be considered by the committee, or by the form of inquiry which we determine upon when this report is tabled. Whatever form of inquiry we determine upon in this House is a problem for the House itself and for the committee that we appoint.

My reference to the public accounts committee was entirely in addition to that. I was referring only to the standing committees of the House which are appointed, or which are outlined in this motion, and it was for the purpose of using that committee for, I think, a very worthwhile work during the session of this Legislature.

But that in no way takes away from the recommendations contained in the Gordon report. So I shall be very glad to give this undertaking that, with the passage of this routine motion, I shall immediately table the Gordon report. Then I shall consult with the hon. leader of the Opposition as to the best way of giving consideration to this report. I say this because, after all, it is the report actually to the hon. members of the House, and from the determination of the hon. members of the House will come action upon these recommendations.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that meets the requirements of my hon. friend's motion, which, I think at this time, he might withdraw and permit the routine motion to be passed. I give him the undertaking that I will sit with him and collaborate with him as to the methods of considering this report and the procedure that would arise out of the report.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to withdraw my motion on the specific understanding that the hon. Prime Minister has made and, secondly, I would want the assurance, Mr. Speaker, that by withdrawing this motion at this time I am not ruled out of order—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would agree with that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —that we cannot reach an agreement specifically as to how the Gordon committee should be studied by the House. Now, on that understanding, I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the amendment.

I would ask this, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to preclude any other hon. members of the House from speaking to this particular subject, and I hope that by virtue of my withdrawal they have not been precluded, and in the event that—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would agree with that. I may say, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are points in my hon. friend's amendment that are very well taken. I quite agree with him. I have no intention at all, in introducing this routine motion, in any way to take away from the things that he wants, and what has been said here would in no way preclude any of the hon. members from speaking or anything of the sort.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask a question? Would the hon. Prime Minister clear up one point with respect to the public accounts committee? Now, that has always been set up by the House in every session and, as he properly said, it has been considered as a sort of an instrument of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Nixon: It never actually organized itself and elected a chairman, unless some hon. member of the Opposition made what in effect amounted to a formal charge.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Nixon: And if he did not substantiate his charge, he was under some reflection of having been irresponsible, or something of that nature. I think that if this committee—yes, I think I understood the hon. Prime Minister correctly—would be organized and set up in the same way as all the other standing committees, and proceed with their work without anything of a sensational nature being required from an hon. member of the Opposition, and on his responsibility as an hon. member of the Opposition, then a great deal of good work could be done by that committee.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say my hon. friend is quite right. The public accounts committee has traditionally been counted as the method by which any hon. member of the House might make certain charges, or institute certain inquiries, which were done on his responsibility as an hon. member. I think my hon. friend will agree that there is a great deal of the carrying on of that principle.

I feel that the committee can be constituted without taking away from that. The committee can be constituted and it can perform many useful functions in giving to the hon. members of the House, regardless of what side they sit on, a picture of the problems which have to be met from a financial standpoint.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to pursue this matter of the public accounts committee for a moment or two.

As hon. members know, I am a new member in this House and hon. members may have to be patient in explaining procedure to me. I have been rather interested in the way this debate has developed.

It is rather difficult to appreciate the full significance of oral statements, and I am not quite sure that I absorbed all that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) said. But, as I understood his original statement, I took it that he envisaged that the public accounts committee, when called together during this session, would hear from officers of the treasury and other competent persons about the government's accounting procedures.

It has not been clear to me in the subsequent development of this debate whether it is also envisaged that the public accounts committee would inquire into the accounts—not into the procedures but into the actual contents of the accounts. It seems to me that that is a recognized function of public accounts committees in most British parliamentary assemblies, and that it would be a useful function for the public accounts committee of this Legislature, quite apart from any inquiries that might be made into the Gordon report or any new procedures that may be adopted.

It seems to me that this instrument which already exists could be used, while we are considering the Gordon report, to carry on useful work in considering the way the government has spent the money that the Legislature approved the previous year.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if it is possible to have any assurance from the hon. Prime Minister that, when the public accounts committee is constituted, that function is envisaged as well as the other one to which I understood him to refer in his original statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. member for Woodbine that what he has stated is really the purpose of the public accounts committee. Actually speaking, if the hon. member will understand this, we cannot have a committee that can go over the vast ramifications of government, otherwise we would never complete our work.

The purpose of the public accounts committee since the beginning of time has been to allow hon. members to inquire into specific things about which they—as the hon. member for Brant said—“make charges.” As a matter of fact, that has been the case in the past.

I would not go so far as to say, perhaps, that it should be confined only to a matter of making specific charges. Actually the inquiries should be made on the basis of some responsibility, otherwise it would be impossible to conduct the affairs of government. That is about the situation.

However, I say to the hon. member that it is not my point at all in using the public accounts committee as a means of giving to the hon. members of the House current explanations, not only current explanations but explanations that lie behind the machinery of the government and the changes that might be envisaged, or betterments that might be made. In no way was it my intention to take away from the rights of hon. members which have always existed in this assembly. I can give the hon. member that assurance.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, it has been the practice, in years gone by, to include the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. leader of our group (Mr. MacDonald) automatically on each committee—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will come to that motion in a moment. I hope the hon. member for Oshawa will be on it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the motion the hon. member referred to.

Arising out of that motion which has been passed—that is, these sessional committees—I move, seconded by Mr. Allan, that a select committee of 13 members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient dispatch a list of members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House, such committee to be composed of Mr. Whitney, chairman; Messrs. Carruthers, Cowling, Edwards (Perth), Gordon, Guindon, Hall, Haskett, Herbert, Lawrence, Rollins, Simonett and Thomas, and that a quorum of the said committee consist of 4 persons.

I think the hon. member for Oshawa has been a member of that committee, and I would assure the hon. members it is not a controversial committee at all. It is a committee in which the members sit together and they try, as best they can, to determine the wishes of hon. members of the House to sit on these various committees. We have always had a good deal of latitude in trying to work things out to the satisfaction of the hon. members.

Mr. Thomas: On past occasions, I think the committee has recognized that the hon. leader of the Opposition and also the hon. leader of our group would automatically be on every committee. I wonder with the new set-up in the new Legislature whether the hon. Prime Minister would agree to that being continued?

Hon. Mr. Frost: On that striking committee the representatives are the representatives actually of the various parties. I do not know that the leaders of the groups would want to be on. I do not think that that is required.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not make myself quite clear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member for Oshawa means on committees of the House?

Mr. Thomas: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I see, yes. By all means.

Mr. Thomas: Thank you.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I have a request and I would hope the hon. Prime Minister will grant it. I believe we have one man on that committee, Mr. Gordon, the hon. member for Brantford. May I add a suggestion, and would it be permitted, that I add another name to the committee some time before its first meeting?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes. The meeting will be held shortly. I would suggest that the amendment be made to have 14 members on the committee—we will now add the name of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), and that will complete it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion in which I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition to join with me, and I think that I can count on the fact that he will give me support in this motion, which is for the appointment of a chairman of the committee of the whole House.

I propose to move, seconded by the hon. leader of the Opposition, in a moment or two, that Mr. D. H. Morrow, the hon. member for the electoral district of Ottawa West, should occupy that honoured position. In making brief reference to it, I might say that Mr. Morrow came into this House in 1948. Perhaps I might refer—I know that this might interest some of the hon. members of this House who are now growing altogether too few—that he succeeded a great old member of this House, Mr. “Holly” Acres.

The hon. member for Ottawa West at that time came in and represented the electoral district of Carleton for which Mr. Acres had been the distinguished representative for a great number of years. Mr. Acres was a very refreshing personality of this House, who was very well known to some of us here, and the now hon. member for Ottawa West, in the redistribution, had the difficult problem of following Mr. Acres who was really a personality of personalities.

The hon. member, whose name I shall propose, has served in his country; in World War II; has been prominent in his community; has represented his riding, now Ottawa West, since 1948; and I am sure he will make a worthy and impressive chairman of the committee of the whole House, and Deputy Speaker, during this coming session.

I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Wintermeyer, that Mr. Morrow, the hon. member for the electoral district of Ottawa West, be appointed as chairman of the committee of the whole House for the present session.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that this is a motion in which I, and I hope all the hon. members of the Opposition, join most wholeheartedly. I believe that the hon. member for Ottawa West has served for a long while in this House, and more recently and certainly during my time, has prepared himself, I think, pre-eminently for this particular position.

I am, Mr. Speaker, delighted to support the hon. Prime Minister's motion and I am confident that the hon. member for Ottawa West will do an exemplary job during this session, and I would hope maybe on some other occasions in other sessions.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, some years ago I used to catch in the outfield on the softball team for which the hon. member for Ottawa West was the captain at Queen's. I could do nothing but concur in this, and now I shall try to catch his flies again.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Hon. members of the House, before taking the chair, I would like to take this opportunity of expressing my sincere thanks to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), and indeed to all the hon. members of the House for the honour which they have bestowed upon me today in this appointment as chairman of the committee of the whole House.

I do hope that I shall merit the confidence that they have placed in me, and I hasten to assure the hon. members that I shall endeavour to carry out my responsibilities and duties to the best of my ability and in a fair and impartial manner.

I simply ask for the full co-operation of the hon. members of the House at all times, so that the duties of this office may be carried out with the same dignity and dispatch so well evidenced by my hon. predecessors. Once again my humble thanks and sincere appreciation for this appointment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I move the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I beg to make another motion, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, also in relation to the organization of the House. The motion is that on Friday next and each succeeding Friday for the present session, the House will meet at 2 of the clock in the afternoon and that Rule No. 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it might apply to this motion.

Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion, I may say that very probably this motion will be temporary. I think that last session we gained a good deal by meeting on certain mornings on Friday, instead of meeting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. However, this will suit the purpose for this Friday in any event.

I would say that much of what we might be able to do as regards meeting on Friday mornings instead of the afternoons would come about by what we are able to effect by the suggestion I made in relation to not sitting and adjourning the assembly on certain days, until the day after, in order to permit committee meetings. I think that this would be a very great improvement. But, at the moment, I make this motion which will take care of this Friday.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I rise to inform the House concerning the action which has been taken in connection with alleged offences under sections 322 and 369 of the criminal code relating to trading stamps. Section 322 defines trading stamps and section 369 creates the offence of issuing and dealing in trading stamps.

In the public mind the term "trading stamp" is all-inclusive, but when it comes to a prosecution for an offence in relation to trading stamps it is necessary to give careful attention to the definition section.

For a short time prior to 1905 when trading stamps first appeared, in both Ontario and Quebec, there was provincial legislation empowering municipalities to pass by-laws regulating them, and at that time no attempt was made to define or to narrow the meaning of what were commonly called trading stamps. Jurisdictional disputes arose and the Parliament of Canada in its wisdom saw fit in 1905 to pass the predecessor sections of the criminal code which I have referred to.

The original code remained practically unchanged until the revision of the criminal code of Canada which took place in 1953-1954. In the previous defining section, trading stamps were defined as including—and I quote these words particularly—"besides trading stamps commonly so called," then defined as any form of cash receipt, receipt, coupon, premium ticket or other device, and so forth, as appears in the present code. But in the revision the words "besides trading stamps commonly so called" were omitted.

I must say that in the Parliamentary record, particularly of the Senate committee dealing with the question, the inference, if not the actual assertion, was made that there was no intention to change the meaning. However, in my view, and it is supported by my legal advisers, the omission of these words may have, perhaps unintentionally, narrowed the definition.

A number of prosecutions have taken place in various provinces, including Ontario, but in all cases that we have been able to obtain information about, the decisions turned on isolated and technical aspects which, if proved, would clearly constitute offences but still would not deal with the overall principles of issuing trading stamps.

For example, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan recently there have been convictions there because of failure to show on the stamps the place of redemption and failure to redeem a trading stamp.

A case in London, Ontario, was to somewhat the same effect.

In another instance the charge was based on the fact that certain of the valuable premiums were not kept in stock at the supermarket and according to the scheme, when the customer brought in the required number of stamps he would have to wait for two or three weeks as these premiums "were specially made."

There was an appeal there by the Crown and, on that appeal to the county court from the magistrate's decision, the county court held that, in view of this, the scheme did not provide for redemption upon demand and was illegal. And that case I believe is now before the provincial court of appeal.

Then the latest case, on which the hon. members probably read the decision in yesterday's newspapers, is one which came before a magistrate's court in Winnipeg a few days ago and which involved the redemption of a single stamp.

I would point out that my department has been watching these cases throughout the whole of Canada because decisions anywhere in Canada under the criminal code of course are of application throughout the country. The magistrate, in dismissing the case, is reported as pointing out, according to the newspaper report:

It is perhaps to be regretted that by agreement between the Crown and defence counsel the magistrate was limited to considering the specific case of the detective's purchase of the tin of sardines.

And then he is reported as saying further, and I am quoting from the newspaper report:

In view of this agreement I make no finding on the broader issue as to whether or not under the whole scheme it could be held that under the circumstances the stamps would not be redeemed upon demand at any time as required by the criminal code.

In other words, he points out again in that particular case that there was a very restricted situation involved.

In order that this important question may get before our courts in a comprehensive manner, I have retained Mr. Charles Dubin, QC, the very well-known counsel, with a view to placing before the court this broader issue concerning the legality of such a scheme as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, at this time I beg to table the report of the committee on organization of government in Ontario, and this will be immediately distributed among hon. members of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) clarify one matter that has just been drawn to my attention? Is it his intention to present a stated case to a competent court or is he going to encourage a private prosecution?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think the way the hon. leader of the Opposition puts it—if we can get it into that particular position—is a very good way of putting it. Really it will be in the nature of a stated case, but it must be based on certain specific evidence in order that the charge can be properly laid and get before the court in the proper manner. But it is my thought that it should really have the same effect as a stated case.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question that I would like to direct to you.

Yesterday it was my understanding that 3 hon. members submitted resolutions, and today they were advised that the resolutions are unacceptable. Now my understanding is that the determination of whether or not a certain resolution will or will not be acceptable is your discretionary power. I would ask you firstly whether you have exercised this power or simply taken the advice of the clerk of the House, and secondly, if you did exercise the power and refused the particular resolutions, I would ask for your reasons.

Mr. Speaker: The 3 notices of motion in question are obviously out of order in that they directly call for an expenditure of public monies, and could therefore only be moved by a Minister of the Crown, upon the recommendation of the Lieutenant-Governor. This is under Rule 112.

When a notice of motion obviously breaches a rule of the House, it is simply not included in the notices of motion or on the order paper. If the hon. member proposing the notice does not agree, he may appeal to the Speaker—see Lewis, page 35, and May 16th edition, page 404, where it is stated a notice wholly out of order may be withheld from publication of a notice paper, or if the irregularity be not extreme the notice is printed and reserved for future consideration.

Rule 47 applies to these latter cases when the irregularity is not extreme and the notice has been printed.

There is no application, however, in this instance. It applies where sufficient doubt has existed to allow the notice to be placed on the order paper. But when the Speaker himself is of the opinion that the notice is out of order, or at least is in doubt, he then calls this to the attention of the House before putting the question.

However, as mentioned, I ruled them out of order.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, it is always helpful if we can bow to your ruling with good grace. I do not know that I can on this occasion, particularly as it affects one resolution, dealing with water, standing in my name—or the one that was supposed to stand in my name—on the order paper.

Now I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that a resolution calling upon the government to inaugurate a scheme to transport water as a public utility to the people of this province is not a resolution that falls upon the government for an expenditure of sums of money. It is a resolution which, if carried into effect, would be transferred to the water resources commission of the province, and they, in turn, would carry it out as a public utility, and those who benefited from the scheme would pay the costs of the scheme.

Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. Prime Minister, wherein does this offend against the rule that says there shall not be a motion introduced by an Opposition member that calls for the expenditure of public monies?

Hon. Mr. Frost: All I know of the motion is what the hon. member has said. I have never read it.

Mr. Speaker: I have been very lax with the hon. member. I think he knows that the ruling of the Speaker—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Lax? Lax?

Mr. Oliver: I do not want anybody to be lax with me.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Speaker has made a ruling with regard to the motion which cannot be debated. However, the hon. member can appeal the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to read these 3 resolutions?

The first resolution, as proposed by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) states as follows: That the government undertake a province-wide programme of low-cost and low-rental housing.

The second one was proposed by the hon. member for Bracondale (Mr. Gould) and reads as follows: That the provincial government extend the principle of road subsidies to the construction of subways.

The third one was proposed by the hon. member for Grey South which reads as follows: The Ontario government shall assist in the water transmission and distribution line as a public utility to serve Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize that I may be charged with being out of order, but we did survey some of the resolutions of previous years. Instances can be found repeatedly, where resolutions that required the expenditure of money, in far more direct fashion than these 3 resolutions require the expenditure of money, were permitted.

With deference I would suggest to you that the ruling which you have given us this afternoon refers to bills and not to motions as such, and I would refer you to page 41 of the Parliamentary procedure in Ontario which specifically says that no bill proposing to appropriate any public funds to impose a tax, or to authorize any expenditure of money, can be before the House, until the purpose of the bill has been submitted to and approved by the House in the form of a motion of which proper—

Hon. W. J. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): A different issue altogether.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Pardon?

An hon. member: Who woke the hon. Minister up?

Hon. Mr. Dunlop: Never mind the smart remarks.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that your reference is to bills. You can understand the essence back of this thing. Certainly the Opposition cannot dominate government, cannot require government to spend money, cannot pass legislation, but certainly it should have the right to propose resolutions which suggest to the government that expenditures be made and in their discretion to subsequently implement the motion by legislation or bill.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this type of ruling is going to persist, unlike the procedure that has been followed in this House during my stay at least, we are going to be put in the position where no resolution is feasible because every resolution encounters in some fashion the expenditure of some money.

Mr. Oliver: Cannot even print it on the order papers.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before you comment, may I ask you a question? I do not want to enter into the debate on this so much as to get clarification, because, quite frankly, we have some resolutions that conceivably are going to run afoul of your ruling.

Is your ruling based on the fact that the resolution did not have those words in there that the government give consideration to, so that even if the House agrees to it then the government goes ahead and gives consideration or does not do it?

The reason I ask it is, about 3 years ago—and I am sure you will recall this, Mr. Speaker—I moved a resolution in this House that the government give consideration to the establishment of a student loan fund. Not only was it in order but it was amended by the government and it was adopted by the government; and a year later they put it into effect.

Now, is your ruling based on the fact that there was not included in those resolutions the words that presumably resolve the difficulty—that the Opposition cannot commit the government to spending, namely, “that the government give consideration to”? Is that the point that you are drawing attention to, or is it that all of these things are out of order no matter how you word them?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I make this suggestion? I suggest that you defer a further ruling on this matter until tomorrow or Friday, or until some time that is agreeable, so that this point could be looked into. For myself, I am always taking the part of the Opposition, always trying to help them out and arbitrate things, and so on. Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully suggest that this be done? It would give an opportunity of looking into the matter.

I may say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I have no knowledge of these resolutions. As a matter of fact I have never seen them. Being a very broadminded fellow I might want to vote for them.

I would say, however, that one of the things that would deter me from voting for them is that I noticed in today's press that I have been accused—I suppose after collaboration with the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor—of stealing the Opposition's platform. I would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that nothing was further from my mind.

However, I think, we might postpone a ruling on this matter to let us see what the facts are. I am myself quite unfamiliar with it, as I guess other hon. members of the House are, and it would give us an opportunity of looking at it and regularizing matters. I may say that I do not want, and I know you, Mr. Speaker, would not want, to create a method by which perhaps an hon. member might be deprived of placing some matter on the order paper, and be left perhaps without the ordinary recourse which would apply to an ordinary member of this House. I suggest that if the matter is postponed for a day or so, no ill will come of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, the orders of the day amount to nothing, and I therefore move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.00 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the township of Toronto praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to accept conveyances, etc., of sewage works not involving capital cost to the corporation, maintenance costs, etc., to be levied on the rateable property defined.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT, 1952

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act, 1952."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LAKES AND RIVERS IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Lakes and Rivers Improvement Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE WILD RICE HARVESTING ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide for the harvesting of wild rice."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister explain the terms of the bill briefly?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I think, Mr. Speaker, it might be advisable if we were to give a complete explanation on second reading of the bill, if the hon. member does not mind. If he insists, I will be glad to explain it now.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is it not customary to make some brief explanation of the significance of the bill on the occasion of the first reading?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Not usually on first reading.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I believe the hon. member for Kenora has asked exactly for that on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: It is departing from the usual practice.

The purpose of the bill, Mr. Speaker, is to provide authority to The Department of Lands and Forests to issue licences for the harvesting of wild rice on Crown land. At the present time there is no control over such activity, and we think that it is desirable that such control should exist in certain parts of the province. In certain parts of the province the harvesting is what you might call a small industry, and we are of the opinion that it should be done under some control from The Department of Lands and Forests.

THE FORESTRY ACT, 1952

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Forestry Act, 1952."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might explain, for the benefit of the House, that this is a bill designed to encourage the multi-purpose management for forestry purposes of lands and conservation authorities in municipalities.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE EXPENSES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Administration of Justice Expenses Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might say that these bills will go to the legal bills committee in the normal way.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE BILLS OF SALE AND CHATTEL MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgages Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE BULK SALES ACT, 1959

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Bulk Sales Act, 1959."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CERTIFICATION OF TITLES ACT, 1958

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Certification of Titles Act, 1958."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The County Courts Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney-General give a brief explanation of this Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, yes, I would be glad to do that. Normally of course on second reading I would give full information.

This is simply an amendment to permit by regulation the safekeeping, inspection and destruction of books, documents and papers of Crown attorneys. It would permit, for example, after a certain period of time, if the regulation so provided, that perhaps there would be some microfilming of records, and then the records themselves could be destroyed and safekept after so many years of holding them and that sort of thing.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Sopha: My question to the hon. Attorney-General was in reference to The County Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: May I finish this one and I will come back to it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Sudbury was asking about The County Judges Act. The County Judges Act has not yet been introduced, which is probably causing the confusion. I did not introduce that, yet.

Mr. Sopha: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it is The County Courts Act. There are so many of them that I got confused.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, regarding The County Courts Act, to which leave was given to introduce a few minutes ago, that Act simply provides for the clerk's fees for attendance to be the sum of $10.

THE CROWN WITNESSES ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Crown Witnesses Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to address a question if I may to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts), notice of which question I have already given to you.

There appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning an announcement which reads this way:

SCHOOL SITES GRANT FORMULA ANNOUNCED

The formula under which Ontario government grants will be made towards the cost of new school sites was announced last night by Education Minister Roberts. Payments will be governed by either the actual cost of the school site or the provincial equalized assessment of the property purchase by a school board. The grants will be half of whichever figure is smaller, Mr. Roberts said.

The assistance will be given to local school boards and approved expenditures for sites which title was acquired on or after January 1, 1959. Regulations for payment of the grants have been drawn up and details will be sent shortly to the local school authorities.

Premier Frost had announced previously that the government would aid school boards in property purchases—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must ask the question of the hon. Minister as submitted to the Speaker's office.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have to lay the foundation. I was about to ask the hon. Minister if this quotation is correct, and I wanted to make sure that the hon. Minister was aware of the quotation, and I thought I had to lay the foundation for it first. It would be unfair to ask the hon. Minister if the quotation was correct unless he knew about it.

—Mention of the policy was included in the Throne Speech read Tuesday at the opening session of the first session of the Twenty-sixth Legislature.

And I wanted to ask the hon. Minister if this statement does correctly reflect the system that will be carried on.

In other words, is the policy statement of the hon. Minister of Education as contained in this news clipping, and carried in the Globe and Mail of this morning, accurate? If this is in fact so, does it mean that the government is only going to grant one-half of the cost of the school site or one-half of the assessed value of the school site, whichever is lower?

And then the final part of this question: If this is correct, will the hon. Minister reconsider before finalizing the regulation, because what in fact is going to be achieved by this?

Using not really the purchase price of these sites, it is going to be the use of the equalized assessment factor, which certainly in the metropolitan area is one-third of the actual cost of the site. And in the effort to help those suburban areas, such as my own township—the township of North York—all that is going to be paid is going to be one-half of one-third of the actual cost, which is a very minute figure and which will help the local boards to a very minimum degree.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Is that a speech or a question?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member for York Centre, which falls in 3 parts—the answer to part one is “yes”, the report in the Globe and Mail does accurately reflect the policy on school site grants.

And to the second part of his question, the answer also is “yes”, it does mean that the government will pay one-half of the lesser of the actual cost or the equalized assessed value.

And in reference to the third part of his question, the whole matter was given a great deal of consideration before these regulations were passed, and I cannot see that it requires any further consideration.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

Public accounts for the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959.

Report of the provincial auditor of Ontario, 1958-1959.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before the orders of the day, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister whether he will consider before finalizing the standing committees to agree to the formation of standing committees of this House on the subjects of public welfare, reform institutions and highways?

Mr. Speaker, I may be out of order if I tried to go into an explanation of this, but I think it would be of some value.

It occurred to me and to several hon. members of my party, after yesterday's session, that there is substantial good to be accomplished by the extension of the 18 standing committees to include, for example, a committee on highways, and reform institutions and public welfare.

This is separate, of course, from our discussion with respect to the Gordon committee, but I think an honest effort on our part to extend the number of committees into various important facets of provincial government at this time. It would be our intention to use committee organization and committee facilities to gain a further and better understanding of government.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this would be a valuable assist in that direction.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I may say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that of course any hon. member may move, if he gets a seconder, a motion providing for the formation of a committee of the House.

The genesis of some of the present committees we have was in that form. I very well remember, many years ago—and some of the hon. members opposite might remember—that the then member for Middlesex South, Mr. McGeachy, had a great interest in education, and it was at his instance that the committee on education was formed. As a matter of fact, the committee was not active for a number of years afterwards, but it was formed in that fashion.

The committee on government commissions was sponsored here by Mr. Jolliffe, the then member for York South. My recollection is that at that time I was leader of the House, or was in fact leading the House, and I think I accepted the suggestion at that time. Though I am not sure, perhaps Mr. Jolliffe moved the motion, for reasons that I think were very good.

I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would be glad to consider his suggestion. That would add 3 more committees to the 19 we already have. I think it would then provide, generally speaking, a committee—at least one committee—for every department of the government and perhaps more than that, because it would provide then for 22 committees.

I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that there is one problem we are looking at right at the present time. I want to discuss it with him afterwards, or before the matter comes before the House again, in an informal way. This problem is to try to find the place that we can work in the 19 committees that we already have. It may be that the present 19 committees might take in, and probably do take in, some of the work that the hon. leader of the Opposition has mentioned.

I cannot give the figures accurately, but last year, I think there were 60 committee meetings of this House. That is a very large number of committee meetings to be held in the period of some 40-odd days of the sittings of the House.

And that in itself caused a good deal of difficulty, because the hon. leader of the Opposition knows that, last year and in other years, there were often several committees meeting on the same day. We are trying to eliminate that and streamline things so that will not occur. I do not want to just, off the cuff as it were, agree to the addition of more committees which might make it more difficult to streamline the work of the House that we were mentioning yesterday.

I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would be very glad to discuss that with him. I will have some details and a schedule worked out in the course of a day or two, covering committee meetings with a viewpoint of avoiding—wherever possible or wherever it is necessary—two or more committees sitting at the same time.

Of course, there are some committees perhaps that could carry on, perhaps printing and things of that sort which are more or less routine. But to have, for instance, the meetings of the committee on game and fish sitting on the same day as, for instance, government commissions, is quite unfair to the hon. members of the House. I think it defeats the purposes we are trying to achieve.

I will be very glad to look at that matter, and I will discuss it with him and we can give a report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order, consideration of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. W. G. Davis (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave to move, seconded by Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew), that a humble address be presented to the Honourable J. Keiller Mackay, DSO, VD, QC, LL.D., Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour has addressed to us.

First, Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate you on your appointment as the presiding officer of this House. This is a well deserved honour, to you, and to the people of Essex South who on 6 successive occasions have chosen you as their representative in this assembly.

As party whip, as Deputy Speaker and as chairman of the committee of the whole House, you have acquired a wealth of experience. You have always been fair, courteous and efficient in relations with your colleagues.

I know you will maintain the high traditions established by your distinguished predecessors, and I am sure that my hon. colleagues all join with me in good wishes for you in occupying one of the most honourable posts linked with our parliamentary system.

I should, I think, add a word or two in respect of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer). It was not my privilege to sit in this House while he occupied the Speaker's chair. Nonetheless I have heard so many golden opinions as to the many fine qualities of mind and heart possessed, Mr. Speaker, by your hon. predecessor, that I think I can say he is bound to be recorded as one of the most popular and distinguished presiding officers in the long history of this assembly.

And I would like to add that, as he moves along to another high post in the field of public service, I am sure that our good wishes go with him, as well as the good wishes of the people of Dufferin-Simcoe who on 7 successive occasions, have elected him with decisive majorities.

During the past summer, Mr. Speaker, Canada was greatly honoured by a visit of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II and Her Majesty's distinguished husband, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to visit a number of our centres in the province. The warmth of Her Majesty's welcome amply testified to the love and respect of Her Majesty's subjects and their continued devotion to the monarchy as an essential component of our democratic system.

Of special interest to the people of Ontario was the formal opening by Her Majesty of the St. Lawrence deep waterway.

The St. Lawrence system, coupled with the Hydro developments, as a part of the overall plan, will stand as one of the world's finest and most important engineering achievements.

Her Majesty's itinerary included a visit to the great city of Chicago, gateway to western America. The wildly enthusiastic welcome afforded to the Royal couple by our American friends testifies to the enduring friendship between the two leading nations of the English-speaking world.

My hope, Mr. Speaker, is that these Royal visits may become of more frequent occurrence. We are all aware that Her Majesty is presently expecting the birth of her third child. I am sure that our thoughts and our prayers go out to Her Majesty at this time.

It is inevitable that the passage of time brings about changes in the personnel of this assembly, and this is obvious as we enter this first session of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of Ontario. We look about us and realize that some faces familiar to many hon. members, Mr. Speaker, are no longer with us.

It is nearly a year ago—February 13, 1959, to be exact—that Col. Thomas L. Kennedy passed away after a life of service and a career marked with many outstanding honours. For nearly 40 years, with one brief break, "Tom" Kennedy served his native riding of Peel as member of this Legislature. He made an outstanding contribution as Minister of Agriculture and his grasp of the many facets of government was displayed during his brief term as Prime Minister.

In these times of change and shifts of population, it is interesting to recall that Tom Kennedy lived the whole of his life in Dixie, on one of Ontario's finest farms. And recalling his love of the land, it must have been a source of grief to him to see so much of Ontario's finest land absorbed in the current process of urban expansion. It was inevitable that his own acres were bound to be diverted into suburban housing sites.

Only two months after Tom Kennedy passed away, his devoted wife was borne to her grave.

It is indeed saddening to think that the latter days of this devoted couple were marked by the death of their daughter and her husband in a very untimely accident.

To the surviving members of the family the sympathy of this House is extended in full measure.

I am deeply conscious of the honour extended to me by the electors of the riding of Peel, in selecting me as successor to one of the outstanding figures of our province. His service to King and Country in time of war, his long record of outstanding accomplishments in the interests of agriculture, and his devotion to Peel and its people are things we will always remember. His sterling example will be my guide as I endeavour to follow in his footsteps.

I should like also to refer to the retirement of the former member for Ottawa South (Mr. Dunbar.) George Harrison Dunbar entered this assembly in 1937, serving variously as Minister of Reform Institutions, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Provincial Secretary and Registrar.

He brought to the government a vast experience in business, in finance and in the municipal field. His wide knowledge, his courage and his ready wit added spice to the proceedings of this House. His increasing years have never dimmed his interest in Ontario nor lowered his ideals of public service.

Our good wishes I am sure are extended to George Dunbar as he enters what we hope will be many years of leisure and retirement.

Applause.

Mr. Davis: May I also say a word, Mr. Speaker, respecting our good friend the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop). Eight years ago, after a long and distinguished career as an outstanding teacher and as head of the extension department of the University of Toronto, our hon. friend entered the cabinet as Minister of Education.

All over this continent, education is posing one of the heaviest problems and one of the greatest responsibilities of any government. Population increases, the demand for new schools and universities along with a teacher shortage and coupled with increasing costs—all these and other factors demand vision and administrative ability of the highest order.

Here in Ontario the enormous school building programme, the expansion of our universities, the maintenance of an adequate teaching staff, demonstrate the energy and the ability in evidence at the head of the department.

It is with extreme regret, I am sure, that recent days have seen the retirement of the hon. Minister from Eglinton from the post which he has occupied with such distinction. My hope is that his health will presently be fully restored and that he will enjoy the period of comparative leisure and retirement which he has now entered; and that we shall continue to have his advice and counsel in this chamber for many years to come.

Applause.

Mr. Davis: May I further congratulate the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts) on his promotion to the education portfolio. The hon. Minister has enjoyed a broad experience as a private member of of the assembly. He has also served as a member of the government as Minister without Portfolio. He has served on many important committees and rendered outstanding service on the select committee on toll roads. Latterly he has served as a member of the important Ontario water resources commission.

With his native ability and with this broad background of experience, I am sure that he will enjoy a distinguished career as head of one of our most important departments of government, and I am equally sure that he enjoys the good wishes of all of us.

Education presents many factors, many problems and many challenges. All over America in this field the story is the same. The problems which beset our educationists here in Ontario are identical with the problems in our other provinces and in the United States. May all success attend the efforts of the hon. Minister of Education as he guides the destinies of his most important department.

May I also extend congratulations to the hon. Minister from Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) on his recent appointment as Minister of Energy Resources, a new and extremely important department of government. As Hydro vice-chairman and Minister without Portfolio, and previously as a private member of this assembly, the hon. Minister has already achieved an impressive record.

His ability on the platform, his enormous capacity for hard work, his mastery of any subject with which he is concerned—all these factors will enable him to make an increasing contribution to the political life of this great province.

I am sure that it is a source of pride and satisfaction to the father of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to see his son achieving success in the field of public service. Leopold Macaulay, QC, served with distinction as a member of the Conservative administration of 30 years ago, and it is good to see the political tradition maintained in this very able family.

It is a matter of regret that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons) is unable to be with us today. I understand that he is still suffering from a serious and painful illness, but that he is making satisfactory progress. May I express the hope that he may presently be able to rejoin our ranks.

Mr. Speaker, the amazing progress we are experiencing in Ontario is not the result of chance or accident. In part it is based upon our favourable geographical location. In part it is based upon our vast variety of natural resources. Many of these resources, especially in the north, await development which will be advanced by the vigorous policies of this administration in adding to the existing network of mining and development roads.

We have a skilled, progressive and energetic people who, within the framework of our free enterprise system, have established an unexcelled standard of living. As we have a government headed by an honourable gentleman of vision, energy, drive and experience who has an unbounded faith in Ontario, a faith exceeded only by his affection for this province and his unceasing efforts in the field of public service.

I would say that while the factors of geography resources and people are important, Mr. Speaker, the main reason for our success is the stable government which this province has enjoyed under the present administration.

There are other provinces, Mr. Speaker, in this Dominion whose geographic locations are comparable to our own, and who have natural resources on a par with our own. Yet these other areas have not achieved the same degree of progress which this province has achieved. As one large daily newspaper in Montreal, in our sister province of Quebec, put it several months ago, the success of Ontario can largely be contributed to its government. Not only the people of this province, Mr. Speaker, have the utmost confidence in this government but also the people from outside this province.

It is an honour to be associated as a young and private member of this assembly with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) who will be recorded as one of Ontario's greatest Prime Ministers.

The government of this province is in safe hands with our present hon. Prime Minister at the helm, surrounded as he is with an able and industrious cabinet.

World War II ended some 14 years ago. Our population then was 4 million. Today, we have passed the 6 million mark. Assuming that present trends continue we shall reach the 7 million mark by 1966.

There has been a spectacular increase in the birth rate. Our death rate has declined, thanks in part to our high standard of living.

Again, nearly one-half of Canada's immigrants choose Ontario as their home. They view Ontario as a land of opportunity. They bring to us their national cultures and their special skills. Many of them have seen the effects of socialism in their native countries; accordingly they shun the socialist paradise presented in one of our sister provinces further west. They settle in good old Ontario.

They know, I feel sure, that this province is notably without religious or racial bias. They know also, or they soon learn, that Ontario under this government has perhaps the most far-reaching measures for preventing and rectifying social injustice of any jurisdiction in the world.

We welcome our new Canadians. We are deeply sensible of the compliment they pay us in choosing Ontario as their home.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, a personal word to the very excellent work being done by the department of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips) in making these new Canadians feel at home. They have achieved great success in recent months in helping the new Canadians, their clubs and organizations, in becoming part of our society.

Annual capital investment in Ontario has increased from $700 million in 1945 to about $3 billion in 1959.

Since 1945, some 500,000 new dwelling units have been completed.

Hydro's generating capacity has increased from 1.23 million kilowatts in 1945 to about 5.7 million kilowatts as of today.

The gross value of pulp and paper production was $118 million in 1945; today it is about $453 million.

During the same period mineral production has risen from $799 million to about $850 million.

The net bed capacity of our public general hospitals has doubled.

More than 90 per cent. of our people are covered by our hospital insurance plan which became effective on January 1, 1959.

There is an increasing awareness of the plight of those who, temporarily or permanently, require state assistance; this is evidenced by the expenditure of $70 million during the current fiscal year by The Department of Public Welfare.

These and many other highlights point to the fantastic growth and development which we are experiencing in Ontario. And let me add this. Such developments do not occur where there is not good government. In this House and on the public platform the hon. Prime Minister has reiterated his determination to give Ontario good government, and the evidence of his sincerity is all about us.

Let us look for a moment at the great Hydro enterprise.

Under another government of some years ago, the then Legislature sat and suffered for 9 long hours while the then Attorney-General and Hydro commissioner bewailed Ontario's purchase of unwanted and unneeded power. The hon. member who launched this marathon subsequently found snug harbour in the Canadian Senate, but the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) will remember the incident.

Again, the Premier of that day, in the most uncompromising terms, wrote the Prime Minister of Canada, refusing in the most emphatic manner to commit Ontario to any part of the St. Lawrence development.

It was not long before the government headed by Premier Drew was faced with the most critical power shortage this province has ever experienced.

I scarcely need detail the vigorous measures taken by the administration to meet what was a most alarming situation.

Three huge power developments were established on the Ottawa River; another at Stewartville on the Madawaska.

The Niagara redevelopment will be recorded in history as one of the great engineering achievements of the century.

Then we have some 13 or 14 developments or extensions in the north, necessary there to foster the development of our resources of forest and mine and to serve a growing agricultural community and a huge tourist business.

The St. Lawrence development, now completed, develops 2.2 million horsepower, one-half of which flows into the Hydro system.

Steam plants have been added, notably at Windsor, at Toronto and at the Lakehead. The Toronto plant is a relatively new one but already undergoing a huge expansion.

Of particular interest to the riding which I represent, and indeed to the whole of this part of Ontario, is the Lakeview steam-electric plant, now under construction. This plant is designed to produce 2.413 million horsepower and will be the largest plant of its type in the whole Commonwealth, if not the world. Its output will exceed the total output of the St. Lawrence development and the first of two 402,000 horsepower units is scheduled for service in 1961.

Projected also is a thermal-electric plant to be located in the vicinity of Pickering.

In the near future, Canada's first nuclear-power plant will come into operation near Chalk River, a project handled jointly by the atomic energy commission of Canada, the Canadian General Electric Company, and Ontario Hydro.

This pilot plant is the forerunner of a major thermal-electric development to be installed in Bruce county near Kincardine.

The question arises as to why, with Ontario's major water powers now practically under development, and why, with Ontario's abundance of uranium, does not Hydro turn entirely to nuclear power instead of to steam-electric plants. The fact is, of course, that the matter is one of dollars and cents. The use of nuclear power on an economic basis is still some years in the future.

Our steam-electric plants, Mr. Speaker, require the use of immense quantities of coal. It is difficult for Maritime coal to compete with the short-haul American coal in the Ontario market. I would hope, however, that Hydro, the Maritime coal interests, the shippers and the governments immediately concerned will explore the possibilities of using Canadian coal in the maximum degree. This would be, indeed, a most realistic help to our sister provinces in the east.

During the past year the work of frequency conversion was brought to completion. It took courage to launch this vast project. It required vision, it required money. The project had to be launched when it was launched, otherwise the difficulties and costs might well have been insuperable.

Today, Ontario is no longer a 25-cycle island in a 60-cycle continent. One most important benefit is that in time of war or emergency, integration of the Hydro network with United States power sources can be readily achieved—a comforting and reassuring thought on both sides of the border.

Here, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my admiration for the work of our Hydro employees during recent weeks. Many of the people of my riding and adjacent areas found themselves without Hydro power as a result of successive and severe ice storms. Hydro workers were brought in from all over Ontario. They worked long hours under the most trying conditions. They went without sleep, without most of the ordinary comforts of life. They accomplished a magnificent job for the benefit of thousands of our people.

It is indeed difficult for me to find words in which to express my admiration for the way in which these devoted men came to the rescue of a very large section of our Ontario community.

It was recently my privilege to be associated with the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), and my colleague, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Hall) in the formal opening of a section of Highway No. 401, from highway No. 10 to highway No. 25, traversing parts of both Peel and Halton counties. This necessary link is an important component of highway No. 401 which, when completed in the early future, will stand as one of the great engineering and construction projects in Ontario's history.

I must also congratulate the hon. Minister of Highways in pressing through the widening of the Queen Elizabeth Way from 4 to 6 lanes in the Toronto-Hamilton section. The revision of this thruway will be an important factor in relieving the heavy overload of traffic which has been in evidence for a long period.

The widening is itself a major project, but the revision has other important aspects. It includes the elimination of traffic lights, the installation of overhead crossings, and the construction of a large mileage of service roads to carry local traffic. The whole programme is of very special interest and importance to the riding I have the honour to represent.

The reconstruction of the Queen Elizabeth Way and the construction of such thruways as highway No. 401, desirable and important as they are, also bring additional local and municipal problems. They always imply attraction for industry, so much of which is now dependent on rubber-tired transportation.

They also bring about new housing development with their problems connected with all sorts of local services. They tend to stress the growing interdependence of the provincial and the municipal fields, and this, I suggest, is well recognized by the administration as we view the growth of the provincial grant-in-aid.

Of special importance to the people of the county I represent, I might mention the widening of highway No. 10, from highway No. 5 to the Lakeshore Road, another substantial reconstruction project which is of great importance to this province.

It is with a real sense of gratification that we can now look forward to the early completion of Ontario's share of the trans-Canada highway, likewise of highway No. 401—the trans-Ontario route—destined to be one of the greatest of this continent's thruways. It is difficult to realize that within two or three years motorists will be able to travel in a single day from Windsor to the Quebec border, by-passing all the main population centres, and without encountering a single traffic light or a level crossing.

With the Burlington Bay Skyway completed and in successful operation, The Department of Highways is now proceeding to eliminate the final bottleneck on the Queen Elizabeth Way. I refer to the high-level bridge to carry the heavy Queen Elizabeth Way traffic over the Welland Canal near St. Catharines.

This is but one of many important bridge projects. The people of Sault Ste. Marie will rejoice at the construction of a bridge across the St. Marys River, a joint project of the state of Michigan and the province of Ontario. This will replace a ferry service which has served the "two Soo's" for many decades, but which, of course, has long since become inadequate.

Another international bridge is projected at Queenston, while other projects are underway in northwestern Ontario in the Rainy Lake area. These projects all make for easier communication across the border, and will also make for a healthy expansion of our booming tourist industry.

Again, we have entered into a most important agreement with the government of Canada for the construction of important access roads in northern Ontario.

The problems of The Department of Highways are manifold. In the south we have a dense and increasing population, and extremely heavy traffic load and we also suffer from a lack of planning in earlier years when no one could possibly foresee today's developments. In the north we have vast distances, often a very difficult terrain, and a lighter traffic volume and a relatively sparse population.

Keeping the various factors in reasonable balance poses many problems. However, these problems today are recognized and they are being met. They are being solved on a long-range basis, and I am sure the hon. Minister of Highways and his staff are doing their job in a manner which deserves our highest commendation, and as I said to the hon. Minister at the time of the opening of the new branch of highway No. 401, I can think of very few single factors which have contributed more to the growth of our province and the very fine system of highways we are fortunate enough to have.

The growth of our educational facilities is one of the most outstanding features of our economy.

Just about one and one-third million pupils are enrolled in our schools—more young folks than there are people in the whole Toronto metropolitan area.

As has been intimated, the building programmes of our school boards must be continued. For 1960, it appears that 450 new elementary school projects will be completed to provide for 75,000 pupils at an estimated cost of $53 million.

In addition, 50 major secondary school projects will be completed to provide for 20,000 pupils at a cost of $30 million.

Here we have an increase over the 1959 programme; yet for some years past each calendar day has seen at least one major school building project brought to completion.

Our huge population growth makes this programme a necessary one. The situation in some degree obtains all across Canada. It is one of the greatest problems facing us. In fact, in some of the larger and growing centres of our southern neighbour, the United States, the problem is far more acute than it is with us.

It is most encouraging to note, Mr. Speaker, that in September, 1959, the enrolment in the teachers' colleges reached an all-time high:

5,951 enrolments, an increase of 1,263 over 1958.

The recently opened teachers' college in New Toronto has an enrolment of 809. This college is well located to serve the part of the province which I represent in this House.

There is a full enrolment at the new teachers' colleges in eastern Toronto, at Hamilton and at London. Once again, northern Ontario is not being neglected as a teachers' college is planned to open at Port Arthur during the current year.

It speaks much for the expansion of our economy when it is stated that a substantial extension is planned for the Hamilton teachers' college, a new institution opened only a year or two ago.

To serve western Ontario, a teachers' college is planned for the Windsor area while others will be established on the basis of current studies and as need arises.

It will be reassuring to our local school authorities to know that provincial education grants will be subject to considerable expansion, as indeed they must be.

These grants, $130 million in 1958—$147 million in 1959—have increased to an estimated $167 million for this current year, and this does not include the vastly increased aid to universities.

At the provincial level, our education expenditures are now in excess of $200 million a year—a long way from the $12 million or $13 million a year paid under a former government.

Our 6 technical institutions have long since proved their value as a component of our educational system. They are located at Hamilton, Toronto, Windsor, Ottawa, Haileybury and the Lakehead. They have a special value to students desiring technical training, who, for some reason, may not elect to acquire university experience.

The Ryerson Institute, here in Toronto, with its 2,500 students is an outstanding example of the wonderful work being accomplished by these intermediate institutions of learning. Originally housed in the old and decrepit normal school buildings, the plant, under a federal-provincial plan, was enlarged to train young men and women leaving Canada's armed forces. The enlargements consisted of the then federal government typical "temporary" construction—a makeshift at the best and an eyesore at the worst.

Now the old buildings are giving place to thoroughly modern structures, entirely adapted to the purpose for which they are intended.

Our students are the beneficiaries of several methods of aids as they aspire to higher education. We have the Ontario and the federal-provincial bursaries—outright awards on the two bases of financial need and good academic standing.

Then we have the Ontario aid loans and also the Ontario scholarships. Certainly the latter should be great inducement to grade 13 students to accomplish their best. These scholarships, worth $400 each, go to students obtaining an average of 80 per cent. or higher in 8 subjects and who propose to enter a university, a teachers' college or a technical school. When I was a boy, $400 was a lot of money and it still is to most of us. My hope is that these various plans will help to reduce the casualty lists so often evident when the grade 13 examination results appear.

Our hon. friends of the Opposition, who are inclined to harp on the subject of higher education, might take a look at what has been accomplished and what is moving well out of the planning state. Our older universities—Toronto, Western, Queen's, McMaster and Ottawa—are long since established as outstanding centres of learning.

More recently, university status has been achieved by Assumption College, Carleton College and Waterloo College. Then we have the University of Sudbury, a denominational institution.

The University of Toronto is on the march with one of the biggest expansion programmes in the history of this nation. Plans also are well advanced for the establishment of York University to be located in the general Toronto area.

Considering this great programme of expansion, and also the enormous annual increase in provincial aid, I would find it difficult to be alarmed about the facilities of higher education in this province.

The Royal College of Dental Surgeons is now in new and adequate quarters, toward the cost of which the province made substantial contribution.

I should mention in passing the plans of the administration to erect a completely new psychiatric hospital where ample teaching facilities will be provided for instruction in psychiatry.

It will be recalled that last year the Queen Elizabeth II scholarship fund was established to commemorate the 1959 visit of Her Majesty. The fund is administered by university heads who will, later in the year, interview applicants for benefits under this fund, and arrange for the distribution of all or part of the $25,000 accrued interest.

It is natural that the hon. Minister and the officials of the department have had to give high priority in their thinking to 4 factors in their programme: more pupils, more classrooms, more teachers, and more money. The rapid growth of our population naturally demands more and more facilities.

But now as the expansion of facilities has become, shall I say, somewhat routine, and though it remains of vast importance, may I express the hope that the hon. Minister of Education and his officials will also stress the academic aspect of their whole problem. The curriculum in all educational institutions will require close study and revision. Perhaps more can be done to inculcate study habits in the elementary and secondary schools. Perhaps we should take more cognizance of what is being done in other jurisdictions.

For example, as many hon. members heard recently, a young Russian hockey player in a radio interview said that study of languages was given great prominence in the Russian schools, starting in the elementary grades. He remarked—to my astonishment, I might say—that about 50 per cent. of Russian children were learning English. I think it is becoming increasingly obvious to us that the cold war may very well develop into an economic war before too long, and much as we abhor the communist system we have to live alongside communist nations and we cannot afford to ignore what they are doing.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, if we wish to maintain the high standard of living which we have achieved in this province, we must not price ourselves out of world markets. New products, new techniques, new methods of manufacture, improved methods in agriculture must be found, and I feel that it is through the intensification of education on all levels, and in particular the technical and scientific fields, that the solution lies.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of vital importance, and one which can be achieved without increase in costs. Much is said, Mr. Speaker, of the great natural resources of this province, with which I heartily concur. However, I feel that the greatest natural resource with which this province is blessed is the brain power of its young people, and I can think of no better way of describing it.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the fullest development of this, our most important resource, is essential if this province is to achieve its true destiny.

The education of retarded children—and unhappily there are many of them—poses many special problems, not the least of which is the problem of finance. The Peel county council has passed a resolution with which I have a very real sympathy, and which suggests that the training and education of these children be assumed as a responsibility of The Department of Education.

The acquirement of the Thistle town annex of the Hospital for Sick Children as a centre for the care, training and treatment of emotionally disturbed children is a commendable step. However, a very limited number of children can be accommodated at this point.

Permanent custodial care is the only method of looking after many feeble-minded children, and a brief look at what has been accomplished in this field is not amiss.

One of the first acts of this administration was to build accommodation for 300 additional patients at Orillia; later two other units were added, one with 354 beds, another with 76 beds.

The LaSalle College building at Aurora was acquired and here 278 patients were cared for.

A little later a new 2,000-bed hospital and school was built at Smiths Falls.

Nearing completion is a new, 1,200-bed hospital at Cedar Springs, near Chatham.

Having additional bearing on this field are the projected hospitals to be located respectively in Huron, Grey and Perth counties.

During the 9-year life of the previous government, the only expansion of facilities for the care and training of the feeble-minded was construction of a frame structure at Orillia to hold 60 patients.

We shall doubtless hear more detail on this subject as the session proceeds.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a word in respect to the work being done by The Department of Reform Institutions, particularly in those establishments which are located in the area that I represent.

The hon. Minister (Mr. Wardrope) and his very competent staff deserve great credit for the policies which they are pursuing in the rehabilitation of young people who are serving time in these institutions, these training schools, as first offenders. From personal knowledge of the great work done by the staff of the training schools in the Brampton area, I would express the sincere hope that these forward-looking policies will be continued and improved.

In the riding of Peel, and indeed in most suburban areas, there is an extremely rapid residential development without the industrial and commercial development to make for a well balanced assessment.

In the field of education the growth-need factor which has a bearing on the grants is of assistance.

I should like, however, to suggest that consideration be given to special capital grants to aid, in these areas, the construction of public general hospitals. It is to the credit of this administration that it has long since adopted a policy of giving generous capital grants to aid in the construction and enlargement of our general hospitals. In one way or another special grants, such as rehabilitation grants, have helped solve our hospitals' financial problems.

The construction of new hospitals or the enlarging of existing ones is, however, a most pressing problem in our mushrooming suburban developments. Hence, I commend to the earnest consideration of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) some special measures to meet an emergent situation.

The southern part of the riding of Peel is an area which has a population which is increasing rapidly, and it is by no means unreasonable to expect an influx of several hundred thousand new residents in the foreseeable future.

I doubt that it would be wise to consider at this time any additional expansion of the Toronto metropolitan area. "Metro" is, I think, making sound progress. It has long since justified the measures which brought it about.

Yet there are areas adjacent to the Metro area which are having grave difficulty in financing essential services. I have already mentioned the need for more hospital accommodation, and have suggested that special aid might well be considered.

Such items as roads, streets, sidewalks, water supply and sewage disposal impose an almost insuperable burden where, as so often is the case, the residential assessment far outstrips the commercial and industrial assessment.

Here various departments and branches of our government are concerned: for example, The Department of Highways, The Department of Health, The Department of Planning and Development, and the Ontario water resources commission.

I do not propose to try to detail any specific remedy at this time. I would point out, however, that our population growth imposes great difficulties on many of our suburban municipalities and the scores of thousands of our people who make their homes in these new subdivisions. The whole problem is province-wide, most acute perhaps in the Toronto area, but nonetheless one that presents itself in the vicinities of Hamilton, Burlington, London, Windsor, and a score of other Ontario centres of population. I believe it to be worthy of the early and earnest consideration of the government.

It is an honour, Mr. Speaker, to me and to the people whom I represent to have this opportunity of moving the adoption of the address of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

To the hon. Prime Minister may I say this. On June 11, last, the people of Ontario, for the third time, expressed their confidence in his leadership.

In the general election of last year the impressive record of solid accomplishment compiled by him and his administration was laid before our people and they had no hesitation in saying: "Well done, and carry on."

This government, sir, is not bound to any class, creed, race or special interest. It is a people's government in every sense of the word.

May I express the sincere hope that the hon. Prime Minister will long be spared to continue his career of devoted service to the people of this, the greatest of Canada's provinces. As he has often said, sir: "Even greater progress lies ahead."

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Who is next?

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to me, and to the people of St. Andrew riding, to be associated with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) as the seconder of the motion for the adoption of the address graciously presented by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario (Mr. Mackay).

My hon. colleague from Peel is to be congratulated on his initial address to this House. He has dealt, and very ably, with many of the items which comprise an outstanding record as to the development of this province, including the most impressive contribution made by the administration headed, as the hon. member for Peel has stated, by one of Ontario's greatest Prime Ministers.

Applause.

Mr. Grossman: The hon member for Peel has the task of succeeding one of the most popular and outstanding figures ever to occupy a seat in this assembly. I concur entirely with his thoughtful and kind remarks respecting the late Thomas L. Kennedy. In past months the hand of death has fallen heavily on this family circle.

I join with the hon. member for Peel in expressing my sincere sympathy to the surviving members of the family, a sentiment in which I am sure all my hon. colleagues will join.

Will you accept, Mr. Speaker, my warm congratulations on your election as the presiding officer of this assembly. Here, the goodwill extended to you in 5 successive elections by the people of Essex South is echoed by your hon. colleagues in this House.

Your long experience in many phases of the work of this assembly gives you an excellent background which, with your many fine personal qualities, will enable you to preside over our deliberations with tact and efficiency. May I wish you all success and happiness in your new post.

I would fail in my duty if I neglected to say a word of appreciation on behalf of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) who presided with dignity and fairness over the proceedings of the last Legislature. I am sure the hon. member will be recorded as one of the most able and certainly one of the best loved Speakers in the long history of this assembly.

It is good to know that he is transferring to another sphere of public service. Here, I know his many fine qualities of mind and heart will enable him to make another great contribution to the life of Ontario. Our good wishes go with him in his new field of endeavour.

It was my privilege to sit in this assembly with one of the veterans of provincial politics, George H. Dunbar. I should like to associate myself with the kind remarks of the hon. member for Peel respecting the former Minister who, previous to the general election of last year, bowed out of the ranks of this House.

For 22 years George Dunbar added spice to the proceedings of this Legislature. Fearless, possessing a ready wit and the gift of repartee, George Dunbar is going to be missed by all of us who knew him best. He won distinction, first as a private member, later as the very competent head of a number of departments. May I wish many years of happy retirement and leisure to him and to his charming wife.

May I also join with my hon. colleague from Peel in wishing restored health and a long and happy period of relative leisure for the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop). It was, I am sure, a shock to all of us to know that ill health had afflicted the hon. Minister to the point where he felt it necessary to relinquish his post as Minister of Education.

The hon. Minister undertook the heavy duties of this important portfolio at an age when a great many of us begin to think about retirement. For 8 years he directed the affairs of his department with skill and with distinction. I sincerely hope that his health will be fully restored, and that he will continue to be able to give us the benefit of his vast experience in the field to which his life has been devoted.

My good wishes and congratulations are extended to my friend and colleague, the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts) on his appointment as Minister of Education. It has been my privilege to sit with the hon. Minister during several previous sessions of this assembly. His close attention to duty, his ability and energy, and the broad experience he has already enjoyed all speak well for his success in the new and important post which he has assumed. I am sure the good wishes of the hon. members of this House will accompany the hon. Minister of Education in his latest field of endeavours.

May I also congratulate the hon. Minister from Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) on his appointment as head of the newly constituted Department of Energy Resources.

As Minister without Portfolio, and as vice-chairman of the Hydro-electric power commission of Ontario, he has already won an honoured place among the hon. members of this assembly. His industry, his energy, his wholehearted devotion to the task in hand are apparent to all of us. He is bound to make a big contribution to the work of this assembly, and he has already compiled an outstanding record of unselfish public service. I join with my hon. friend, the member for Peel, in wishing him well in his new sphere.

Again, I join with my hon. friend from Peel in expressing the hope that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons) will shortly be with us again. I visited with the hon. member—and at that time he seemed to be improving a great deal. He has suffered in recent months a painful and distressing illness and is still in hospital.

The hon. members will rejoice with me in knowing that he is making satisfactory progress. His abounding good nature, his faith in the north and his affection for his native city have made him an outstanding representative of the great north country. We shall look forward with pleasure to his early return to his accustomed seat.

Again, I join with the hon. member for Peel in expressing what I feel sure are the sentiments of this House in respect of the visit last year of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, and Her Majesty's distinguished husband, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh.

It was a thrilling historical event when Her Majesty, along with the distinguished President of the United States, graciously presided at the opening of the St. Lawrence section of the deep waterway.

Coupled with the deep waterway project is the enormous Ontario-New York State hydro development. These two enterprises constitute one of the greatest engineering projects of the century. They are outstanding landmarks in co-operation. They show what can be accomplished by democratic governments working in harmony and with a common aim, designed to benefit untold millions of our people.

The progress of the Royal yacht Britannia through the St. Lawrence and through the Great Lakes and their connecting rivers was in the nature of a triumphal tour. My hope is that such visits may often be repeated.

Our good wishes and our prayers will attend Her Majesty at this time as the day of the arrival of Her Majesty's third child draws near.

Mr. Speaker, I am deeply appreciative of the honour in being chosen to second the adoption of the address presented to this House by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

This occasion is an honour to me and to the people of St. Andrew riding whom I represent in this House.

I have no doubt that, in extending to me this honour, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) had in mind the dozens of ethnic groups represented within the boundaries of St. Andrew.

I can assure the hon. Prime Minister that they will be appreciative and indeed grateful for this honour. I might say, too, in proportion to its size, St. Andrew has probably received the largest number of immigrants compared with any similar area in Canada.

It is only natural that immigrants at first are concerned as to our outlook, our pattern of culture and our politics.

The immigrant is subjected frequently to inconsiderate employers or potential employers who do not understand or who may not wish to understand his problems. These people have chosen Canada as their country—Ontario as their place of abode. They are happy to have here a government which does everything possible to assist and guide them. They are grateful for such guidance and assistance. They quickly become mindful of the guidance and protection afforded by our fair practices legislation.

Many people, of course, disparage the need for such legislation, but this I can attribute to an approach indicative of a lack of appreciation as to what has happened and what is happening in our community today.

I know that most newcomers are pleasantly surprised and happy that in this country—in this province—there is even such a declaration that all people are to be treated equally, with fairness, and are not to be discriminated against. Such a declaration by the government, in the preamble to the legislation and the legislation itself, gives them greater heart and courage to carry on in spite of the many hardships which are the natural lot of a newcomer.

I would like to quote from the Canadian labour reports of December, 1959. This pamphlet to which I refer is published in co-operation with the national committee on human rights of the Canadian Labour Congress:

Ontario, as usual, retained its forward look in 1959 on anti-discrimination legislation. Premier Frost appointed the 3 members and secretary of the anti-discrimination commission, and the commission as one of its first acts, issued two attractive booklets as part of its public education programme. Ontario is the only province to publish special educational materials on its anti-discrimination legislation.

Major anti-discrimination questions for 1960: When will the 4 have-not provinces (Quebec, Alberta, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland) enact provincial fair practices laws? When will British Columbia add a Fair Accommodation Practices Act to its FEP legislation?

I am glad to place on the record this endorsement of our legislation and actions in this field, especially as it comes from a strong labour organization.

Just here I should like to introduce another point. One of the hon. members opposite recently complained about being badgered by people for recommendations for employment. He objected to having to make such recommendations. Let me say this. He should spend some time in my riding of St. Andrew, where people look to their elected representative for advice, guidance and assistance as to practically every conceivable personal problem.

When my constituents come to me—and I am sure this applies to most hon. members of this House, certainly it would apply to the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) and the hon. member for Bracadale (Mr. Gould)—as I say, when they come to me in their search for employment, they do so mostly after they have become tired of being pushed around from pillar to post.

Sometimes they lack friends. Often their morale is at a low point. On occasion, indeed often, they are handicapped by the language barrier.

They come to me, I am glad to say, because they feel that they have in me a person who understands their problems, and who is prepared to give them a sympathetic hearing. They know I will attempt to help.

It might interest the hon. member opposite who complains of this chore that I not only recommend many to the Ontario government departments, but I also write reams of letters to private employers, and to other levels of government, federal and municipal, in my effort to help. I do not succeed in many instances, but it is not for lack of trying.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes my constituents have to be shown where the Parliament Buildings are located, and sometimes they have to be taken to show them where to submit an application for employment or welfare assistance. And sometimes I am glad to take them there myself.

I imagine that the hon. member who complains is beginning to find the constant ringing of the telephone, the knocking on his door on the part of many of his constituents, a bit bothersome—perhaps a hindrance—to the smooth operation of his law practice.

Nevertheless, this is what is expected of an elected representative.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): It must have gotten under his skin.

Mr. Grossman: If the elected representative feels that he is not prepared to carry out this part of his duties, then it is a matter which he alone must decide, and on which his constituents must be the final arbiters.

Certainly, as far as my constituency is concerned—and I think most hon. members of this House feel the same way—I am prepared to give my constituents as much personal attention as they require, regardless of the personal inconvenience or sacrifice which is involved.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the many organizations which serve the ethnic groups particularly, and the whole community generally. I am in frequent contact with many of them on problems which concern newcomers, and want publicly to state that they deserve the commendation of all the people of this province for the unselfish and devoted manner in which they carry on their work. Thousands of new Canadians have been helped, assisted and guided by these groups who make the path to integration much smoother.

I am proud of my riding. It is like dealing with a cross-section of the whole world. There are so many different ethnic groups that I hesitate to try to name them, as I would be certain to forget to mention one or two, something I should regret.

It is interesting to note that, at the time of the last general election, there were in St. Andrew about 3,000 fewer registered voters than in the 1955 election. This is in spite of the fact that the riding contains 5,000 or 6,000 more people—new Canadians mostly—who have not yet acquired the franchise.

In spite of the fact that there are so many different ethnic groups living together in the small area of St. Andrew, we all get along together very well, despite some minor aberrations from time to time.

I cite the recent swastika-painting nuisance as an example. While the Jewish community was disturbed, the German community was even more so. I am glad and proud to say that neither of these communities rushed into the headlines with hysterical statements and charges. Both the German and the Jewish communities calmly appraised the situation for what it was—the work of a few irresponsible hoodlums. It is to the credit of both of these groups that their leading organizations issued calm, dignified statements of condemnation of the stupid perpetrators, and there the matter was allowed to die—and die it did.

Yes, St. Andrew is a fine, interesting riding, and I am very proud to represent it in this House.

Here, I should like to commend the hon. Prime Minister and his administration for the opening of a new citizenship office to assist in the integration of new Canadians, or may I say, as the department does, “Canadians by choice.”

My information is that, in a period of 4 or 5 months, this branch of The Provincial Secretary's Department has handled thousands of inquiries and has assisted materially very many new citizens who have chosen Ontario as their home. I am sure that the humane outlook and the broad experience of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips), in this field, will be of great assistance to so many who, for a time, are bound to feel that they are strangers in a strange land. May every success attend the efforts of the hon. Minister and his capable staff.

The ethnic press is also doing an outstanding job in this respect. They, the ethnic, foreign-language publications, have been carrying on a fine educational and informational programme for their readers, second to none. We in this province owe a debt of gratitude to these publications, many of which, despite being marginal operators and fighting an uphill battle to survive, continue to serve the community through their columns by guiding their readers along the road of the "democratic way of life."

Hon. members will note that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, in the speech from the Throne, stated:

Our population, income, output and volume of consumer spending all increased considerably over the levels of the previous year. Despite the growth in our labour force, unemployment was substantially reduced. Production and living standards reached the highest level in the history of the province.

Mr. Speaker, it is no accident that this has happened in Ontario, where practically one-half of all immigrants settle. This is the answer to those who feel that immigration causes unemployment, lower wages, and so on. It is just the reverse. We help ourselves when we open our doors to immigrants. Immigration, in other words, is good for the health and wealth of our country.

In this respect may I at this time pay tribute to this government and to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for the humanitarian approach regarding World Refugee Year. The hon. Minister has shown a humaneness, worthy of his position, in his actions regarding refugees.

This seems an appropriate time, Mr. Speaker, to pay tribute to a very fine citizen who did so much for the newcomers in Toronto and Ontario.

I refer to the late Mr. Arturo Scotti whose widow is in the Speaker's Gallery today. Mr. Scotti, in his capacity as editor-in-chief of Canada's foremost Italian newspaper, the Corriere Canadese, gave the Italian community much leadership in the field of integration and education in our Canadian way of life. Mr. Scotti was a personal friend of mine with whom I was associated as a colleague on the board of directors of the International Institute of Metropolitan Toronto.

He was a very cultured, mild-mannered person, of very high principle, who was held in the highest respect and esteem by all who knew him. His widow and family have much to be proud of in the life work of a great gentleman. His untimely passing is a great loss, not only to the Italian community, but to Canada.

This year, Mr. Speaker, marks the bi-centenary of the Jewish people in Canada, that is 200 years since the first Jew settled here. I am sure the hon. Prime Minister will properly recognize this occasion at the appropriate time.

Recent months also marked an outstanding instance of private philanthropy on the part of a great Canadian of Jewish faith.

It will be recalled that back in 1934 the Conservative government of this province went down to defeat. The advent of the incoming government was marked by some of the most stupid, cruel, asinine and senseless acts ever to mar the pages of Ontario history.

Some 3,000 or more civil servants were fired because they were appointed by a Conservative government. Hundreds of them were war veterans. A Royal commissioner, the late Col. Hunter, was appointed finally to try to organize means of redress as to dismissed veterans.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Remember what they found out.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member opposite who speaks of patronage should remember this.

Magistrates by the score were dismissed, some of them being notified by telegrams received while they were on the bench. Crown attorneys were put on the chopping block.

Several hundred motor cars were auctioned off. Replacements, of course, were purchased a few months later from dealers within the inner circle.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): From their own friends.

Mr. Grossman: Hydro contracts were cancelled and this assembly sweated it out listening, as my hon. friend from Peel has remarked, while the Attorney-General and Hydro commissioner uncorked his 9-hour speech.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was here that night, and I remember.

Mr. Grossman: Incidentally, a little later the same Attorney-General had the experience of being fired himself.

During this same period of midsummer madness, Government House was closed and turned over to a hospital. Priceless paintings and other heirlooms were auctioned off at nominal prices.

The hon. member for Brant will recall it as he was a member of the government of the day.

Mr. Nixon: I did not get in!

Mr. Grossman: Likewise, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) was by this time edging over into the embrace of the ruling party of the day, though I am not going to suggest that he was a participant in this offence against the people of Ontario. This would not be in accord with his fine nature.

Since that time His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has been forced to use inadequate quarters in this building. When members of the Royal family or other distinguished guests pay their official visits, they are housed in a car on a railway siding after the Don River has been perfumed to make the atmosphere more breathable, or else they are installed in a local hotel—fine hospitality for a province of this size and status!

We now have an opportunity to correct this intolerable situation. In recent months Dr. Sigmund Samuel has announced that he is donating his fine residence adjacent to Upper Canada College to the province, expressing the wish that it will be used as the official residence of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. MacDonald: This is one of my constituents.

Mr. Grossman: That proves my point, that fine people are found everywhere. I am sure that the administration appreciates the most generous gift of Dr. Sigmund Samuel, and I am sure that no future government will ever have the hardihood to attempt to duplicate the antics of the administration which took over back in 1934.

Dr. Samuel is one who has, in this province, been successful far beyond the dreams of most of us. He has long been a respected patron of the arts. He is one of Canada's most loved and distinguished citizens. I am sure we all appreciate his generosity in bequeathing one of Toronto's finest residences to the people of Ontario, so that the representative of Her Majesty the Queen and our distinguished visitors may be housed in quarters consonant with the status and the finest traditions of this great province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another matter which I should like to discuss—that is the subject of Metropolitan Toronto and its organizational structure.

I have been a great supporter of the metropolitan system of government. In this area it has accomplished a very great deal. It is the envy of many other communities of similar or even larger size.

However, I have watched with a great deal of regret certain practices which are creeping in, and which might hasten the end of the Metro system and encourage early amalgamation. It would seem that what were formerly temporary and passing differences of opinion between city and suburban representatives seem to be hardening into a permanent alignment of city versus suburbs. This is evidenced by the fact that suburban leaders have gone so far as to have a private conference or conferences to decide upon taking a solid position for the suburbs in a forthcoming meeting of the metropolitan council.

And I say, Mr. Speaker, this could be the beginning of the end for the metropolitan system as far as Toronto is concerned. I think I might utter a word of warning to certain suburban leaders that, unless they, in practice, carry out what is often referred to as the "metropolitan concept," they themselves are hastening the day which they allege to fear—namely outright and complete amalgamation.

Surely they must realize that, so long as they maintain a position wherein they feel that suburbs must decide in advance as to a question being discussed in metropolitan council—where they decide they must vote as a solid block—then they themselves will be the architect of their own misfortune.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): —in committee, why did the hon. member not say it in his report?

Mr. Grossman: Say what in my report?

Mr. Singer: What the hon. member is saying now.

Mr. Grossman: At that time, the hon. member knows perfectly well that they had not been taking this view.

Mr. Singer: Oh.

Mr. Grossman: Of course they had not. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me well, the hon. member was a great supporter himself of that system.

Mr. Singer: Of Metro?

Mr. Grossman: We all were—

Mr. Singer: I still am.

Mr. Grossman: Such conduct is bound to hasten the amalgamation which most of them seem to dread.

Our suburban municipalities have their own traditions, their local pride. This is only natural. But in this general area there are common problems, very many of them, which can never be solved by individual municipalities, large or small. These problems—water supply, disposal of sewage and industrial waste, through streets and highways, school construction—must be met on a regional rather than on a local level.

Even now these problems extend far beyond Metro boundaries. Perhaps Metro will presently have to be expanded. The vast, long-range plan, unveiled the other day for this whole great area—the very heart of industrial Ontario—will demand long and careful study by our civic leaders. It cannot be ignored.

We cannot see too far into the future, and perhaps this is just as well. But I may say this. Had our people of 40 or 50 years ago been able to envision even remotely the fantastic growth we are now experiencing, had they been able to plan even in some degree for this present era of growth and development, then I say it would have saved scores of millions of the taxpayers' dollars which we are forced to spend today.

Metro is an experiment but a successful experiment. It cannot be viewed from any parochial viewpoint. It affects the very heartland of industrial and commercial Ontario. And when other great centres, here in Ontario and in the United States, are studying our Metro system, I think it indicates the soundness of the Metro concept.

Perhaps it is too much to expect, but I suggest that in the light of Metro's success there may be a lesson for all Ontario.

As has been said, suburban expansion is in evidence around all our centres of population.

Other "Metro" areas are bound to be established.

Perhaps the general guiding principles applicable to Metro might well be applied in degree to our whole municipal organization. It will take a long time, but I suggest that our whole municipal organization—counties, townships, villages, towns, cities, and judicial districts—has something to learn from the Metro experience. This administration has given leadership and legislation leading to this great and successful experiment. In my opinion the time will come when this leadership and the necessary legislation will be applicable all across this growing province.

Having said this, I nevertheless feel that the time is ripe for the consideration of the amalgamation of the 13 municipalities comprising Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Why did the hon. member not say that in the planning committee?

Mr. Grossman: This may seem like a contradiction of my argument regarding the extension of the Metro plan. Actually, the point I make is that the larger centres of population should be amalgamated with their suburbs—after a period of metropolitan government—where the location and size make it practical, and where the interests of the population of the whole area are similar and mutual. The Metro plan would, perhaps, apply in respect to the large population area and its relationship to the surrounding territory.

This is necessary, if planning is to be properly applied. It is fairly obvious, too, that a completely new assessment approach must be formulated to avoid resistance on the part of areas affected adversely—assessment-wise that is—by large-scale planning.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on another subject:

In the economy of today there is building an extremely formidable problem. I refer to the difficulty of older citizens in securing employment. There is an increasing volume of complaint that people of even 35 or 40 years of age find increasing difficulty in establishing themselves in employment. In part this difficulty arises from the establishment of pension plans, a very widespread factor in the industrial and business world of today.

Life expectancy is increasing, thanks to improved living standards, constantly increasing social security measures, and rapid advances in the field of medicine.

Again, with very many employers retirement age is set at 65 or 70 years, indeed in some instances at 60.

In the United States there is an organization known as the national committee on aging. The employment and retirement committee of this body recently made a survey directed to 64-year-old employees in various fields. Forty-seven corporations, each employing 10,000 or more persons, participated in the survey. Results indicated that about one-half of the male employees interviewed would prefer to forego social security and pension benefits for the time being and to continue in their employment. It was also found that from two-thirds to three-fourths of employees, reaching age 65, would be acceptable to management for continuation in their jobs.

Our federal hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is making a commendable effort to deal with the problem of employment of older persons.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the hon. member think so?

Mr. Grossman: I think so. Yes I do. On the radio and otherwise the hon. federal Minister is making a reasoned appeal to employers to take advantage of the skills and experience of our older men and women.

The hon. federal Minister communicated with thousands of employers and by mid-November last had received some 2,500 replies. At that time replies were coming in at the rate of 100 per day.

A good number of employers were raising the retirement age from 65 to 67, 68 and in some instances to 70.

Naturally, the subject of pensions arose, along with discussions of so-called portable pensions.

At their inception, Mr. Speaker, pension plans implied two or three important factors. They implied intention on the part of the beneficiary to remain as a career man with a specific organization. They implied long service, also contribution on the part of the beneficiary during his working years.

Latterly, pension schemes of many types and in many quarters have come to apply to hourly paid workers, and indeed to very many workers who may quite reasonably be expected to change employers from time to time.

Now we have on our statute books laws to prohibit discrimination in employment as to race, creed, or colour. I think it would not be unreasonable to expand this legislation to prohibit discrimination on account of age.

Ordinarily, I should not expect employers to engage the services of men and women who have reached fairly extreme old age, but surely we can do something to remove the barriers as to men and women in the 35 to 60 age groups or thereabouts. Many of them are well trained, highly skilled, experienced in some particular line of endeavour, and surely it is a rather savage concept which bars them from making a livelihood during what are actually their most productive years.

Further, it is, as far as the general welfare of our community is concerned, a waste of good manpower. The speech from the Throne has made reference to this vexing problem of the employment of those over 40, and has suggested its relationship to the reluctance of employers to hire such people due to the adverse effect such employment would have on their pension plans.

While I am not entirely convinced that this is more than a very minor factor in the problem, I am glad to know that the government is planning to apply itself to its alleviation.

I have given notice of intention to move an amendment to The Fair Employment Practices Act to make it an offence to discriminate—insofar as employment is concerned—on account of age.

We have read, Mr. Speaker, a lot about the hon. leader of the Opposition on many subjects recently.

For example, in the Toronto Telegram of January 23—and I think the hon. leader of the Opposition has made some comment since then on these subjects—the hon. leader of the Opposition is quoted as being prepared to move for the supplying of water at cost to the municipalities. I think he spoke of this yesterday. Surely, the hon. leader of the Opposition knows that this is precisely what the Ontario water resources commission is doing. They are providing water at cost. He will demand also, so the report declares, complete health insurance, including medical attendance, and drugs. He favours low-cost housing, well knowing there is no such thing as low-cost housing.

An hon. member: That is the answer.

Mr. Grossman: He favours low-rental housing, a field in which we already have experienced considerable advances. He favours compulsory automobile insurance, which incidentally will probably involve a great increase in premiums.

But in all his travels about this province, Mr. Speaker, I have never once heard the hon. leader of the Opposition say where and how he is going to get the money. Perhaps in coming days he will enlighten us on this point.

As a matter of fact, about the only items not advocated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and this goes also for the hon. leader of the socialist group (Mr. MacDonald), are free beer and wider sidewalks.

Mr. Speaker, on January 23, the Financial Post, in a front page editorial, said:

James E. Coyne, governor of the Bank of Canada, is convinced that if we continue to live grandly beyond our means, as he thinks we do now, we do so at great peril to our prosperity.

Mr. Coyne believes there should be some financial belt-tightening—federally, provincially, municipally and individually. The result, he thinks, would be an economy growing steadily without inflation, an economy supremely able to meet its foreign obligations and to compete in foreign markets.

Now, here in Ontario our administration has been able to maintain a moderate tax structure, and if we can manage, there is nothing we should like more than to have them continue a hold-the-line tax policy.

An hon. member: Think of the civil servants.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. leader of the socialist group—interviewed by the Toronto Daily Star just previous to the recent general election—gave some thoughts as to financing his way. In effect, while he did not say it in so many words, what he meant was, “Soak the corporations.” And I think hon. members will agree that this is what he means.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Grossman: Well, as matters stand, Mr. Speaker, our larger corporations are already paying 50 cents of every profit dollar to the federal treasury, to say nothing of their provincial and municipal taxes. Their capital represents the savings of scores of thousands of our people, plus earnings plowed back into expansion. They are our biggest employers of labour.

While we all agree that it is better to tax corporations than individuals, the question is: How far above 50 per cent. can we go without invoking the principle of the law of diminishing returns?

Mr. MacDonald: Fifty per cent. after they have allowed for any number of deductions.

Mr. Grossman: However, my hon. friends opposite, Mr. Speaker, know this perfectly well—but it is so much more appealing to the unthinking to holler: “Tax the other guy”—“Tax the big guy.”

Hence, I would remind our hon. friends opposite who talk so freely about enormously increased expenditures, and therefore higher taxes, that a sheep can be sheared many times but it can be skinned only once.

Mr. Singer: How well did the hon. member read the speech before taking the floor?

Mr. Grossman: I have been studying the recommendations of the committee on the organization of the government of Ontario.

It seems to me that this report will be of the very greatest value to the administration. Among other accomplishments it catalogues the various departments and branches of government, along with a most formidable array of governmental boards and commissions.

Many suggestions are made and many of them appear to have merit and common sense.

The importance of municipal affairs is recognized, and it is to the credit of the hon. Prime Minister and the government that in this field, and in a matter of less than two weeks from receipt of the report, a major reorganization of The Department of Municipal Affairs has been effected. Community planning has been attached to The Department of Municipal Affairs where obviously it properly belongs. The Ontario water resources commission, which has such impressive responsibilities in municipal matters, will now report to this Legislature through the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender).

The rearrangement of the duties and of branches of The Department of Municipal Affairs cannot but help being beneficial. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs will now find himself better equipped than ever to deal with the manifold problems of his extremely important department.

I am glad to note that the Gordon report stresses the doctrine of ministerial responsibility.

There has been far too much tendency to get this or that responsibility of government out of the hands of responsible Ministers and into the hands of boards, commissions and perhaps I should add, bureaucracies.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Now the hon. member is cooking.

Mr. Grossman: Some time ago, I spoke in this House—and it is on the record, Mr. Speaker—about the necessity to review the powers of our boards and commissions, and the need to provide for appeals from their rulings.

Now, if the hon. members opposite would like to get copies of that Hansard—they will find that most of these good ideas come from this side.

Interjection by Mr. Wintermeyer.

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, what an admission. The hon. leader of the Opposition is complaining that this government does not give them a chance to do anything because the government does it first. What an admission that is.

However, I think that our workmen's compensation board decisions should stand unless there should happen to be what the lawyers call an obvious denial of natural justice. The decisions of the board are made with promptness; the injured workman gets the benefit of the doubt, and indeed, I think our workmen's compensation procedures stand as a model for the whole world.

I am sure that no one will expect the government to adopt holus-bolus all the recommendations contained in that report. However, I think it is a good omen to see a start being made as with The Department of Municipal Affairs. The federal government has announced its intention of having an examination made of practices in the Ottawa field along the lines of the Hoover commission.

The Gordon report is, I think I may say, a logical starting point for such an examination in our particular field.

However, in certain departments, for example The Department of Highways, there has already been, I understand, a complete examination and a revision of practices, using the advice of the experts. It appears also that The Department of Public Works is undergoing a complete reorganization.

These measures, and any such measures, are to the credit of the administration, and I am sure the hon. Prime Minister will have the support of all our people in his plans to streamline procedures, introduce the most modern methods, and generally to promote efficiency and economy in departmental administration.

We are all interested—and particularly interested are those of us who have frequent occasion to visit Queen's Park—in the recent announcement that the province has acquired the St. Joseph's Convent property. This large property lies to the east of the East Block and extends to Bay Street.

I think it was about 35 years ago that the East Block was constructed.

Many years ago Sir Oliver Mowat declared that never would the province need all the space provided in the then newly constructed Ontario Parliament Buildings. However, it was not long after his departure that the North Wing was added. Then came the East Block. Now departments are spread all over Toronto—on University Avenue, on Richmond Street, on Bay Street, up on highway No. 401, down on the waterfront, and indeed just about wherever space can be found.

It will be a couple of years before the St. Joseph's property will be available. I am going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this period could well be used in planning for construction measures which should solve our office space problems for a good many decades to come.

I suggest also that, in planning the new structure for the St. Joseph's property, consideration should be given to establishing a new look, having in mind the Bay Street frontage. There should be attention given to landscaping, to adequate means of ingress and egress. A solution should be sought for what is a serious and increasing parking problem. Perhaps underground parking offers the solution.

I have no doubt that, in the light of urgent demands for space coupled with the very high value of the site, a multi-story structure will come into being, probably something of a skyscraper type.

Now, Mr. Speaker, should not the whole project—the placing of buildings, their height and general character, the landscaping problems, the possibility of making the whole project one of lasting beauty, utility and provincial pride—should not this whole project be the subject of profound thought and planning? Should we not, I suggest, have the planning thrown open to competition to attract the best architects and designers in this or any other country? Mr. Speaker, this is a huge and costly project to serve very many generations. Let us take no chances on a second-rate, poorly planned job.

I suggest that the matter be treated as one of some urgency insofar as our finances will permit. It is important, I think, to get our government back to Queen's Park. It is a drag on efficiency to have our hon.

Ministers and their departments spread all over this city. We owe it to them, and to our people, to get on with this project with all reasonable speed.

There are a number of projects in this general area on which the hon. Prime Minister and his hon. colleagues deserve our congratulations.

We have in full operation two entirely new teachers' colleges, one in eastern Metropolitan Toronto, the other on the grounds of the Ontario Hospital at New Toronto.

The Department of Highways establishment at Downsview on highway No. 401 is a useful and very practical one, comprising adequate space for draughtsmen, laboratory workers and many other employees. Adequate space is provided for the examination of applicants for drivers' licences. In its very nature the work carried on at this impressive centre requires abundant space not obtainable in the heart of the city except at exorbitant prices. Also, the traffic problem is minimized by reason of this location.

The Ontario water resources commission is now housed in suitable new quarters, also on highway No. 401. Adequate quarters are also being provided for the Ontario hospital commission.

About 35 years ago the psychiatric hospital was established on Surrey Place adjacent to Queen's Park. It was built by the city of Toronto but has been maintained by the province. I need not go into the details of the agreement which seemed logical at that time.

The hospital has accomplished a most excellent work, but has long since outgrown its decidedly limited quarters. Now, according to an announcement of the hon. Minister of Health we are to have an entirely new psychiatric hospital, to be located on Huron Street—a hospital to serve all Ontario and not merely a limited area.

Psychiatric hospitals, by and large, are for the treatment of early nervous and mental disorders. They also embody important teaching facilities. They are an important link in the chain of our institutions of care and healing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, becoming effective on January 1, 1959, our plan of hospital insurance shows evidence of the careful thought and preparation which preceded actual application of the plan. Today it covers more than 90 per cent. of our people. It guarantees its membership adequate hospitalization and protects them from the fears and the terrific expense formerly connected with prolonged hospitalization. There has been little complaint as to the operation of the plan.

However, I think the hon. members will be interested in how the plan is viewed by one of our larger Toronto hospitals. I quote from a letter written to the physicians associated with the New Mount Sinai Hospital. I got this letter in the mail. Being a member of the board, we get copies of all letters sent to the staff physicians. This letter is signed by the administrator, Mr. Sidney Liswood and the chief of the medical staff:

There has been 8 months' experience of operation under the hospital insurance plan. Many of the concerns which we have had have not been realized.

Certainly the hope that the commission would not interfere in medical practice or in the day-to-day hospital management has been confirmed.

Note this, Mr. Speaker:

Increased length of patient stay, which would be a reasonably accurate indicator of abuse, has not materialized. Indeed it has decreased slightly.

Utilization of diagnostic services such as X-ray and laboratory has maintained normal levels. The use of prescription drugs has increased slightly. On the whole this is a good record and you are to be commended [he is, of course, speaking to the doctors of the hospital] for maintaining reasonable levels of patient treatment.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did his party oppose it for so long? He is still bucking the drift with the same excuse.

Mr. Grossman: I suggest that this authentic and representative report speaks well for the hospital scheme.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think an improvement can be made in the billing system. The due dates of premiums, and the periods which these premiums cover, are very confusing to the average person, and I strongly recommend a review of this with a view to instituting a more simple and easily comprehended system of payment of premiums.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the last session of this assembly I raised the question of improving our minimum wage schedule. I hope I am not immodest in reminding the House of something which I advocated a year ago.

Now, I am glad indeed to note that it is the intention of the government to deal with this question at this present session. I congratulate the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) on what I know will be regarded as a desirable and forward-looking measure.

We are entering, Mr. Speaker, a most important session of this assembly. What we determine in coming weeks will be of importance to more than one-third of the people of this nation.

Our fiscal problems are of great magnitude. Our fiscal arrangements with the government of Canada terminate in the near future. They will have to be renewed, but they will have to be renewed on far more generous terms for this province. I understand that our provincial Premiers and Treasurers will confer in coming months with the federal administration on these very grave issues.

For the government of Canada it seems to me that a proper starting point lies in a thorough stocktaking in the matter of national defence. If expenditures in this channel can be brought within more realistic bounds, it will go a long way toward the solution of our fiscal problems—federal, provincial and municipal. In this field, and in the light of atomic and missile developments, I wonder if we are getting sound value for the billions which are being spent?

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to second the motion of the hon. member for Peel for the adoption of the address graciously presented to this House by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.15 of the clock, p.m.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before you carry the motion, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) whether he will follow the same procedure as in other years and add any individual who may desire to be added to a particular committee subsequent to the passage of this motion?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would want to oblige hon. members who wish to be on the various committees. Now, the committee in its wisdom, and I think with reason, has increased the membership of these committees of the House. Some hon. members on certain committees might want to drop off, in which case we could substitute somebody else. I think that might meet the situation without increasing the size, but we can work that out when the time comes.

If any hon. members, in reading the list of the committees, have a desire to be on some particular committee, if they will let me know, I will have a list worked out to see if it can be arranged to have their names added to that committee.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I think the explanation of the hon. Prime Minister is quite satisfactory. Actually, the additions that I had before me, Mr. Speaker, are not many in number, except for one committee.

May I be permitted to refer to it for just a moment? The committee on energy consists, I believe, of 25 members. I think we have what might be termed our proportion or mechanical allotment. I have 4 names to be added to that committee. That may be a rather serious problem.

With respect to the other committees it is a matter of adding one man to a particular committee. I do not think it would be a very serious matter at all, but I would like this particular matter to be clarified beyond—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We can take care of that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The committee on energy?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We can enlarge the committee perhaps to 35 or something of that nature.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the additional names be added?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion in relation to the work for next Monday. During these organizational days, of course, the order paper is very slender and yet I know it is the desire of all of us to make the best of the time available.

I am going to suggest that on Monday, which is bound to be a day on which there will be very little on the order paper which can be dealt with, we should have a discussion of the Gordon report, and to that end I would make a motion in a moment or two in relation to the necessary mechanics to place it on the order paper.

My own feeling is, and has been, that the best method of dealing with this report is the method I set out in my letter to the chairman, Mr. Gordon, in May of 1958.

On the other hand, that is only my viewpoint. I think it would be well if an opportunity were given to discuss the report generally in the House—I would not propose that this take place on Monday because this is perhaps short notice. I would not propose that Monday should be the only day upon which hon. members of the House could discuss this report. But if we put it on the order paper, there can be some discussion on Monday and then, later on, the matter can be discussed.

We can then, on the consensus of what is said, determine the best method of handling the report.

I might say to the hon. members concerning the report, a copy of which they have, that the report arose due to a reference which I made very largely in the letter which I have referred to, but also supported by an order-in-council.

Now, no committee report to us is final. The committee's report is a report which this House, in its wisdom, can act upon in whole or in part. As a matter of fact, what counts is what this House does.

This report which I think is a very considerable innovation in the parliamentary system, is, in itself, quite a new approach to problems which the report says are by no means common to this Parliament. They are common to all Parliaments and, indeed, I suppose are common to the congressional and democratic systems of government.

The point of putting this item on the order paper is so that hon. members here may, over the coming period of time, have the opportunity to express views in connection with the report.

Subsequently a motion, or something of the sort, will be submitted to this House dealing with the report and I would say from my own standpoint, very probably by the method which I referred to in my letter of May, 1958.

Mr. Speaker, with that in view, I would move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that the committee on organization of government in Ontario, tabled on Wednesday last, that a sessional paper No. 54 be taken into consideration next Monday.

Now, I make that plain again, that in taking it into consideration on Monday, it is not my purpose or idea that the discussion should be closed on Monday next but that, when hon. members have spoken we will simply adjourn the debate until we have another convenient day.

I may say that I did discuss this with the hon. leader of the Opposition and I think the matter is satisfactory to him.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Frost moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that the report of the committee on the organization of government in Ontario, tabled on Wednesday last as sessional paper No. 54, be taken into consideration on Monday next. Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, he did discuss this with me and frankly, I am in agreement with him. There is just one question I would ask the hon. Prime Minister. This will not preclude any reference to the Gordon committee in the Throne debate?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh no.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. leader of the Opposition spoke, or made a suggestion in the House, concerning the addition of 3 new committees to the committees of the House: The committee on welfare, highways and reform institutions. I will not repeat what I said yesterday except to point out that we have already 19 committees of the House.

In looking over the matter, and discussing it with the hon. Ministers concerned, it would seem to me that the best way of handling it would be to enlarge the committee on health to the committee on health and welfare; secondly, to enlarge the committee on highway safety—and I do not want to desecrate that committee—to the committee on highways and highway safety.

I may say that I discussed that with the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), who thought that that might be a very satisfactory method of handling it.

In regard to the matter of reform institutions, it would seem to be that this item might be referred by the House either to the new committee on health and welfare or to the committee on education.

To be frank with you, Mr. Speaker, my own viewpoint on it was that it might be referred to the committee on education. Actually speaking, the whole problem is associated with education but then, of course, it is associated with health and welfare as well.

That matter can be determined a little later, but I think that would meet the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps this would give me the opportunity of making, to the House, some suggestions of innovations as regards to the sittings. I did discuss this and I may say, without any binding effect, this morning with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I am going to propose this innovation: that next Wednesday the Legislature itself would not sit. In other words, that we would adjourn from Tuesday afternoon until Thursday afternoon, and that Wednesdays should altogether be completely taken up with the organization of the committees of the House. I have discussed this with the clerk and I have discussed it with some others, and it would seem to me that all of the committees of the House might be organized on one day. They would meet in order.

The clerks would arrange the times and the meetings and they would meet, organize, and elect their chairman and so on, and do any preliminary business that there might be.

Mr. Speaker, that takes up, as I have said, approximately 19 committee meetings.

It would have this advantage. Actually speaking, as matters stand now, the committees on the first day are pretty well confined to organization. Now they may do some work, but they are pretty generally confined to organization.

We might try this out. This cleans up on one day what would be taken care of on 19 separate occasions during the opening weeks of the session, and it would put every committee in a position that they could get down to business, I think, much sooner than before.

I will admit that this is a very great innovation. Actually it might be found to be unsatisfactory in the course of the experience we have. But I would suggest that the House should not sit next Wednesday, and that our general objective would be to keep the Wednesdays for the next half-dozen weeks free of business so that the House would not sit on that day. It is quite impossible, of course, to lay that down as a rule which is unalterable because situations may arise which will make it necessary for the House to sit on Wednesday.

For instance, there might be, say, the termination of the Throne debate, or there might be the introduction of the budget or something of that sort. So it would not be an unalterable rule that the House would not sit on Wednesday, but we might try to keep that as our objective.

I make that suggestion, but I am not placing it formally before the House at this time. We can, perhaps, discuss the matter later, but I give that suggestion in the form perhaps of general notice that we will follow that procedure this coming Wednesday.

I might say, as regards committees of the House, that the rule of this assembly—and, of course, the rule of all Parliaments—is this, that committees of the House deal with matters which are specifically referred to them. We have been pretty generous here, and I think rightly so, in our interpretation of that. Of course, “referred to the committees” always is specific legislation, and we have reached the method by which very much of the legislation here in the Legislature now goes to committees for consideration.

I think, of course, that rule has to be adhered to. The fact there is a committee is not a carte blanche to discuss everything and do everything. Nevertheless, I am going to try to devise a general directive to all committees which would enable the committees to examine into the organization and the methods of departments. I give the hon. members this example:

It is not the work of the committee to look at the amount, for instance, of an old age pension which is $55 a month and say that it ought to be “x” dollars. That is not the work of the committee.

I think the work of the committee is to look at the methods. The other subject is one for this House. But I would think that the committee might very well look at the method, the machinery, the means by which these things are taken care of.

I am going to try to devise a general directive to all committees which can be taken as a direction from the House which will avoid the specific direction to each committee. Whether I can successfully devise such a formula, I do not know. But I will try.

I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that the motion of Wednesday last, calling for the appointment of 19 standing committees of the present Legislature, be amended as follows:

The designation of committee No. 7 be changed from “on health” to “on health and welfare.”

The designation of committee No. 8 be changed from “on highway safety” to “on highways and highway safety.”

That leaves outstanding the matter of reform institutions but we will fit that into a proper slot very shortly, when I have the opportunity of discussing it with the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Ward-robe).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this might be an innovation worth a trial at this time, and I think it is very timely because this should be a very long session, sitting until Easter. But I wondered if it would be necessary for all the 19 committees to meet on Wednesday. I was thinking particularly of the committee on printing, which meets only once during the session, and also on privileges and elections. I do not think there would be any need for these to meet on that day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, they can meet in the ordinary course, but they will have to meet later, I suppose.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the hon. Prime Minister.

I am wondering if he would consider the possibility of having an Opposition hon. member as chairman of the public accounts committee? I might point out to him, as he of course knows, that during this past Parliament in Ottawa, the hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), I believe even suggested that an Opposition member be chairman of this very important committee. And of course in the British Parliament this has gone on for years and years.

I do not know whether it would be described as a courtesy, but it has been a condition that the governments of the day have privileged the Opposition to have, and I was just wondering if the hon. Prime Minister would take that into consideration and give us a democratic privilege.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will the hon. Prime Minister permit a question? This whole problem of committees, I think, as he said, is a very serious problem and I think one in which we are all trying to find some answer.

On Monday, may we discuss, for example, the purpose of a committee? What should it do? And another thought that has occurred to me is the question of whether or not the committee should keep records of the work they do. There is no Hansard, for example, at committees. I am inclined to think that these are some things that we should give consideration to, and real serious consideration. I think on Monday we should discuss the question of the purpose of a committee, and I would hope that they will not have limited hours.

I can appreciate the position of the hon. Prime Minister when he says that a committee's job certainly is not to say old age pensions should be increased from "a" dollars to "b" dollars, but I would hope that nobody would preclude the request of any committee member to call in independent advice, for example.

Now, just talking out loud in conjunction with the committee on education, I would hope that some university professors, and so on, would be available for consultation. These things maybe could be pursued more effectively Monday.

But I would hope that what the hon. Prime Minister has in mind at the present time is not in any way a curtailment of the activities of the committees when they do begin to function. I would hope, too, that in his direction to the committees he take into consideration the advisability of keeping some record of proceedings so that they may have some permanent value and be available for inspection later.

I am thinking in terms of the committee on health, that studied the question of hospitalization a few years ago. Hon. members will recall that frequently during sittings in the House it was said: "Oh, that question can be answered in committee." I know I find myself currently unable to know what answers were made during those very important committee hearings.

I think for the present I will do nothing more than draw this to the attention of Mr. Speaker, in the hope that it can be pursued more effectively on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I do not think it is very practical to have a Hansard report of all committees. But we did have Hansard reports on that committee to which he refers, on hospital insurance. There was a Hansard record kept of that and it is available to hon. members of the House.

I would point out, however, that committee meetings are difficult matters on which to keep Hansard records because of the informality and the fact that several people talk at once. That is inevitable in committee meetings.

In some committees, of course, Hansard proceedings could be taken, but I do not think we could make that rule at all general. It would have to depend upon the nature and the circumstances.

However, that matter can be discussed. The item which will be on the order paper on Monday gives the opportunity, in a pretty broad way, to discuss procedure.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE MARRIAGE ACT

Hon. M. Phillips moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act amend The Marriage Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment to The Marriage Act has one purpose only, and that is to delete the words "racial origin" from form 13 of The Vital Statistics Act which concerns only particulars of a marriage. Now, we feel that these two words serve no useful purpose, nor do they aid us in any way from the standpoint of statistical information. And if hon. members have form 13, they will find among many things, No. 9 is citizenship, and No. 10 is racial origin.

I would like to read to the hon. members of the House the definitions that are given for these: Citizenship refers to the country to which the person owes allegiance. Now, the definition of racial origin is practically the same, except it does also concern us with the racial origin on the paternal side of the man or woman in question. Sometimes it is embarrassing to them because they do not know, and at the present moment, we are taking it out of The Marriage Act only.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Division Courts Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Evidence Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: I repeat, as I said yesterday, that these bills will all go to the committee on legal bills, and will be explained on second reading.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Would the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) make an explanation now? In spite of what was said yesterday, I do think it is of great value to the House to have some explanation made on the occasion of first readings.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I thought I was following the normal practice to do that on second reading, but if the hon. leader of the Opposition wants it, I have no objection to giving the explanation.

This bill provides for a form of declaration to be used in matters coming under provincial jurisdiction. Previously the only form prescribed was to be found in The Canada Evidence Act which could be used only for matters of Dominion jurisdiction, and this now brings the form within our own Evidence Act to comply with that.

The amendment to The Division Courts Act is to provide for the transfer of supreme court judgments and county and district court judgments to a division court for the purpose of garnisheeing the wages of the judgment debtor. That was done in 1957.

This bill extends the application of this principle in cases where a consolidation order has been made in the division court against the judgment debtor.

I will go back to The Evidence Act and cover them all if the hon. leader of the Opposition wishes. Regarding the amendment to The Evidence Act, a number of these amendments are purely procedural but there are one or two points that I think are of considerable interest to those engaged in the practice of law.

Expert evidence: the amendment provides for where it is intended by any party to examine, as witnesses, persons entitled according to the law and practice to give opinion evidence, not more than 3 of such witnesses may be called upon either side without permission of the judge or other person presiding. Lawyers who are interested in practice will recall that, at one time, leave had to be obtained and applied for before the calling of the witness. This now permits it to be done at any time with leave of the judge.

The examination for discovery of officers of a corporation: this bill provides, under certain circumstances, for the evidence to be available at the time.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, here we have just a number of changes in a word here and there to tidy up this Act, and to get us in a little better position for the consolidation of the statutes. That also applies to some of the other amendments that are introduced. Hon. members of the House will remember that the consolidation of the statutes is to take place this year.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Judicature Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will permit the holding of sittings of the high court in a county court-house where that court-house is located outside the county town. I introduced a bill yesterday permitting county court-houses to be built outside the area of the county town.

THE SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill simply permits sittings of the surrogate courts in the same manner as high courts may sit in county courts outside the area of a county town.

THE JUVENILE AND FAMILY COURTS ACT, 1959

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act, 1959."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in this connection I would say at the present time a juvenile family court judge is confined to the court of the county for which he is appointed. This bill will give him province-wide jurisdiction.

THE LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Land Titles Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, while there are a number of changes, this again is in relation to the 1960 revision and the clarification and improvement in the wording, and there is no change in major principles involved.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Act will amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act in connection with the audit section. It has been brought about as the result of recommendations by the Institute of Chartered Accountants and, generally speaking, the changes will bring the Act into line with comparable provisions of The Corporations Act, 1953.

THE NEGLIGENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Negligence Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a procedural amendment to enable a third party to be added on ex parte application rather than by motion, and in that way it will probably save talk and reduce the time involved.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Trustee Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is purely procedural in connection with the affixing of corporate seal and that sort of thing. I think the legal bills committee would be the best place to deal with the explanation. It can be done more readily than just at this point in the House.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Registry Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is another amendment which is of minor consequence, but still it does clarify the intent, I think, in connection with one of the sections here. The effect of it is simply to add the word "successors" after trustees, and so forth, to enable successor corporations to be specifically covered and remove any possible doubt.

The same explanation will apply to two short amendments in the next two Acts that I ask permission to introduce.

THE SHORT FORMS OF CONVEYANCES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Conveyances Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE SHORT FORMS OF LEASES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Leases Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE SHORT FORMS OF MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Mortgages Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Act will repeal a section of The Summary Convictions Act, the effect of which repeal would be to permit anyone to obtain a transcription of the evidence taken in a proceeding or summary under The Summary Convictions Act.

THE WAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Wages Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: In explanation, I would say that this section is to provide a means whereby a judgment debtor may pay off a judgment by instalments and avoid successive garnishments of his wages.

THE ELECTION ACT, 1951

Mr. K. Bryden moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Election Act, 1951."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this bill, I would like to say first of all that during the election campaign last year the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) indicated that he was going to bring in a bill along this line, but since he seems to have lost his bill I am bringing it in for him.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As a matter on a point of order, I do not want to put this in any undemocratic way, but traditionally in Houses of Parliament, the only time an explanation is ever given on any bill is when it is a government bill, and then only when it is requested by an hon. member of the Opposition. It is not proper for a private hon. member to give an explanation on the first reading of his own bill.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister from Grey North (Mr. Phillips) introduced a bill this afternoon and got off without being asked for an explanation. Why did you not call him to order?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. leader of the Opposition quite properly said that he wanted to have an explanation of the hon. Minister's first reading, and so the hon. Attorney-General was doing it to accommodate him. This is something on which I was brought to order when I was a private member, when I proceeded to introduce a bill in 1959 on The Mechanics' Lien Act. I was ruled out of order in speaking to the bill on first reading, and I think it is consistent that the tradition should continue.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that the point of order is correct, and the explanation should be left for the second reading.

THE PUBLIC LANDS ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Lands Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of section 1 of this bill is to enable the province to set apart Crown land as harbour areas for pleasure craft. The second section is designed to insure a proper degree of control over the use of lands in territories without municipal organization.

Sections 3 and 4 of the bill provide a penalty for a person unlawfully taking possession of public lands and erecting buildings thereon.

Section 4 will provide a right of passage over portages which have been known as portages in the past; and the fifth section of the bill is to avoid certain clouds which exist on old titles which were granted by the Crown many years ago.

THE SURVEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Surveys Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Act is to authorize the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to make regulations prescribing the methods of performing surveys, and also prescribing the kind and form of monuments used to identify points in surveys and matters of that kind.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I rise to inform the House that a full and complete public inquiry will be instituted at once in connection with the tragic school bus fatal accident south of Hillsburgh in Wellington county late yesterday afternoon.

I would assure the House that this will be a most thorough investigation, and will be proceeded with under the provisions of The Coroners Act.

I am sure also that I speak for not only all hon. members present, but for everyone in the province of Ontario, when I say that it is with the greatest sorrow and regret that we learn that 3 young teen-age students—all of them girls—all in the area of Hillsburgh, lost their lives in such tragic circumstances on their way home from school.

And I know that this is in the area of the electoral riding of Wellington-Dufferin in which the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Root) has a very personal interest.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, what I am about to say this afternoon is tempered at this time by reason of the tragic accident referred to by the hon. Attorney-General.

I propose this afternoon, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, to table the complete statistical data on accidents occurring in the province of Ontario during the year 1959. And this is somewhat of a record because, up until this year, such statistics were not available until the end of March, so that this year for the first time we are two months in advance.

Statistics are very important because they not only provide us with the superficial technical statistics of the nature and number of accidents, but by having them broken down we are able to make an analysis and then realize where our efforts should be directed.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I will table presently a complete set of the statistics. I am hopeful of having, in the early part of next week, complete sets available for each and every hon. member of this House.

They will find of particular interest the one sheet which I have in my hand, which is a summary of the motor vehicles traffic accident statistics for Ontario, for 1959. On that one sheet is broken down in the greatest of detail all the facts pertaining to the statistical evidence of accidents, the number of accidents, the number of victims, the number of drivers, pedestrian accidents, the number of vehicles, the amount of property damage.

Each heading is broken down into sub-headings. For example, they are in respect to the number of accidents, the type, the month of occurrence, the day, the hour of occurrence, the light conditions, the road surface, the road conditions, weather conditions, places of occurrence, road location, the condition of the driver, the age of the driver—in the minutest of detail.

So the people of this province, and the hon. members, will have available for them these details to reach their own judgment.

Another very interesting sheet is an analysis of certain of the headings in respect of the statistics for the past 10 years: the number of fatal accidents for each year, the number of personal injury accidents, the number of deaths in vehicle accidents and in relation to vehicle registrations, driver licences, the vehicle mileage, and the death rate per 10,000 vehicles, the death rate per 10,000 drivers, and the death rate per 100 million vehicle miles.

I think the hon. members will have their interest directed in respect of a comparison of one year to another. This year I unfortunately have to report that the fatal accidents and deaths are up 4.2 per cent. and 6.7 per cent. respectively over last year. I say unfortunately because the loss of even one life is an unfortunate thing.

And yet, in the over-all picture, The Department of Transport can well be proud of this year's record because it compares very favourably with the record of 1958, which was one of the most outstanding years within the history of our province.

In 1959 there were 1,187 people killed, 75 more than the 1,112 of 1958. But I bring to the attention of the hon. members that in 1953, a half-dozen years ago, there were 1,082 killed. That is only 100 less, at a time when there were 600,000 fewer vehicles and 600,000 fewer drivers and 6 billion vehicle miles less.

For 1953, when 1,082 people were killed, the total number of vehicle mileage was some 12 billion. This year, with a death rate of 1,187, the vehicle mileage is 18 billion miles.

So this year, on the basis of the death rate per 100 million vehicle miles of 6.4, we have equalled the death rate of 1958, which was the lowest by far in the history of the province.

The total number of accidents for 1959 is 81,000—up 6 per cent. over last year's figure of 76,000. I think a good deal of this can be offset by the fact that we have, during the course of the year 1959, instituted a statistical division and a method of reporting throughout the province of Ontario which has enabled us, we believe, to have obtained more accurate information on the number of accidents taking place. The hon. members have on their desks a one-sheet bulletin which will appear with our Ontario traffic safety bulletin. It gives in detail the coming into being and the methods of operation of this statistical record division, which we know will prove of great assistance to us in the future.

It is startling to note, Mr. Speaker, that these figures prove that we have some 220 accidents a day—a large number—220 every day of the year. Within the material filed the hon. members will find a month-by-month report both on the number of fatal accidents—that is accidents as a result of which deaths occurred—and the fatalities, that is the number of deaths. In some cases we may have one accident out of which 3, or as many as 4 and 5 people, will suffer death so that the number is different.

During the year 1959, until towards the first half of the year, we were on the way to setting a new record. Until the end of April we were down 17 per cent., and at the end of June we were down 12 per cent.

But in the month of October the trend changed. I regret to say that the month of October was the worst month on record in the number of fatal accidents. That month alone, as will be seen by the cumulative record, wiped out what we had achieved in the earlier months.

The one very bright picture in the traffic statistics is demonstrated by the analysis of the pedestrian deaths. This year, in spite of the fact that there are 100,000 more vehicles and 100,000 drivers driving more miles, I am pleased to report that 4 fewer pedestrians lost their lives than in 1958. It is significant that in 1957, when the total number of pedestrian deaths was 363, that is—within the province of Ontario, in 1959—it was reduced by 41 in the two years to 322; so that in spite of the fact that there were 200,000 more vehicles and 200,000 more drivers within the history of this department—which is only some two years old—the number of pedestrian deaths has been reduced.

I make particular reference to Metro Toronto which, by reason of its pedestrian safety programme instituted in recent years, and in particular the crosswalk movement, brought about a reduction of 9 in the number of pedestrian deaths, so that throughout the whole of the province the figures came out only to a saving of 4. Metro Toronto was responsible in part for that because they reduced it to 9. Mr. Speaker, in this task each and every death that we save is something to be proud of.

A further analysis of the statistics shows that the driving experience of those involved shows that persons with less than 6 months' experience have almost 6 times as many accidents as those with 6 to 12 months' experience. In those areas where we have instituted our new driver examination centres with more strict requirements, we have noted an improvement.

This was brought about, I believe, by reason of the fact that the training and education which the applicant is receiving from the various schools—commercial and otherwise—is greater because of the fact they know they face a more strict examination.

We in the department intend to pursue a very complete programme of accident prevention measures, and during the course of this session I hope to have the opportunity of bringing this out in detail to the hon. members.

In particular, we will be placing emphasis on our demerit point system which we believe had the effect of enabling us to keep up with the remarkable record of 1958.

We intend, by an analysis of the accidents, to be able to direct our attention to the legislation which should be brought into this House, to know in what direction our education and highway safety promotion should be directed.

Also, I believe it will bring to the attention of the enforcement officers who, in relationship to traffic, exist to insure the safety of the lives and limbs of our citizens, where their efforts should perhaps be directed.

We are pleased that municipalities throughout the province of Ontario are setting up more and more safety councils, and we hope to continue our co-operation with them in order to assist them in reducing the traffic toll.

So the hon. members will notice, within the material file, a statistical breakdown of every urban municipality and every county of the province, so that those within the communities might know how they stack up with other communities and what they should do in the years ahead.

In respect of the tragedy that occurred in Hillsburgh, in addition to the efforts which will be conducted by the hon. Attorney-General, our own accident investigating officer is up there and will co-operate in obtaining the information with the hon. Attorney-General's men.

He will do this because it is on the basis of the analysis of how that specific accident occurred that we will know what should be done to prevent its occurrence in the future.

Only a month ago, instructions went from my office to the relevant section within our department to make an exhaustive analysis of every accident in which a school bus was involved during the period 1952 to 1959, so that in respect of this specific problem, we will be able to come to grips with it, and here again know where our legislation, our education and enforcement, should be directed.

It will come, I know, as a shock to you, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to the 3 children who lost their lives in the accident, the driver, in respect of whose person remarks have been made about his particular heroism in trying to save those who lost their lives, died at noon today.

Mr. Speaker, during the course of this session, I will have occasion to refer several times to the highway safety programme directed to save the lives and limbs of our citizens. I can assure you that our department will count it as the goal to be reached, perhaps, of having none killed, but we know this—that for every life we save our efforts will not have been in vain.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Transport, arising out of his remarks.

In view of the very salutary decrease in the pedestrian deaths in Metropolitan Toronto, some of which, I think, can be attributed to crosswalks, and the crosswalk system initiated in Metro, does the hon. Minister propose to extend this system throughout the province, or encourage municipalities to accept such an extension or examine it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, may I say that since its very inception, our traffic engineer, who is in charge of the traffic section of our department, together with our other safety officials, has been in constant touch with those officials within Metropolitan Toronto responsible for the crosswalks system. We cannot, we feel, at the present time, make it compulsory for each municipality to introduce crosswalks. The original decision will rest with the municipality concerned.

However, we are presently in the midst of the preparation of material which will be available to any interested municipality. It will tell them about the crosswalk system, and its success and its benefits, will tell them the procedure which it is felt they should follow in bringing the crosswalk system into effect. For example, there should be wide publicity in order to insure that both pedestrians and motorists know what they are doing.

Also we have within the department the responsibility of approving every such by-law that brings into effect the crosswalk, and they must adhere to the formula laid down as to the erection of signs approved by our department.

I may say that we are even today following the experience of Metro Toronto—that is, in respect of certain crosswalks—making continuing experiments as to the type of lights and the type of signs which will be used.

Once it is decided what the complete proper picture is, that will be the standard set down for every municipality throughout the province. This is necessary because one of the large difficulties is the fact that we not only need to have the residents of Metro Toronto, or the residents of any municipality that has crosswalks, made familiar with them, but every motorist throughout the province who has occasion to come into those municipalities should be aware of what crosswalks mean.

Hon. J. Root (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, reference has been made by the hon. Minister of Transport to the tragic accident which took place in my riding. Indeed, it took place in my own community. I know that the people in that area will be pleased that investigations will be carried forward to try to eliminate similar accidents. I know all the people, and know that the hon. members of this House will want to join in conveying to the community and to the families affected their sincere sympathy.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to address a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), a copy of which has been submitted to him through your office.

The current issue of Saturday Night carries a special report by its financial editor entitled, "How Stock Promoters Rob the Public." In it there are a number of serious charges. For example, that the Toronto Stock Exchange enjoys the dubious distinction of being the world's largest gambling stock market, that "search for minerals is merely incidental to much stock promotion," that "the catalogue of skulduggery in Ontario securities during the past decade is breathtaking," and—most important of all, Mr. Speaker—that the Ontario securities commission operates on the basis of winking at some irregularities for fear that promotional activity would be halved.

In view of this documented case of how the public is being fleeced, what does the hon. Attorney-General propose to do about it, either by way of investigation or action?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): In reply, Mr. Speaker, to the question from the hon. member for York South, I would say that I have seen the article, though I have not yet been able to read it completely. Careful study will be made of its contents, and in due course a report will be made by me to this House.

I am glad meanwhile to be able to say that I have just received from the Ontario securities commissioner his report for the calendar year 1959 which will be tabled shortly. It shows the extensive work of the commission during the calendar year 1959, and also some of the problems with which it is confronted and the progress made—particularly in connection with a number of major trials for crimes charged under the criminal code and offences under The Securities Act.

To illustrate, two trials took a combined total of 8 weeks in court. Another trial and re-trial, dealing with wash sales, lasted 10 weeks with jury disagreements in both cases.

The Crown has certainly proceeded vigorously to prosecute where offences have been revealed in relation to securities by the Ontario securities commission investigation. When this report is tabled and examined, there will be further opportunity to discuss the matter, I am sure.

The securities commissioner is in the wings at the present time, and I can say in his presence that he is one of the finest men in this type of work that we have ever had in the province.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Mr. Speaker, I would beg your indulgence in asking to revert back to the introduction of bills for the purpose of introducing one.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT, 1951

Mr. N. Davison moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fair Employment Practices Act, 1951."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERS ACT, 1960

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Professional Engineers Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill really rewriting The Professional Engineers Act, and I would prefer to give a more detailed statement on it on second reading. I can say at this time no new principles are involved in the bill.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The seventy-third annual report of the Niagara parks commission for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1959.

The fifth annual report of the highways transport board of the province of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1959.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Before the orders of the day, I wonder if I might address a question to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), a copy of which I submitted to him sometime last week.

The hon. Minister has been quoted on a number of occasions with regard to retarded children's new hospitals, either under construction or planned, for points in southern Ontario, but with no reference to the north. In recent days however, news outlets in the Sudbury area have credited the hon. Minister with saying that a training school and hospital have been designated for that area.

Would the hon. Minister confirm these reports that a training school and hospital will be built in Capreol?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I have the question as put by my hon. friend (Mr. MacDonald) on the other side of the House. I have made reference to the fact that our planning looked toward the establishment of the next hospital school in northern Ontario, but have pointed out that no location had been decided upon. At no time have I given the mayor of Capreol, or anyone else in Capreol, to believe that we had decided to place a school there.

I met the mayor and members of his council only last week, and discussed this matter with them. I pointed out to him that I had listened with interest to the submission and to the generous offer, but that I was not prepared to make a decision as to what the actual location of the hospital school in northern Ontario would be.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a supplementary question? Is he aware that the local hon. member of that area indicated in the last election that there would be a school in that area? That is just what I wanted to find out.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: My answer, Mr. Speaker, is I am not aware of that fact.

Mr. MacDonald: He did not get a copy of that speech.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a supplementary question to that of my hon. friend from York South? I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Health if he has decided precisely where the location of the retarded children's hospital in northern Ontario is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have just answered that question. The answer was no.

Mr. Speaker, I made perfectly clear that I had not yet taken a decision as to the actual location of any hospital school other than the one that is now under construction at Cedar Springs.

ON GORDON COMMITTEE REPORT

Clerk of the House: The fourth order: Consideration of the report of the committee on the organization of government.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter was referred to last Friday afternoon and previously. Last Wednesday I had made some references to the report at the time of tabling.

Now, for the benefit of the hon. members of the House, to refresh their memories, and to acquaint the new hon. members of the House with the background of this question, I should like to make a few introductory remarks.

May I say that this report is the report of the committee on the organization of government in Ontario. I shall read, in a moment, the references—both the order-in-council and my own letter—which put this matter on the very broadest basis.

I would say to the hon. members of the House that, in my estimation, the portions of the report dealing with the organization of government, and its ability to do business, are of just as much importance—as a matter of fact, perhaps of greater importance—than its reference to the matter of boards and commissions. That is my judgment for what it is worth.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we, in this House and in the government, have been deeply interested in the organization of government due to the enormous expansion of the things in which government is interested. I need to use only one or two very commonplace examples to show what I mean.

Sixteen years ago, at this time, I introduced a budget in the House, I think a very good one; my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has referred to it at various times, and I would say I have always attempted to be guided by the policies I laid down then. At that time, the total undertakings of this province, as summed up in the budget in the both capital and ordinary account, were very little over $100 million.

But now, Mr. Speaker, we know that, for instance regarding grants to education today, I think the budgetary statements given by my hon. friend the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) last spring, provided for $150 million for education alone. It provided for some $310 million for various grants and assistances to the municipalities, including education. That, Mr. Speaker, gives you and the House some idea of the tremendous growth and development of government and its responsibilities. That is not common only to us here. As a matter of fact, in that intervening time—from 1944 through to the present time—we have seen and have experienced the most striking changes in the responsibilities of all democratic government. These things are reflected, of course, in what we see today.

Of course, in the meantime the province has grown very greatly, as will be referred to later. The income, the opportunity, and the undertakings of business in every way have developed so fabulously that in very many ways there perhaps is not any comparison with the situation at that time.

May I say that I, in my judgment and based on the experience of these years, am satisfied that boards and commissions and their duties will not grow less. In my judgment, boards and commissions are ways in which democratic governments can operate in these days of great competition. As a matter of fact, the growth of boards and commissions in this province, and in other provinces and under the aegis of other parliamentary governments, is an indication of the responsibilities of the day.

So I say to hon. members that boards and commissions will not decrease in importance. In my judgment, they will increase in importance.

There are very many things to which I could refer the hon. members. I have, of course, seen some boards and commissions disappear. For instance, the mothers' allowance board, the old age pension board, and others have disappeared, and their work has been absorbed in the machinery of government.

When we talk about boards and commissions, of course, we go away back into antiquity. The work, for instance, of the official guardian and the public trustee actually are the work of boards which are related to the operations of government.

A reference was made here, for instance, to the Niagara parks commission. I think the Niagara parks commission goes back at least 80 years. It was founded in the days of Sir Oliver Mowat.

I believe the first chairman of that board was Sir Casimir Gzowski who was a citizen of this country and a very able and great engineer.

We go back 50 years ago, 55 years ago, and had the creation of the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario. Now, as a matter of fact, there is not any machinery of government by which work of that sort could be carried on.

I think that applies to one of the very latest of our commissions, the Ontario hospital services commission, the first annual report of which will be shortly given to this House.

This report covers a tremendous financial operation, and is one in which strength is drawn to this board because of the fact that it is able to operate as a business; indeed it has to operate as a business.

Mr. Speaker, the problem we have discussed in this House, and the problem with which we have been very much concerned over many years, is the matter of making boards and commissions—which I say are inevitable—responsible to the assembly, to the people, and to the government.

I also say this, that perhaps one of the weaknesses of parliamentary government—and I am not saying anything new, I have often said this before in this House and elsewhere—one of the weaknesses of parliamentary government has been the tendency to concentrate powers in the executive in the cabinet, without regard to the membership of the House. That is something we have often heard discussed.

We have very definitely attempted to deal with that through the development of the committee system, which has already been discussed in this House. New hon. members will experience the operation of committees commencing Wednesday.

It is, I think, about 10 years ago that provision was made, through the suggestion of Mr. Jolliffe who was the leader of the Opposition, of a committee on commissions. We have also discussed in this House, in the last few days, a committee on commissions which would, for the first time, make it possible for certain commissions that had never reported to the House—at least by the presence of the commissioners in the verbal way—to report to the hon. members, and to be subject to questioning in relation to their organization and to their methods. I am very anxious to emphasize that the report of the Gordon committee is very important, because it relates to the organization of government. I should particularly like to impress that upon the hon. members here.

The fullest of opportunity will be given, in committee and also in this House, to discuss the organization of government. The chairman of this committee, Mr. W. L. Gordon, has been for a number of years an adviser of this government in relation to government organization. As a matter of fact, his advice goes back to 1945 in those things which led to a reorganization of the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario, its methods and its personnel.

Now in Mr. Gordon, of course, we have one who has had very great knowledge and experience in the problems with which we have grappled. I may say that the reference to his committee was made in the very broadest of terms, and to that I shall refer in just a moment.

But I made that reference in connection with boards, commissions, government organizations, and the magnitude of the business of government in order that the hon. members of the House may get the problem in perspective.

I do not know of any jurisdiction or any Parliament which has looked at this problem as critically as we have here in this assembly over the years. References to that will be made in the letters and the comments which I shall read, or make very brief reference to.

I would say that, with that background, the genesis of this present inquiry arose through the report of the provincial auditor, Mr. Cotnam, under the date of November 28, 1957. Mr. Cotnam's reports were always very well worth reading, but in this particular case he touched upon the question generally of boards, commissions, and organizations of government, and an excerpt from that report is on page 1 of this report of the committee:

The needs of the times have had to be met. Sheer volume of work and complexity of problems have imposed a great strain on existing resources of officers of experience in the department. The demand for immediate action, and the need for flexibility in manpower requirement, are such that new tasks tend to create new boards and commissions.

In my opinion, a survey to assess the strength and weakness of the present machinery of government is needed.

What is envisaged as a result is not a detailed organization chart for recasting the whole organization of government, but such a survey would bring thought to bear upon the fundamental problems of the government as a whole.

Such a survey could be expected to report upon a reallocation of duties between departments themselves, and between departments and boards and commissions, based on the principle of the nature of the service rendered to the community.

Other benefits from such a survey would be better organization for financial and administrative work, and better arrangement for interdepartmental discussions.

Now, arising out of that, on page 87 of the report, is the letter I wrote to Mr. Gordon at the time of the formation of the commission, and also the order-in-council which was passed, setting up the commission. I shall read the letter to Mr. Gordon of May 15, 1958:

DEAR MR. GORDON:

Concerning our conversation relative to an inquiry into the relationship of provincial boards and commissions with the government of Ontario, the Legislature and government departments, you have been good enough to intimate that you would accept the chairmanship of the committee to survey and inquire into this very important matter.

Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, principal of Queen's University, and Mr. C. R. Magone, QC, the former Deputy Attorney-General, have consented to serve on the committee.

I was quite interested today in receiving a letter from Dr. Mackintosh who expressed his pleasure regarding a letter I had written to him in connection with thanking him for this report, and he said that he had had the opportunity of serving, in some capacity, every government of Canada since Sir Robert Borden's government of 40 years ago.

As hon. members know, he acted as Deputy Minister of Finance during a portion of the wartime, and therefore he has had a very great experience in governmental organization. He expressed his pleasure on being associated with inquiries into the work of the government of Ontario.

Mr. Magone, of course, is very well known to many here, having been Deputy Attorney-General and one of our leading counsel in Ontario. I will proceed with the letter to Mr. Gordon:

The terms of reference broadly are to examine into the administrative and executive problems of the government of Ontario in all divisions of the provincial service, and to examine into the relationship of boards and commissions of the government and the Legislature.

My view is that the reference to the committee should be in the broadest terms. If the committee desires that such reference should be spelled out, I shall be glad to do this, but in that event I should like to have the committee's view as to the form in which this reference should be.

My own present view is that such a reference is not necessary. I think it can be encompassed in very general terms in this letter.

The Haldane committee reference was simply to inquire into the responsibilities of the various departments of the central executive government, and to advise in what manner the exercise and distribution by the government of its functions should be improved.

The problems of the government have been very greatly magnified in recent years, owing to the fact that of necessity governments have been compelled to engage in various types of business.

The hydro-electric power commission of Ontario is a case in point. One of the latest is the work being undertaken by the hospital services commission of Ontario.

There are, of course, boards and commissions which are regulatory in function, such as the liquor licence board of Ontario, the purpose of which was to control and regulate retail outlets and to remove the administration from what might be termed political interference.

The government assures that committee that the Ministers, Deputy Ministers, and members of boards and commissions and the employees of all departments, boards and commissions will assist the committee in its work in every possible way.

I think the problem may be very generally stated in this way:

It is, of course, paramount that government of the people, for the people and by the people should be preserved. On the other hand, democratic government in these days cannot be deprived of the benefits and the efficiencies which come from good business methods. This, I think, is the genesis of boards and commissions.

In availing itself of these methods, the government should not create the means by which the free principles upon which governments exist should be undermined. In other words, the problem is to preserve democratic government while not depriving it of the benefits and efficiencies which go with good business methods.

I think perhaps you might agree that, instead of attempting to spell out the reference, it would be better to give the committee a completely free hand and simply outline the problem to be met after the above fashion.

I am quite prepared to be guided by the committee as to the method in which it should do its work. It may be that much more would be accomplished by an examination and survey which would be conducted in a very informal way rather than clothing the committee with powers of a Royal commission. Again, I am prepared to be guided by the committee in connection with this matter.

I quite realize that this is a very large subject, but it is one of the greatest importance. After the committee has concluded its deliberation and made its report and recommendations, my feeling is that it would be well to submit the matter to a committee of the House representative of all parties.

I am hopeful that the work of the committee will provoke wide discussions in the press and elsewhere. It is a good thing to examine ourselves in these days and inquire into our methods and see if they are meeting the requirements of these times.

I can assure you that you will be given a free hand. The government will make available to all of you the information you require concerning the operation of existing boards and commissions, the purpose of their creation, and the methods by which they are functioning.

We shall also be glad to engage, for the committee, such assistance as it may require.

Now I will not read the entire order-in-council setting up such a committee, but just read this part:

That a committee on the organization of government in Ontario, to examine into the administrative and executive problems of the government of Ontario in all the divisions of the provincial service, and to examine into the relationship of boards and commissions to the government and the Legislature, and to report thereon to the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, that was passed on June 12, 1958. It was in response to my letter of May 15, and the committee had indicated that it felt that perhaps, if it had the powers of a Royal commission, it would be of some assistance in their work, but that they would still conduct their work in an informal way.

That is the genesis of this committee. It is the genesis of this report which has been sought and asked for by the government. I think it is of the very highest of importance, and I can assure hon. members that we are striving for better and more efficient methods of doing business.

I hope the hon. members of this House will, through the committees, inquire into the operations of governmental organizations.

For one thing, as I mentioned the other day, as soon as the hon. Provincial Treasurer has overcome some of the pressures of clearing the budget, which will be submitted to this House, he will make a report to one of the committees—whichever one may be determined—as to the developments that have taken place in the treasury board.

The treasury board method of carrying on business was something we ourselves have developed over a period of some years now. It was translated into legislation in 1954.

At that time, Mr. Gordon advised us as to the legislation. Since that time he has advised us in other developments in relation to it, and that is the genesis of the reference made by Mr. Gordon in this report to the government. These things are of the utmost importance.

I would be very glad to have the hon. members of this House inquire into our system of calling for tenders, letting contracts, and the settlement of contracts. The latter is a very considerable problem, as the hon. members of this House will see if they read back into the report in connection with the reorganization of The Department of Highways and The Department of Public Works.

I would say, without contradiction, that we have made progress such as has not been made in any other jurisdiction or any other government in Canada. That is an expansive statement, but I think that is so.

I would welcome the time that we reach the state of perfection here. I would say that we are always anxious to find better methods, and better means of doing business. I will say that no suggestion of any hon. member of this House, in relation to those highly important matters, will be disregarded.

In connection with the report itself, as I said to this House on Friday, after all, the report is to this House. Whatever action upon the report is taken, must be taken by the House itself.

The report itself, as hon. members will find in the case of very many reports, is certainly subject to any qualifications or any extensions that the hon. members of the House see fit to make.

In releasing this report to the press on January 12, at which time the printing was completed, I frankly had the advantage of seeing the first part of this report, but not all the additions to it, some time earlier.

Hon. members will notice that in this report are the reports made by government departments on their own operations, which cover from around about pages 90 to about 460 or 465. These are reports made to the commission, at the commission's request, by various departments of government.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I said that of course, in the time which has elapsed since the order-in-council setting up the committee, there have been changes in government service. Many things have already been effected. These things were inevitable but they in no way take away from the fact that the report is dealing with very fundamental problems, and is worthy of careful study and consideration. From these things much good will come.

I am under no illusion that either the committee or ourselves have all the answers to the problems. If hon. members were to talk to Mr. Gordon or to talk to hon. Ministers of the government and myself, I would like to be able to say that we have all of the answers. But, as with most human beings, of course we have not.

Most of the answers come from the fact that people deliberate over these things in a constructive way and out of that usually come betterments. These answers will come from those who are dedicated to, and accept, the principle of improving, strengthening and increasing the efficiency of parliamentary government. With the acceptance of these principles, advances and improvements will be made from time to time.

A study and a consideration of the report will be of assistance, not only in the making of public opinion, but through the discussions of facets of the problem based upon actual experience.

There are doubtless many others which could be dealt with. These things can be considered in the light of the principles which should be given very wide study by all persons concerned with the perpetuation of our way of life, and the efficiency and the strength of our form of government, in these days of very great change and challenge.

Now, I read those words because they sum up what I think of the problem with which we are confronted. There are one or two references—they are not small, they deal with important subjects—to which I should like to refer very briefly. One of them is judicial safeguards with relation to boards and commissions as recommended by the committee on the organization of government.

I make that reference because there has been, I think, a very considerable misunderstanding as to what the commission meant by its references, I think on pages 23 and following, of the report—from 23 to 27. I should say that the committee's recommendation in connection with this matter is made, first of all, in a very brief and concise way, and I think it clarifies the issues that they met. As a matter of fact, in reference to the courts, there can be very great misunderstandings as to what that means.

On the other hand, I should point out that, in effect, the committee recommends comparatively little change. That is a very interesting thing, in view of the fact that on that point there has been a very considerable amount of discussion, particularly in the bar association and in other places.

I was quite interested in a comment made by Mr. Gordon, reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail—and I have no doubt the other papers—on January 22, in reference to its recommendations having to do with the labour relations board. They felt some of the unions were disturbed about the references that have been made, and comments that have been made, to the committee's recommendations.

First of all, in connection with privative clauses—and may I point out with respect, I think the report misspells that word privative. It says p-r-i-v-i-t-i-v-e, it ought to be p-r-i-v-a-t-i-v-e. I do not want to be too meticulous, but I think that word is misspelled.

Now, a typical example of a privative clause is given on page 23 of the report. I could give another example, contained in The Liquor Licence Act. As the report says, I think there are 6 statutes in which there are privative clauses, including the labour relations board, the workmen's compensation board, the liquor licence board, and some others.

The decision, orders and rulings of the board shall be final and shall not be questioned, reviewed or restrained by injunction, prohibition, mandamus, quo warranto proceedings or other process or proceedings in any court, or to be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any court; provided that the board may, or at the request of any person, have a proprietary interest in the matter before the board, shall state a case on a point of law only as provided in the criminal code (Canada).

The reference there to the criminal code is only as to a matter of procedure. The proceedings under The Liquor Licence Act or any other Act would not be necessarily criminal, in fact they would not be criminal. But it provides a method of stating a case to the court in connection with a matter of law.

The simple effect of the committee's recommendation—that is the Gordon committee—is this:

Courts have ruled that, in matters of jurisdiction, they pay no attention to privative clauses, and ignore them. In other words, if you take the case of the Toronto Globe and Mail which has often cited—and there are other cases, a host of them—the courts have ruled that, if it affects jurisdiction, then these privative clauses have no effect. And, as they only affect jurisdictions, therefore, in effect, they are a nullity. Now that is the effect, so that the Gordon committee's recommendation is that, because they are a nullity, we might as well remove them.

As a matter of fact, no one can question the findings of the courts in these battles. Boards and commissions should clearly only operate within the jurisdiction assigned to them by the Parliament or Legislature.

Actually speaking, it is unthinkable that this Legislature should give some board or commission powers to do certain specific things, and then the board or commission exceed those things, and then be protected from any appeal to the court by reason of the fact that there is a privative clause in the legislation. That has been long ruled upon by the courts.

The protective clause—I put it that way—applies only insofar as the board remains within its area of jurisdiction as conferred by the Legislature. That was the point of some of the comments that were raised by those who felt that the Gordon committee had gone far afield in connection with asking for a repeal of those clauses.

The fact is that, if any board or commission goes beyond the ambit of its authority as given by this Parliament, or any other Parliament, clearly the privative clauses should have no effect, and the persons affected should have every right to appeal to the court.

Actually, the gist of the committee's report is that these sections are redundant, they are unnecessary, and as such should be repealed.

Again it should be pointed out that the remedies mentioned in these privative sections are not available unless there is a lack of jurisdiction. Where the courts have found that there has been a lack of jurisdiction, then they disregard the sections, and the sections in effect become a nullity. I do not know whether the hon. leader of the Opposition would agree with my interpretation of the law, but I imagine that he would agree with my interpretation of the effect of those privative clauses.

A privative clause runs with the jurisdiction granted or conferred by the Legislature on a certain board or commission and, therefore, an appeal to the courts is necessarily an appeal in the matter of law.

Concerning combined law and fact, that is a totally different problem, and the report is very direct on that point. I refer the reading of the sections of the report dealing with combined law and fact to hon. members of this House. I will not elaborate upon what the committee has said in its very able findings on that point, but it is sufficient to say that the committee sums it up with this statement:

It is our view that the existing provisions for appeal to the courts are, in general, adequate.

I say this with all respect to others who would hold contrary views, that where in these days we have to, as any government has to, be able to act and get business done, the reference of questions of fact to the courts, which actually are not qualified in very many ways—as the report says—to deal with these questions would be to create confusion compounded. There is no doubt about that.

As a matter of fact, we cannot take and refer the findings. Somebody has to have a say. If we refer the findings, say, of the labour relations board on questions of fact to the court, then the process would be endless, and it would be impossible to carry on business. This report is very informative on that point.

The only variation—I think I am correct in saying this—that the committee raises from the practices of today, in relation to the courts, is in relation to the cancellation of licences and franchises, and on that I must say I am inclined to agree.

The situation is this: The committee finds that in the granting of a licence or a franchise, where public convenience has to be given and taken into consideration, that is a matter on which the courts really are not qualified. They were not created for that purpose. Furthermore, that involves the character of the person on other matters which the report mentions, which actually are not matters upon which the court would be qualified to act.

As I say, it would only lead to confusion if the acts of boards and commissions in relation to those matters were referred to the courts.

On the other hand, a totally different situation is created when the board passes upon a certain thing, and finds that Mr. A. is serving public convenience when a licence is granted to him, and that his character is good. Decision on cancellation really can come only from something that the court is certainly qualified to pass upon—that is, the fact that he has carried on in a way in which he should, that he has not committed misdemeanors, or something of the sort, that would justify the cancellation of that licence or franchise.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the only point that I can see on which the committee report varies from the present practice. I think that, generally speaking, from the above we can all be pleased that the judicial and other safeguards that we have devised here in this Legislature to protect the Queen's subjects—to protect the man on the street—are found, generally speaking, to be pretty adequate.

Now, I would say, that again is the board's recommendation. I would like the hon. members of the House to look at it. We are not bound by the report of the committee. We should consider this very, very carefully, and if there are places where common sense would dictate alterations and changes, then by all means we should make them.

There are some cases to which I might refer very briefly, in which I might have some disagreement in the findings of the committee. Yet I must say that this matter I am about to refer to, I think, is only a difference in to whom the appeals should be made. I did make a reference to this the other day in discussing this matter with the press.

For instance, regarding changes in zoning by-laws, that is a very difficult matter. There have been some very great differences of opinion on it.

I would take the case of, for instance, the oil refinery down in Trafalgar township. Here is the procedure that is presently followed. First, we assume that a zoning by-law has been passed in a certain municipality and it is desired to change that. As I have said before to persons who have appealed in connection with these matters, I think it is unthinkable that we should not have procedures and methods by which we can change a zoning by-law, as long as it is not changed under duress and under undue influence. If it is changed as a matter of good sense and good judgment, then I think there should be a method of changing.

There are going to be changes and alterations in the growth of communities. I think the thing to do is to see that these things, when they are changed, are changed fairly. That, I think, is the gist of it.

If our procedures at the present time are not fair, if our procedures are open to the possibility of improvement, then I would say by all means let us improve them. Let us look at these things and see.

The procedure for amending it is roughly this. The municipal council passes a by-law making the change in the zoning by-law. This is very often preceded by a similar recommendation on the part of the local planning board. As a matter of fact I think, Mr. Speaker, where they do not have planning boards, they may pass a zoning by-law. But I should say that in places where there is a local planning board, then usually the council's amending by-law is preceded by a recommendation from the local planning board.

Secondly, after that the whole matter may be appealed to the Ontario municipal board where full public hearings are held.

Actually, from a practical standpoint, I am quite sure that no one would for a moment suggest that ministerial responsibilities should be carried so far as to say that those hearings should be held by the Minister or somebody deputized by him to hear them. As a matter of fact, it should be heard—as it is heard today—by a judicial body.

The third point is this, that if the board has made its findings, then—as it stands now—an appeal may be had to the executive council or cabinet under section 97 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

As I read the Gordon committee report its recommendation is that it should be made to the Minister. I could be wrong about this—but this is my interpretation that it should be made to the Minister.

But actually, as it stands, it is to the wider body, to the cabinet council where the Minister sits with his other colleagues and executive council.

If, in determining this matter, there are some amendments of that procedure required, then let us look at it and let us see, but that is the procedure at the present time. Now, concerning money or debenture by-laws, the procedure now is, first the council passes its by-laws, I think up to the second reading, deferring the third reading I believe until application is made to the municipal board.

Secondly, the municipal board hears the matter and takes into consideration all of the facts of the municipality's financial position, looking at everything past, present and future.

This is a provision which was introduced a number of years ago, in the depression days I believe, when the government of some of my hon. friends opposite was in office. It was introduced in the days when many municipalities found themselves virtually insolvent and were placed under supervision.

Now, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that in determining that matter of the municipality's financial strength and position, by a body which looks at the matter impartially, I think has a very great deal to be said for it.

Thirdly, I believe, technically, there has been an appeal to cabinet council under section 97 which is arguable, as I have said, as being the same thing as an appeal to the Minister which, of course, retains ministerial authority. Insofar as I am aware no appeals have been made under this provision, which probably indicates that the findings of the board have generally been held in high repute and high regard.

These are just some comments concerning those last two items that I would make upon this very valuable report before us. I should say, Mr. Speaker, that it is for the hon. members of this House to determine. As far as the government hon. members are concerned in connection with this report, I would invite their comments quite freely as to the matters upon which this very excellent report deals. I should say that it is with the historical background of this matter with which I was particularly interested and which I originally addressed myself.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I make some comments with respect to this report?

I would say that I think we are all in agreement that the report is in real need of further study. I think we are all concerned about some of the basic fundamentals of this legislative body and of all democratic legislative bodies.

For example, throughout the report there is reference made to the supremacy of the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, something that I think you particularly would be interested in. It does seem to me that in this area there may be real opportunity for further study. The report in itself touches on the subject of the supremacy of the Legislature. I think this is an historical and democratic process that is not fully understood. I quite admit my own weaknesses and ignorance on the subject which is not fully appreciated at this particular time.

It is something that I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, we give serious consideration to. I would think, Mr. Speaker, it might well be worth the appointment of even an independent commission to study the historical developments of this simple question of supremacy of Parliament.

It may seem to us a theoretical problem, but I think it is absolutely necessary from, firstly, an historical point of view and, secondly, from a very practical point of view, to gain some fundamental conception of what this Legislature is and what its responsibilities are.

We have heard the observations of the hon. Prime Minister. He has told us that this particular report is to be debated freely.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that what the hon. Prime Minister has said today in no way negates the suggestions he made heretofore. As I interpreted those suggestions, we have the assurance that a committee will be set up to proceed with a further study, not of this report only, but of the general problems presented in the particular report.

Mr. Speaker, my own convictions are that we should be free to debate this report now, during the Throne speech and at any opportune time during this sitting of the Legislature and that a select committee of the House should be set up to investigate not only this report but the general problems that have been suggested in the report.

The report as the hon. Prime Minister read it, and I have read it many times, certainly is not very conclusive in many respects, and acknowledges that it is not conclusive. The report says specifically that it was required to be made within a limited period of time. There are many problems that the investigators could not go into in detail, and on which the investigators deliberately refrained from being definitive.

The problems they raise; the questions of ministerial responsibility and financial accountability; of organizational association, if you will, and appeals, are certainly the bulwarks on which the report is built.

I think we can show some of the concern that I have by taking those several subjects and analyzing them for a moment.

When we talk about the report and suggest for a moment that this report vindicates the government, I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that that is the way to approach it. The hon. Prime Minister has suggested time and again that we are here to improve the organization of government in this legislative body in the province of Ontario. With deference, I would disagree with him in many respects.

I think the report is quite demonstrative of certain real weaknesses. For example, in conjunction with ministerial responsibility, it is all right to say we all acknowledge it, but I wonder if we do have real ministerial responsibility as the committee points out, when hon. cabinet Ministers are permitted to sit as chairmen of certain boards and certain commissions in the province. I think that, Mr. Speaker, is one question to which we have to direct real attention.

Personally, I would suggest that they should not, and I would suggest that we have to reform our concept of the legislative committee if we wish to pursue the ultimate that is desired in this report.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that what the report envisages is the opportunity to question government, whether it be in the form of a question period in this House or a question period at the committee level. When Ministers of the Crown who, understandably as government grows, become responsible for larger and larger departments, it is problematical whether those Ministers can make a proper explanation in the House or whether they should be required to be examined in committee fashion.

I do not know that we would want the wide open and breezy committee examinations that go on in the United States under a somewhat different form of government. But I would think that the democratic ideal certainly must be achieved. There must be the opportunity at some stage to question Ministers with respect to the administration of their specific departments in detail, and not in the formal and limited fashion that is allowed in debate.

I think this is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker, something again that might seem theoretical. But if we are really willing to do with this report what I think the commissioners intended—that is, use it as a base to move forward—certainly this is an area wherein we have to direct some real attention.

With respect to financial accountability, it did seem to me that the report was rather—I would not say extremely critical—but was gently critical if you will, of some of the things that we are doing. For example, I should think it was a direct—or maybe I should say an indirect—suggestion that, with respect to supplementary estimates, those supplementary estimates should be added to a particular department estimate for an ensuing year.

Mr. Speaker, to make myself clear—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Treasury board warrants.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, the treasury board warrants should, in fact, be added to a particular department's allotments for the next ensuing year.

To make myself clear, Mr. Speaker, we know that we pass supplementary estimates each year, estimates that permitted of expenditures of money that were not voted or authorized by the Legislature at the beginning of the fiscal year. At Ottawa, those extra expenditures, those treasury board warrants, are added to the next ensuing fiscal year. This is a very commendable thing, and it seems to me that this would add materially to our practical, and the public's practical, interpretation of our budget and our budgetary system.

For too long it has seemed to me, we have used the supplementary estimates as a means of covering up extra money that may have come in—additional revenues that were not expected—and artificially limiting our surplus or deficit.

Now, there will be more discussion about that subject, but it would seem to me that this is an area of criticism and, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the hon. Prime Minister will agree with this particular suggestion of the commissioners at pages, I think, 30 and 32, wherein they analyze or compare our system and the federal system. As I read the report, they certainly prefer the latter, and for myself I must say that I think it would be a substantial improvement.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to organization of function and appeals—and before I go on to those two subjects, I would make this passing observation, that I do not know that ministerial responsibility and financial accountability need any further study. Surely we are agreed that those are ends, and those are aims and democratic processes, that should be implemented. Also that our job at the present time should be to implement, insofar as we can, these specific principles. With respect to appeals and functional organization, I would think that is the area of study that could be assigned specifically to the select committee.

Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the observation of the hon. Prime Minister with respect to appeals. We all know the difficulties with respect to such boards as the workmen's compensation board and the labour relations board. But let us forget those two boards for the moment and think of other boards to whom the job of determining that—what is the phrase—in the public need and necessity, a licence should or should not be granted.

Now, that is a broad term of reference for a board charged with the responsibility of giving the man the right to make a livelihood through its determination of what is public need and necessity.

Firstly, certainly, we should assure that our legislation explains, insofar as it is able, its concept of what it intends public needs and necessity to be. I think we have been far too lenient in this respect. We have given boards the opportunity to make that determination in their own discretion, and it should be our discretion and our determination.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that herein we have an opportunity for improvement. I am quite prepared to acknowledge, as the commissioner suggests, that when the hospitalization commission was set up, we were into a new area, if you will. We did not know exactly what it would be required to do.

But with experience we gain that knowledge. I think our Act should be amended, regularly and annually, with the knowledge of how we intend a commission or board to interpret such phrases as "public need and convenience."

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest very definitely that all reports of all boards and commissions be in writing, and that they be filed in a central registry, and that they be made available to the public. It does seem to me, in this respect at least, that we would demonstrate a willingness to make available to the public at large, and to the legislative hon. members, some idea of what the boards actually are doing, and the interpretations they are making, with respect to the problems which come before them.

And with respect to appeals, Mr. Speaker, as I said, the matter of compensation and labour boards present individual problems. But I do not think that we should be side-tracked on the whole question of appeals simply because of the problems in those particular areas.

It may be that for special reasons there should, or should not, be appeal. But, generally, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that any board that is performing a semi-judicial function, and has the authority within itself to licence a man to do, or not to do, a certain thing, should not be arbitrary.

Either there should be recourse from such a decision through the responsible hon. Minister—again there is the question of ministerial responsibility—or to the court. This is an area of real study. This is an area wherein the commissioner has said that all they have done is scratched the surface. They have examined some boards and some commissions but it is not intended to be, and they deliberately suggest that it is not, an all-inclusive study.

Mr. Speaker, there are other specific problems that we must consider.

One, which seems to me to be a violation of the very question of legislative supremacy, is the manner in which the liquor control board is privileged to increase its levy on the consumers of alcoholic beverages during the calendar year, and at a time other than at the budget determination.

Certainly, if ever there was an instance of taxation without representation, this is it. When Lincoln said "government of the people, by the people, for the people," what he meant at heart was that this legislative body should determine how much money is going to be collected from the people of Ontario during any particular fiscal year, and that is all.

I, for one, feel that this report again, in enunciating that same principle, is being critical of the government and the permission that this government had given to certain boards, in effect, to do our jobs. I do not think delegation of authority is ever, or should ever be, extended to the taxing and taxation field.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by the hon. Prime Minister that the public accounts committee will be privileged to hear the representations of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) with respect to the operation of his department.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this is not going to be the extent of our examination of this report in committee form. I hope that what the hon. Prime Minister intends thereby is the opportunity to learn a little more about the operation of The Department of the Provincial Treasurer.

But I do not think that is the type of committee that should study the problem of policy. It should study the question of the premise of this Legislature to delegate its authority and such like. For that reason, I emphasize and underscore again the fact that this particular subject is required to be studied, in my opinion, quietly, intelligently, and in a scholarly fashion by the select committee of this Legislature which can do much good.

I am not here for the sake of criticizing only. I frankly and honestly believe that there is much to be done, and I think this is the first step, but it is not the only step. We have not attained the end by means of this particular report.

There are other areas wherein I think the report should be criticized.

For example, I was disappointed that the report did not take a more fundamental approach to the question of the civil servants. There, I think, they reflect the viewpoint of the government, a viewpoint which has been expressed very often.

But if we are to be the one legislative body that is out ahead of all other legislative bodies, it would seem to me that certainly, in this area of civil service and bargaining, we should likewise be out ahead. I suggest that this is not the case, and I, for one, am surprised that the report did not recommend other than it did in this respect.

In the report itself, Mr. Speaker, there was reference to the amalgamation of departments according to function. It would be interesting to know of the government whether there are any plans to amalgamate certain departments of government, so that they may be more functional.

These are the specifics that I think government must answer at this particular time.

As the hon. Prime Minister has said, there has been an opportunity on their part to study this report for some considerable time.

I know that in one respect they did amalgamate part of The Department of Planning and Development and The Department of Municipal Affairs. I do not think anybody would disagree with the particular formation of that new department and the personnel.

But, Mr. Speaker, I was amazed to find that this particular reformation, if you will, took place and was announced outside of this Legislature at a time when this Legislature had already been convened to meet a few days hence. Now that reorganization cannot be effected without amendments to the appropriate Planning Act and the appropriate Municipal Act.

I think this was a violation of one of the fundamentals that was underscored in this report, and that is the supremacy of this legislative body. Mr. Speaker, I would say it would be quite in order for the government to say that it was going to consider this, or that it intended, or would like to, or would, put it in the speech from the Throne. But to announce to the public at large in Ontario, 5 days before this legislative body was convened, that it had reorganized these departments was, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, a violation of the very fundamentals that are outlined in this particular report.

There are one or two other observations that I would make. The report made some substantial reference to Hydro. I think in its references to Hydro it used that particular department as one of the few departments that was in a position to make some analysis, intending, I would expect, that a committee of those who would pursue the subject would make similar analysis of other departments and other boards.

With respect to Hydro, Mr. Speaker, I was surprised that the report represented an opinion that I think is contrary to the opinion that has been expressed in this House, particularly by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), who, as I have interpreted him over the years, has felt that Hydro is a partnership of the municipalities, and this legislative body really has no direct legal control over that partnership.

I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I was very much impressed with the hon. Minister's explanation last year. Frankly, it seemed logical at the time. But this report, Mr. Speaker, would seem to be in direct contradiction to that position, and I think it is one to which we must direct our attention. I think it is a fundamental one.

Personally, I must say, after reading the report and the particular argument that is made in the report, that the province is responsible for the financing of the hydro-electric power commission to the extent at least that the credit of this province is put in jeopardy on behalf of the commission.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Quiet, quiet.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I said that, my hon. friend—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I would tell the hon. Minister that it is not my intention to quarrel with him on this score. I am simply saying that last year, his position, as I understood it, was that this legislative body really had no legal right to control the policy and activities of Hydro because, in fact, Hydro was an association of municipalities throughout the province, and that, basically, the trust arrangements that were set up were such that the real owners of Hydro were the municipalities, and that the commission itself acted as nothing more than trustees.

I think he used, as his illustration, the instance where if Hydro, for some unknown reason, would be required to be liquidated, then any surplus funds would be required to be distributed among municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The 351 municipalities, that is correct. For rural Ontario, it is incorrect, and for northern Ontario it is correct, except for 9 municipalities.

Mr. Wintermeyer: My hon. friend is making a representation—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, this is on a question to which I arise, and my hon. friend is suggesting that I said things last year which I did not.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I try to clarify this? At page 77, the report reads:

The hydro commission began as a co-operative trust for certain municipalities, and it is argued by some responsible people that it should still be regarded primarily as a trustee for the municipalities rather than another agency of the provincial government.

There is a tradition originating with the very beginnings of Hydro, under the leadership and inspiration of Sir Adam Beck, that the hydro commission should be kept out of provincial politics in a partisan sense.

For these reasons a somewhat questioning attitude of fear of unwise or uninformed interference in Hydro affairs is sometimes displayed by its officials, by the Ontario municipal electrical association, and by members of the public, when consideration is being given to the control which the government and the Legislature should properly exercise over the operations of the hydro commission.

Such an attitude is understandable when one recalls the upset of Hydro. While it is true that Hydro was organized originally as a trust for certain municipalities, and that these municipalities have, over the years, been building up a substantial financial equity in the system, nevertheless the Legislature has always retained its ultimate control over the commission.

The commission exists by virtue of an Act of the Legislature, and its power may be varied at any time by the Legislature. The commissioners are appointed by, and at the pleasure of, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, that is, by the government of the day.

In our view, it is right and proper that this should be so. There should never be any thought of the Legislature abdicating its responsibility for the hydro commission for two important reasons among others.

Firstly, it is only the provincial government that is in a position to act on, and to collect in behalf of, the municipalities that are interested in Hydro; and secondly, and probably more significantly, the financial credit of the entire province is at stake in borrowing the funds necessary to finance the Ontario commission's undertaking and development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that all hon. members of this Legislature have read the report, and in some detail, and it is not my intention to pursue this or to read further except to specifically remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the balance of the report devoted to Hydro the commissioners make, I think, a very intelligible observation with respect to ministerial responsibility.

As I understand it, if I may simplify it, we simply say this, if we are to understand ministerial responsibility as the responsibility of, first, the Legislature delegated to the Minister, and then to subordinate bodies. Then it is inconceivable, in that sense, that a Minister of the Crown should be subordinate on any commission to any chairman, and they raise serious doubts as to whether or not a member of the cabinet should sit as a vice-president of this particular commission.

I have real sympathy with it. I think they are right in principle. They do acknowledge, I will agree, that in practice there is a problem, the problem of liaison between this body, this House and the commission. But it is something to which we must give real thought, and I would hope that the government and, in particular, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources has given some thought to this particular problem. I would expect that they are prepared to state what the government policy is at the present time with respect to this particular problem. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would point out to my hon. colleague that the Ontario municipal electrical association—that is, the association representing the 370-odd municipalities—have taken a view and have represented to me very strongly. That was before the report was delivered. It was at the time of the formation of The Department of Energy Resources, and they represented to me very strongly that the traditional relationship should not be disturbed—the one which has been mentioned—by which a member of the government sits on the commission as a vice-chairman.

Now all I say is this: that in creating public opinion, that situation has to be met. Certainly the Hydro municipalities take a very strong view in connection with that, and I think it only fair to consider these people as partners.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, of course it is only fair to consider all people's observations. There is no question in the world about that. But if we are talking principle, as I think this report is talking principle, then what in the world does ministerial responsibility mean, if a Minister is subordinate to an appointed official? I think it is as simple as that.

Now, I realize that in practice, and in the practical level, there is a problem here. Of course, we are dealing with an agency that is almost as large as the government of Ontario itself. But we must remember this, Mr. Speaker, that in 1947, when the Act was revised, I think the intention then was quite specific—that is, to set up a general manager who was responsible for day-to-day operation of the hydro-electric power commission, and that the commissioners were responsible for policy.

But it certainly puts a Minister of the Crown in a very embarrassing position where the legislative body that he represents is not the determinant of the policy that is being set, or with which he may be at variance or be in conflict.

The only point I am trying to make is that we in this Legislature, once and for all, must stand up and say that this is the supreme body, that we have, and should have, the right to determine the policy of Hydro, and that we should have a say in its financial operation. Now I think—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to my hon. friend that, in relation to ministerial responsibility, it all depends on the way one wants to look at it.

Now I have never regarded a Minister—and that includes myself, either when I was a Minister in the former administration or as a Prime Minister—as ever being infallible. I must admit that I see no objections myself, from a standpoint of responsibility, if one wants to translate that into infallibility of a Minister being a member of a board which does not follow his viewpoint.

As a matter of fact, I have a good deal of sympathy for that myself.

Now perhaps that is not in the concept of ministerial responsibility from the standpoint that everything a Minister says or does is right. I do not think it is. I have found that myself. I, quite frankly, say—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister surely has not read this report.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that in the report?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, we all agree that everybody is human. There is no question in the world about that, and errors are obvious. But the thing that we are trying to establish is just what this Legislature is, and what its relationship is with Hydro.

I think they make an excellent point. They illustrate the same thing with respect to chairmen of various boards. Are they to be in the difficult position where they are required to take the suggestion of a particular board, and make of those suggestions government policy, or should the Minister be in a position to differ with the board and say this is government policy?

Maybe we are getting into the area of theory, but I think it is good theory, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to hon. members that what we really require to do in this particular instance is to give some thought to this basic question of supremacy; to give some thought to the purposes of a democratic form such as this legislative body, and what it should be doing. I do suggest, in all seriousness, that it might be of great value to us to have the assistance of some appointed experts.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that free discussion of the report be permitted throughout the session, and an assurance be made that a select committee will be privileged to go into the subject in a fashion that is required. I do not think this is the type of subject that one can debate to its end fully in this legislative body, but requires some substantial study.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I would like some answer from the government with respect to the committee, and the opportunity, as the hon. Prime Minister himself said, of hon. members of the Legislature, and the public at large—in a complicated system such as we have at the present time—to pursue the operation of individual departments.

Now, I would suggest that in Ottawa at least, there is the opportunity of a free question period during an allotted time during each week. An alternative may well be an opportunity during committee sessions to question the respective hon. Ministers of the Crown with respect to their individual operations.

Mr. Speaker, these are the observations that I would make. I underscore them entirely with this: that there is need in my opinion for a legislative study. This Legislature did not authorize the report or the investigation. It was a report to government. Now, I think with this knowledge before us, the Legislature should be permitted to pursue an investigation of these very important subjects.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): May I ask one question?

I was intensely interested in listening to the hon. leader of the Opposition on Hydro matters, and I was wondering if he would answer a question.

Was he suggesting that probably the chairman of the hydro commission should be a Minister of the government?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions asking the question seriously?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly was not.

I think that very point is made, that the chairman of the commission should not be a member of government.

But the problem that arises is simply this: If the commissioners are to determine policy, then what position is a member of cabinet or government on that particular commission? At least if this legislative body is supreme, it should be in a position to tell the commissioner what the policy should and should not be. Then no Minister would be put in the humiliating position where he is in conflict with the commissioner, or is not in a position to exercise government or this legislative body's opinion on that committee.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, may I speak just for a moment to the point which the hon. leader of the Opposition has raised? I would like to say to him, as far as the government's policy in relation to the report in connection with Hydro is concerned, that the matter is under very active and intensive study. I am sure that the hon. leader of the Opposition realizes that this is an extremely serious problem. It is, perhaps, one of the largest problems to be dealt with in this report, which I think the committee itself acknowledged.

I know the hon. leader of the Opposition realizes that there are a great many ramifications and interests involved in this matter, and quite properly so.

My hon. friend referred to some material that I had presented to the Legislature last year and, if I might, I would like very briefly, and just in a moment or two, to reiterate and put into some perspective the relative positions of both sides in any issue, in relation to Hydro, which I respectfully submit to the House.

1. I mentioned that there were 10 logical interests the Legislature had in Ontario Hydro as a commission. I mentioned this last year at page 255 and following, on February 10.

The first was that electricity in the province is a monopoly, and as such no government can stand idly by while any monopoly—particularly one as essential as electricity—be allowed one way or another without some form of government supervision. I think in that connection the hon. leader of the Opposition would be in complete agreement.

2. I pointed out that the province is the creditor of the hydro-electric power commission, at least in 1959, to approximately the extent of $45 million. As my hon. friend will recall, in the early days of Ontario Hydro it was the tendency of the then government to advance, to Ontario Hydro, monies from time to time in effect as loans whereas, subsequently—I think in the days of Mr. Hepburn—the advances ceased to be loans and thereafter as I recall became guarantees of the Hydro paper.

3. I pointed out to the House that, as of this time last year, the hon. Prime Minister was pointing out that when Hydro borrowed money in the American market it borrowed directly on the credit of the province. That is to say that when the province borrows the money out of the country, as opposed to when the money is borrowed in Canada, it is borrowed by Hydro and guaranteed by the province.

When I spoke at this time last year, there was about $375 million which this government, on behalf of this Legislature, had borrowed directly in the American market on behalf of Hydro, and therefore it was a direct debt of the Legislature and of the government of Ontario and its people.

4. I pointed out last year that the province had guaranteed some very large amount of the debt of Ontario Hydro. My recollection is that I said at the time that it was—at least Hansard reports that it was—$1,500 million, which is $1 billion, 500 million. I thought the total indebtedness of Hydro was about $1 billion, 800 million, and I think, including the amount directly borrowed in the Americas, therefore that figure, within $50 million, prevails today—that we have guaranteed the indebtedness of Ontario Hydro to the extent of approximately $1 billion, say $600 million.

Therefore we quite logically have a very great interest in the operations of Ontario Hydro, because its rates are predicated to obtain a return which will liquidate that debt over a 40-year period.

5. I pointed out also that the province owned part of the equity in the Hydro system itself, particularly in northern Ontario where, except for 9 municipalities, Hydro is carried on for the direct account and credit of the province of Ontario.

6. I pointed out that this House has a considerable interest in the affairs of Hydro in connection with its operations in rural Ontario, be they in the north or be they in the south.

7. In addition, I pointed out that the future borrowings of Ontario Hydro look to be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4.5 billion or so over a 20-year period, which is a considerable amount of money. Those borrowings must be meshed with the borrowings of this province because there are only certain funds available in the bond market to finance the capital undertakings which are beyond the income of either the commission or the government.

8. I pointed out that, under The Power Commission Act, there are a number of specific appointments or controls which the Lieutenant - Governor - in - council has: the appointment of the commissioners, as the hon. leader of the Opposition has pointed out; the appointment of its auditor; the power contracts that it enters into with the municipalities of which there are approximately 350; the purchase of private power companies; expropriation of land; flooding and water diversion; approval of loans that Hydro makes, and new power developments.

9. I also pointed out that this Legislature had advanced to Ontario Hydro over $112 million for rural extensions in northern and southern Ontario.

10. I suggested to this House that, in the final analysis, it was really to the hon. members of this Legislature that the public generally looked for redress in relation to many matters pertaining to the conduct of these affairs.

I pointed out, however, that one must consider the interests of the municipalities. They actually, as the report points out, are the legal owners of the equity in the system, and they have a large interest in that equity; and secondly, that they have an association to which they all belong, the Ontario municipal electrical association, and it has been very active in the conduct of affairs of the municipalities.

After all, the third point is that the municipalities have, in their own systems, invested about $500 million, and they have plowed back about $225 million into the system.

Fourth, they are the biggest customers of Ontario Hydro. If they did not take power from Ontario Hydro, Ontario Hydro could not exist. So they have these very great and extensive reasons which I pointed out, as I said to the hon. leader of the Opposition on pages 255 and 256 in last year's Hansard.

These are still the relative interests which have to be considered in any determination of this matter. I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that the government has been giving this report very serious study, and continues to do so. In doing so, it is our fervent hope that we will be able to come to resolve the problems which the report raises.

There are difficulties, and I am sure the hon. leader of the Opposition realizes that, were he on the commission, many of these problems which are traditional—and members of his party operated under the same disabilities and problems before, and met them with great courage and foresight.

But at the same time we are studying the matter, and I hope that in due course we will be able to come up with a decision which will be generally accepted as the wise one. In that regard I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that we will profit very greatly by any suggestions and help in this connection which he may have.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in contributing to this debate, my observations are going to be within the context of the brief comment I made last Wednesday when the hon. Prime Minister first raised the question of the Gordon committee.

In our belief, the Gordon committee was a good first step, I think the best possible first step. It was better to have these problems of government organization examined by people who could do it in a somewhat detached fashion—people who have the background of academic experience and administrative experience that these 3 commissioners had.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that our task now is to examine the specific proposals which have been made in this report with regard to each department, and with regard to reclaiming some greater supervisory role over many of these boards and commissions that have tended to just drift away from control. Our task is to reclaim them for the various government departments.

It seems to me that, to do this, we need what the hon. Prime Minister has indicated is in his mind, namely the establishment of a select committee which can take each of these in turn, examine the detail, and come up with something specific to which this House can give consideration.

Now, as I see it, the purpose of this debate is not to get into these details, the purpose is to take a look at overall principles and other overall considerations.

There is just one comment I would like to make with regard to what the hon. leader of the Opposition has said, and that is that I do not think there is further need for academic study. If that was implicit in his remarks, I would just query his proposal. It seems to me that we have enough in the report. The task is to take these proposals as a general chart of the future, and to consider how they can be applied specifically.

Furthermore, the longer this debate goes on, the clearer it becomes that there is such a great area of common agreement that not very much purpose is going to be served in debating at very great length. The task now is to get at the application of the proposals or some revision of them.

Therefore, I want to consider a few over-riding factors that emerge from what is said in the report and, in some instances, what is omitted from the report. The first one would have to do with the question of appeals.

As appeals apply to the Ontario labour relations board and workmen's compensation board, there was a great deal of confusion when this report came out first. I think in all fairness one can make a case by trying to match some of the comments in various parts of the report to justify that conclusion.

But I think it has been clarified now, and there is no point in going back and rehashing it. In fact, as the hon. Prime Minister indicated, in the Toronto Globe and Mail under a by-line of Wilf List, of January 26, in an interview with Mr. Gordon, this situation was clarified. I think it is well to get this on the record:

Walter Gordon, chairman of the committee on government organization, made clear in an interview yesterday that neither he nor the committee favour a court review on the facts or merits of the case before either board. The committee recommended dropping the privative clauses in the legislation governing the two boards. The committee's recommendation was based on the fact that, in face of such clauses, the courts have ruled that they have the right to deal with complaints that the boards have exceeded their jurisdiction or denied natural justice.

Said Mr. Gordon, "It was felt that the privative clause was redundant, it was a matter of tidying up the legislation."

I am not a lawyer, and therefore I have not had the experience before the courts as to what results might flow from the removal from the legislation of these privative clauses. But I am informed by people who are lawyers, and who have had considerable experience before the courts—particularly with reference to labour relations—that it is not necessarily true that, since the privative clause has been found to be redundant in reference to matters of jurisdiction and natural justice, therefore we can just dismiss it from the Act, and nothing will happen.

In fact, I am told that many judges or magistrates argue that if the Legislature adds or removes something from the Act, there must have been a reason for doing it, that it is axiomatic that there was a reason for doing it. They argue that, while we may accept the reasoning of Mr. Gordon in his report, it will not necessarily follow that a judge or magistrate will have that reasoning before him when he is making his judgment.

In fact, it is certain that a counsel, in the interest of his client, would come before a magistrate and a judge and argue: "This privative clause has been removed, it was believed before that this privative clause blocked appeals; since it has been removed, now the door is open for appeals."

Therefore, I would just like to suggest to the government, and to the House, in its consideration of this matter that maybe the logic of Mr. Gordon's final comments can be put in complete reverse.

His final comment was that: "It was felt that the privative clause was redundant, and it was a matter of tidying up the legislation."

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the privative clause in there has not blocked appeals in cases where everybody agrees appeals are justified, namely with reference to exceeding jurisdiction or violating natural justice, at least it has implanted in the public mind that, on the facts and merits of the case, it does block appeals, then what is wrong with leaving it in there?

Maybe by tidying up the legislation we will open the door that I assume everybody now is in agreement should not be opened up. Certainly, with the explanation that Mr. Gordon has now given, the committee's intent is clear.

I was very interested to hear the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon say that he goes along with the report, too, because I sat on a select committee on labour with 8 of his hon. colleagues, 5 of whom were lawyers—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He is pretty good himself at—

Mr. MacDonald: —and of those 5 lawyers there was only one whom I could persuade to go along with me on the proposition that we should not open up appeals, and the other 4 wanted the appeals.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member did not persuade him—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will not argue with the hon. gentleman, but I will bet him one of my favourite plug nickels that if I had agreed to the proposition that appeals should be opened up, he would have agreed too.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not think so.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will let the matter rest there.

Now, on the question of appeals, Mr. Speaker, with reference to boards other than the workmen's compensation board and the labour relations board, I must confess that I am still open-minded on the proposition.

I am interested that the Gordon committee says that they feel that the procedure now on appeals is satisfactory. But it has been my feeling, in view of the public's reaction to the operation of other boards, that conceivably an appeal should be considered.

It seems to me that we have this fundamental difference:

In the labour relations board, for example, we have a board that is set up so that it is almost certain that the case is going to be considered in all of its aspects. We have a board with a neutral chairman, with representatives of labour and of management. But with other boards which operate on a somewhat different basis, which certainly are not constituted in what I may describe as a "balanced" membership, there is a widespread dissatisfaction.

In fact there is a widespread belief—and I am not arguing the merits or demerits of this for a moment—that some of these boards operate almost in the fashion of a kangaroo court. In going across this province, one can hardly get into a single constituency without hearing serious complaints about the operation of these boards, and the one heading the list usually is the liquor licencing board.

So, without coming to any final conclusion at the moment, personally I would be open-minded on some further consideration of the merit of an appeal from these other boards.

There is another overall consideration that I would like to draw to the attention of the House. While the report discussed, at considerable length, the undesirability of privative clauses in certain of the statutes, the committee never seemed to have discovered that most of the welfare legislation of the province contains similar clauses, making the administrative decisions of departmental officials final and not subject to appeals in the courts or in any other way.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, the administration of welfare legislation requires a great many discretionary decisions on the part of departmental officials. So it is inevitable that, since it is not possible to prescribe these regulations so they will fit every single case, there must be some flexibility in the interpretation of this legislation.

But in any disputed decision the applicant is always at a serious disadvantage, because he comes as a single individual faced with the great complexity of the law and what appears to him to be the bureaucracy of the department.

I think it is rather significant, Mr. Speaker—something that this Legislature should give some consideration to—that in many other jurisdictions appeals are granted. For example, in The Social Security Act of the United States, it is required that all programmes, to be eligible for federal sharing in costs, must include established procedures for appeal against the decisions of administrative officials. All of the states do make provisions for hearings and appeals.

Now, I am not suggesting here that, in considering the propositions of appeals in welfare cases, we should go to the courts; obviously, that is not the answer. But it does seem to me that, in these cases, there is a sore need for the subject to be reviewed by some responsible tribunal versed in welfare legislation, but independent of the officials of the department who first consider the application and render a decision.

I would also draw to the attention of the House that there is a precedent for this in Canada, without going off to the United States. It is available in The Unemployment Insurance Act where there is provision establishing local appeal tribunals and giving ultimate recourse to an official umpire, a judicial officer whose judgment is not questioned.

Then there is another matter of overall consideration that the hon. leader of the Opposition touched on, and I just want to underline it—this question of taxation without representation, or the control of this Legislature over some of the monies that are levied by commissions. The report points out, for example, in the year 1957 something over $56 million were levied and became available to the consolidated revenue through the liquor control board of Ontario.

This, Mr. Speaker, is clearly a form of taxation. These taxes, however, are not voted by the Legislature, they are not controlled by them, in fact they can be changed during the course of the year by decision of the liquor control board.

Here, obviously, is at least a prima-facie case for suggesting that the imposition of taxes in this way constitutes taxation without representation and is a grave breach of what has long been considered one of the fundamental constitutional rights of Parliament.

In fact that right was first stated in Magna Carta. It was specifically put forth in the Petition of Rights in 1628, and it was written into British Law in the Bill of Rights in 1689.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, constitutional lawyers might have a real field day here if they wanted to move into it, because it might well be found that they could test this levy by the liquor control board before the courts and find that it was illegal.

Certainly it is an affront to the rights of the Legislature that there should be an imposition of a tax, which brings into the consolidated revenue fund this year close to $70 million, and yet we, in the Legislature, have nothing to say about it at all.

One of the counter arguments advanced in this connection is that this is not a tax, that it is profit. But the interesting thing is that, if we go back to the original statements of this fundamental principle—in the Declaration of Rights, for example—it spells it out as not just taxes but “levying money for the use of the Crown.”

Whatever be the procedure for levying that money, surely it cannot be denied that the money levied by the liquor control board is for use of the Crown, because it comes into the consolidated revenue. Therefore, it is a levy which should be authorized by this Legislature.

There is also, of course, the question of the issuance of special warrants that the hon. leader of the Opposition referred to and dealt with. For the moment, I merely note these, and let the matter rest there.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn finally to another area in which the Gordon committee did not propose, in my view, adequate answers for achieving what admittedly was one of the prime objectives of its whole examination: namely, restoring the supremacy of Parliament, or the supremacy of the Legislature.

It is all very well, Mr. Speaker, to reorganize departments and boards so as to achieve greater efficiency, and to restore responsibility to the departments and to the hon. Minister. But the ultimate safeguard is to restore accountability to this Legislature. The ultimate safeguard for presumably what we are after in this whole re-examination of government is to restore the supremacy of this Legislature.

The Gordon committee has suggested some things that would contribute to the fulfilment of this objective. I was interested, for example, that the hon. Prime Minister, in his initial remarks, commented on the growth of government, and indicated that this is one of the problems that provoked this re-examination.

Well, it seems to me that if we are going to restore accountability to the Legislature, one way in which it can, and must be done—and this is an old straw that we are threshing—is that this Legislature must sit for something more than 8 or 10 weeks in the year.

In fact, the hon. Prime Minister has acknowledged the need for a good many years, but in a fashion characteristic of this government, they have to acknowledge it for 5 or 6 years before they can get into action.

Some 3 or 4 years ago, I remind the House, at the time when we were considering the raising of the indemnity of hon. members, one of the major arguments advanced by the hon. Prime Minister was that we would have to adopt the practice of fall as well as spring sessions.

It seems to me that, with the growth of government, with the growth of budgets so that today—as has been pointed out so many times in this House—we have a provincial budget which is now as large as the federal budget in the second half of the 1930's, it is impossible to re-establish the supremacy of the Legislature if we are going to sit for only some 8 to 10 weeks in the year.

I hope, therefore, that, without too much further consideration of this, we can get some action from the government because they sit in the driver's seat.

However, if we are going to restore the supremacy of Parliament and the accountability to this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a two-fold objective here: first, how the hon. members can be enabled to get adequate information, and, secondly, how then can they be enabled to use this information effectively. This is basically the problem.

Now, there are many ways of doing it. For example, an Opposition hon. member—or an hon. member of the government side of the House to the extent that they use these privileges—can ask questions. We can ask questions by putting them on the order paper and wait for a couple of months to get the reply which perchance may be given before the House prorogues.

I am very encouraged by the fact that in this House they are, apparently, restoring to some degree the practice of asking questions before the orders of the day. But even with these avenues open, it is a laborious procedure and not very much information can be elicited.

During the estimates there is a greater flexibility and opportunity to get information. Further there are the annual reports of the departments which we can sit down and peruse, if we have the capacity and the interest to stick with them until we have absorbed everything. This, in the rush of an hon. member's life and business, is normally not possible.

Finally, there is the public accounts committee which, I think, very significantly, the Gordon committee suggests should become an operative committee again instead of what has been the procedure for some years, namely, of an inactive committee.

Certainly, if it is going to become an active committee as the committee suggests, the hon. Prime Minister will have to give further consideration to the proposition that the public accounts committee is not just a committee that comes into operation when somebody makes charges and these charges have to be examined.

It seems to me that the essence here is that we must have a continuous examination that goes on as a regular routine. Only in that way can the public accounts committee fulfil its historic role. For some reason or other that historic role seems to have been lost sight of in this Legislature in the last 10 years.

There is another way of achieving some of the objective of restoring the supremacy of the Legislature, and that is through our standing committee on government commissions.

I do not know what exactly was in the mind of my predecessor, Mr. Jolliffe, when he made the recommendation, or made the motion, that the hon. Prime Minister has referred to, in setting up the standing committee on government commissions some 10 years or so ago, but I am convinced, without having discussed the matter with him, that what has happened in the intervening period has not fulfilled what was in his mind.

In fact, this has been one of the most frustrating and exasperating committees in the Legislature, in my experience in the last 4 or 5 years. At times, it has become almost ludicrous. I recall the experience two years ago when, of the 5 or 6 times that the committee met during the session, we spent one-and-a-half meetings examining how the script should be rewritten for wrestling, whether the referees should wear clean shirts or dirty shirts, and then for the remaining half of that morning session we turned to Hydro, and in half an hour we considered the business of Hydro, an organization with a debt of $1,800 million. It just revealed how ludicrously inadequate the whole procedure is.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I suppose the hon. members were satisfied with Hydro and dissatisfied with wrestling.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that a little more examination of Hydro might have proven to even some of the hon. members on the other side of the House that they would not be quite so satisfied. In any—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Well, we wrestled with the problems.

Mr. MacDonald: However, in reference to standing committees, Mr. Speaker, there is another kind of standing committee that I would like to suggest for consideration, and that is a standing committee that would deal specifically with those agencies of the Crown which are known normally as Crown corporations. These boards and commissions that the Gordon committee was looking into fall into two categories. There is one that is just an administrative body, but there are others which are businesses. They are, in effect, operating a business and, in some instances, as the hon. Prime Minister has pointed out, it is big business, such as the $150 million or $200 million in the case of the hospital services commission.

In many other jurisdictions, they have established a standing committee on Crown corporations which hears each year a detailed presentation and discussion of the annual report of these commissions. An opportunity is provided for really delving into the operation of these commissions, or these Crown corporations, to get a clearer picture of their operations, and whether or not they are living up to the general policies that have been laid down by the government under whose direction they come.

I know, for example, in the province of Saskatchewan in the last 10 years that the standing committee on Crown corporations is one of the most active committees in the Legislature and it examines, in a very detailed fashion, the annual reports of these Crown corporations.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No wonder, they are nearly all in bad shape, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not in bad shape. This is the kind of outmoded fact and figure that Mr. Harry Robbins is providing to some of these innocent backbenchers here, and hon. members ought to get this straightened up. The hon. Prime Minister is 10 years out of date.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is reading his speech, be careful.

Mr. MacDonald: However—these are notes.

Mr. Grossman: They are notes when he reads them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I also draw attention to the fact—if Saskatchewan, as usual raises all these emotional overtones—that in the British House in the last 10 years or so there has been very active consideration given to how Parliament can have a more detailed and effective supervisory role over Crown corporations.

Whether or not we do it by a standing committee, or whether it is done as part of the job of the public accounts committee—these are alternatives—I think this is something we should give thought to.

However, there are two final proposals that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to achieve our overall objective in the re-examination of government, namely, the restoring of the supremacy of the Legislature.

These two proposals were made in a brief submitted to the Gordon committee by spokesmen of the party that I have the honour to lead in this province. Neither of them appeared in the report, but I would like to suggest that this House should give some consideration to them.

One of the problems we face in government today is that the party in power has access to all of the government departments, they have the means of getting information—all of the details and facts and figures they require. I know that, theoretically, we in the Opposition have this same right. But in getting the facts and figures from people who, in many instances, must shape the policies and administer them, often we find they are less frank and free with Opposition hon. members. This is not good enough for meeting the informational needs of the Legislature, and particularly the Opposition of the Legislature, which has a very important role to play in guaranteeing accountability for all that goes on in government.

Let me quote 5 or 6 paragraphs here with regard to one proposal that was made in the CCF brief to the Gordon committee:

Accountability on financial matters is an integral part of the democratic control but it is not the whole story. It is quite conceivable that, even where a department or an agency is spending its funds in strict accordance with the law, it is nevertheless not discharging its responsibility in a manner consonant with the public interest or the intentions of the Legislature.

It is quite conceivable, too, that power and responsibilities may not have been defined entirely satisfactorily in the first instance, and that re-examination, in the light of experience, might lead to important modifications.

We believe, therefore, that the members of the Legislature should be provided with independent information about the general operations of government departments and agencies just as they received independent information on financial matters through the public accounts.

For this purpose we propose a body, which we will call a secretariat of the Legislature, should be established. This secretariat would be a servant of the Legislature and not of the government. Its functions would be to review the activities of the government departments and agencies and to report on their adequacies and efficiencies to the Legislature.

We do not suggest that it should review every department and agency every year, but we believe it should cover them all over a period of time and that, in addition, it should undertake such special studies as the Legislature might order.

Needless to say, we think it should be provided with adequate staff to carry out its important duties.

Now, without going into any further detail on this, Mr. Speaker, this is a proposal which, when it was submitted to the Gordon committee, evoked considerable interest among editorial writers across the province. I think that it is one that should receive further consideration.

But finally, even if we do have a secretariat of the Legislature which is going to create this greater balance between government and Opposition resources, there is the final fact that, if legislative accountability is going to be established, the Opposition parties themselves must be assisted to do a more effective job.

Now, without getting into political overtones, it has become a rule rather than the exception that Oppositions tend to be small in all Legislatures.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Is that not a good thing?

Mr. MacDonald: It is not a good thing, but it is a fact. Take a look at the Legislatures across this country, and even at the federal government level, where we had an Opposition that was very small when the Liberals were in and where, in the process of a year, we have an Opposition that is relatively very small once again.

It seems to me that if we are interested in restoring accountability of administration of government to the Legislature, of restoring that supremacy, we have to make Oppositions more effective. When parties are in Opposition they always talk about this, but why when they get into government they seem to forget about it, I do not know. The Opposition cannot do its job on the picayune resources with which they have to operate. In this House, for example, the total amount of money that is made available to the Opposition for research, and other administrative needs, is approximately $15,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I insist once again, this is ludicrous. The salary of one Deputy Minister, in many instances, is approximately $15,000.

I repeat, the government has the whole resources of all the departments. Theoretically, we, in the Opposition, have access to the resources of the departments. But without going into the detail of it, I think that every hon. member of this House will concede that it is very difficult for the Opposition to be able to use those resources in the same way that the government can. And if the Opposition is going to—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member should have been in Opposition when those people over there were in power.

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind, that is ancient history.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was really something.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, let me remind the hon. Prime Minister that when his colleagues were in Opposition in Ottawa, one of the constant themes that they pounded every year was that the Opposition did not have the resources to do the job, and the significant thing is that when they get into power, on this—as on so many other things—they do not do any better than the Liberals. They have done nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say to the hon. member that here we do the very best in Canada, and he can compare them all. We do the very best in Canada.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Frost: This is an enlightened government.

Mr. MacDonald: I doubt if the hon. Prime Minister is doing the very best, but I am not in a position—I do not have the facts—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will give them to the hon. member. I will be very glad to give them to him.

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. Prime Minister is doing as well as other provinces or not, is not the point to which I am addressing myself.

The point is that this government has a budget, of combined capital and normal expenditures, approximating $1 billion. The Opposition is an important arm of government; anybody who knows anything about the democratic process knows that a government is as good as its Opposition. If there is not an Opposition to keep it on its toes, then the government is going to become a poor government. Yet that Opposition in the province of Ontario operates on approximately $15,000.

I suggest once again this is ludicrous. If the supreme objective in this whole reorganization of government is to restore the supremacy of this Legislature, high on the priority list is the need for doing something about the lack of resources with which the Opposition parties have to work. One day this government will find themselves on the Opposition side, and they will be able to benefit from it, too.

An hon. member: Not from the hon. member's people.

Mr. MacDonald: Quit dreaming, boys, quit dreaming.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let the Opposition fight among themselves.

Mr. MacDonald: I never saw a sucker in the farm pond bite at the fly more quickly than these boys did there.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what an adequate figure should be for this. I quite honestly do not know what the figure should be. But, to illustrate my point, just let me take a figure out of thin air, and let the House and the public consider whether this would be a fair kind of proposition.

Suppose we took $5,000 for every member who is elected, so that Opposition parties would have the equivalent of $5,000 per member. Now, under normal circumstances, we would never have more than approximately 40 members in the Opposition, in a House of 98. This would mean, to make your Opposition effective, we would be spending no more than $200,000 out of a budget that is close to $1 billion.

If this government really believes that Parliament should be effective, I suggest to them that the spending of what would not be more than $200,000, to give the Opposition their resources, is a fair proposition in a budget of the kind we have in this province of Ontario.

I would suggest that, along with the question of the secretariat, along with the question of a standing committee on Crown corporations, along with rescuing our public accounts committee from the—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Rescuing it from the Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: No, rescuing it from the withering-away process that this government has encouraged for 10 years.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that without getting into an argument with the hon. Prime Minister in my concluding remarks, that these things are necessary if we are going to achieve the overall objective of restoring the supremacy of this Legislature.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to take part in this debate and to have a few words to say about some of the things contained in this report.

I do not know quite what the report is, having listened to various views from hon. cabinet Ministers and the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Read it.

Mr. Singer: I have read it several times. One hon. cabinet Minister suggested this was a Hoover-type report. The hon. Prime Minister, speaking on Wednesday last, suggested it was not really a Hoover-type report but it had some of the good things which the Hoover report has, and did not have some of the bad things.

Now, I would suggest this, Mr. Speaker, and I think this is important. There have been some observations in the United States recently on the effect of the Hoover-type investigation, and it has been suggested that investigation resulted in a saving to the United States of some $4 billion in their general administrative process. Now, somewhere along the line, perhaps we can equate that to what happened here in Ontario.

The population of the United States is 170 million; the population of this province is 6 million. So suppose we divide that $4 billion by 30; and we would end up with a saving of some $400 million. Perhaps it will be suggested that that is not too fair, but let us divide it by budget amount. We are spending about $1 billion here every year and, in the United States, some $85 billion or $90 billion is being spent.

Now, we divide this figure by 90 or 100 and we end up with a saving of perhaps $20 million, $30 million, or $40 million.

The important thing is that there is substantial value, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, to conducting the second step that this report and this committee indicate.

The committee says "we have not examined departmental operations in detail." They say—on pages 30 to 38, and again on page 83—they say that detailed reviews are useful, that there should be continuous operation, and on page 5 in the report, they say this, and I think this is most important:

In general it can be said we have not sought to develop an exhaustive list of specific and detailed recommendations, but attempted to concentrate on laying down certain principles of organization to which we feel the administrative arrangements of the government in this province should be aligned.

This is very obvious to me, Mr. Speaker, and I think it should be very obvious to all the hon. members of the House. This report just nibbles at the beginning of the type of investigation that should be conducted into the affairs of this province.

I agree completely with the remarks of my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) when he refers to the ignoring of the supremacy of Parliament. I have had particular interest over the recent years in the functions of various municipal authorities, planning authorities, in the Ontario municipal board.

It somewhat surprised me when the announcements were made, a few days before the commencement of this House, that not only are we going to have a new Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs—incidentally the gentleman appointed is one of the ablest gentlemen in this province and I commend the government for that—not only are we going to have 3 sub-branches in that department, we are going to have a community planning branch, we are going to have a financial control branch, and we are going to have an administrative branch.

Before any legislation could be introduced into this House, Mr. Speaker, we have taken community planning away from the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle) and we have done that in contravention to this Act which is a planning Act.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I point out to my hon. friend that has not been taken away yet.

Mr. Singer: The Minister means the Minister of Planning and Development, and then every section of this Act refers to the responsibilities of the Minister, one after the other. He is responsible for official plans. He is responsible for planning boards and for committees of adjustment and conditions of plans of subdivisions and on and on.

But here, with this report in their hands from September 25 last, Mr. Speaker—this report which indicates and directs that one of the fine principles of government in this province should be responsibility of its Ministers, the supremacy of Parliament—the announcements are made within 5 days of the sitting of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that, right at the beginning, the main principle that is set out in this report is being ignored.

Now, Mr. Speaker, returning more specifically to some of the remarks that this committee deals with concerning municipal affairs and with planning, I think these points are most important.

On page 41 in the report, the committee says that the municipal problem is partly financial and partly jurisdictional. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this neatly sums up the basic municipal problem. The committee goes on to say that there is no doubt that both the province and the municipalities need additional tax. Oh, I am sorry—in the speech from the Throne, this same idea is repeated, and in that speech it said that there is no doubt that both the province and the municipalities need additional tax room or revenue to carry out their operations.

Mr. A. R. Herbert (Temiskaming): He got his speeches mixed up there.

Mr. Singer: Not quite. Let the hon. member just bear with me and I will be along to him soon.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know if my hon. friend should discuss the Throne speech now. He should discuss this report.

Mr. Singer: Where the Throne speech backs up—with due respect, Mr. Speaker, to the last remark—where the Throne speech backs up some of the ideas here, I am sure that the hon. Prime Minister will not object to my quoting.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let us have the ideas first.

Mr. Singer: The idea—well for the hon. Prime Minister's elucidation, I will repeat it, Mr. Speaker. It says in the speech from the Throne, there is no doubt that both the province and the municipalities need additional tax room or revenue to carry out their operations.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no. Does the report say that?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. Prime Minister to page 41 of the report where it says this: the municipal problem is two-fold. It is financial, and it is jurisdictional. Now, finance—as with the section I read from the speech from the Throne—and if my hon. friends over there will give me a chance, I will get down to the jurisdictional part of it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let us hear the jurisdictional part.

Mr. Singer: The oft-repeated cry of mayors and reeves—and my hon. friends over there know this very well—is that there should be redefined, in clear and unmistakable terms, the duties and responsibilities of municipalities.

Now, it is no good, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you, that we begin to nibble here and there and take a bit here and a bit there to start to plug up the big hole in the dam when the water is coming over the top. If we are going to go into this municipal business—and I suggest this as a step that the House should have taken a long time ago—then we have to start paying attention to the whole problem, and not just start to pluck away bits and pieces.

I suggest that this municipal problem is the most serious thing that the committee gets at here—and it gets at it in detail—and it is the only thing in all these departments that the committee does get at.

At page 43, the committee suggests that the division of jurisdiction is bad. It suggests vastly modified Ontario municipal board functions and stresses that opportunities should be given to consult with departmental officials.

Now, somewhere along the line, we must consider how these recommendations are going to be carried out, and how the recommendations are going to be fitted in as a whole group. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to do it by examining these bits and pieces. I think if we are going to look at The Department of Municipal Affairs, The Department of Planning, and the Ontario municipal board, that we have to sit down and examine our ground rules from the ground up. As the report says, these things must start in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the points that have been touched upon by my hon. leader, in connection with other phases of the report, and I suggest that, before any action can be taken in connection with this report, what has been talked about here for the past few days should be listened to, that there should be a committee of the House to examine it. The committee should complete its examination and report back to this House before any action is taken by introducing legislation and pushing it through, so that the whole of the basic problem can be in fact examined.

I suggest that we should get into the second phase that is repeated in here two or three times, that we should give a Hoover-type finish and begin to investigate, department by department, and find out if this government is running efficiently.

Certainly, when I look at the establishment here, The Department of Planning and Development, and recognize that it is in the government's mind to take away community planning, I wonder what is going to be left of that department.

Mr. Nixon: Let the tail go with the head.

Mr. Singer: The whole thing should go, because really I cannot see much point in keeping 32 people over at Ontario House, as the report suggests, or 35 people in charge of civil defence, when the government announcements indicate that the whole reorganization of civil defence is being changed and co-ordinated as amongst a group of department heads.

Perhaps the time has come to take up another one of these recommendations and do away with the whole department, cut down on departments and get fewer and more efficient ones.

Mr. Speaker, the main point in my remarks is that, before any action be taken in connection with this report, full discussion should take place in committee—as has been promised—that the report should not be prejudged by the government. Finally, I suggest that we do need a real examination by a Hoover-type commission, and reading this report certainly clearly indicates that.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): If I could, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct some remarks toward this discussion.

I would like to say that, first, I agree wholeheartedly with the principles that have been enunciated in this report in connection with ministerial responsibility, financial accountability, grouping of related functions, and the provision for appeal.

I have not been long in the Legislature as a new member, but I cannot help but see that we have to do a readjustment in the reassertion of these points that have been raised.

I might just mention one department in which I have taken an interest, and I think particularly of the branch that is being boasted about by two hon. members of the government. I refer to the citizenship branch which is being developed under the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips).

I refer to it because I think it is an example again of the need for some kind of amalgamation, some kind of grouping of related functions. In this particular case, I understood that there was a branch under The Department of Planning and Development which was interested in immigrants and immigration work, and then it came as quite a surprise to me, as it did to many others, to read that in 1959, the government was going to start a new branch.

I could not help questioning why it would be in 1959 that they would create this additional branch, because we all know that the heavy waves of immigration—in fact the liberal approach to immigration—is when there is a Liberal government, and between 1945 and 1956 there were 640,000 immigrants coming to Canada.

When I presume that perhaps the hon. Provincial Secretary might have taken seriously the words of the hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), because he said, during the election campaign, to the Canada Press Club here, that he was going to populate our parish, that he was going to bring in—he mentioned the figure—it would be something like 640,000 immigrants a year. Perhaps this is why the hon. Provincial Secretary decided that he had to start a new department.

But, of course, as most of us have realized about the hon. Prime Minister for Canada, his words during an election campaign and his actions are not always the same.

I then started to get interested in just what this branch would do. For example we have, under The Department of Planning and Development, trained civil servants who have worked during the Hungarian revolution and the flood of people coming. They have experience. But for some reason, it is decided that, under The Department of the Provincial Secretary, a new branch would be started.

I want to emphasize that I think this relates very much as an example of what Mr. Gordon, in his report, had said: that we must have a look at the amalgamation of different services of government departments.

May I point to another example? I agree that, in the welfare fields—and this with respect to appeals—there should be some method of appeals from the administrative decisions of department officials. I am not saying that it should be to the court, but I think that there should be something set up there with respect to welfare.

I notice that, in the Act to provide general welfare systems to persons, there is a change from the fact that the municipalities may provide assistance, to the fact that the municipalities must provide assistance. This seems to me to give a certain mandatory aspect to it.

I know that the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) will have an answer to this for me. But I am curious to know how this new legislation, this new bill, is working, because it was brought out in 1958 and as yet, I understand, there are no regulations that have been brought out for it.

But still in connection with it, when an immigrant applies to a municipality for help, for financial assistance, could the hon. Minister of Public Welfare clarify for me what happens to that immigrant, assuming that he gets help?

This government gave a great deal of publicity when they brought out this bill, yet here is the situation: if this immigrant applies, automatically he comes under the federal government, he is liable to deportation under The Immigration Act. So who can he appeal to in connection with this?

I just give this as an example again, that I feel there should be a very thorough review of every department, that this has set a charge for us. We need to go much further into it, and I hope—as the hon. leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend from York Centre have suggested—that the government will set up a select committee in order to look into this much more fully.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of comments to make with respect to this report.

First of all, there is a point I would like to raise which I hope will not be interpreted as a complaint, but perhaps rather as a suggestion for future action.

This relates to the method in which the report was released. It was released a couple of weeks before the Legislature met, to which I have no objection. But as I understand it, the press had it in their hands for several days before the official release time. To that also I have no objection. I believe it makes for good reporting for newspaper men to have an opportunity to digest a document of this kind before they have to write their stories on it.

But hon. members of the Legislature got no such opportunity, they did not receive the same courtesy. Consequently at least some of them—including myself—found themselves in the embarrassing position that, when the report suddenly hit the press, they were caught completely unprepared and were asked by representatives of the press, and in my own case, by a radio station, to comment on a report they had never seen.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that an hon. member of the Legislature has a duty to state his position on important public documents of this kind. But it is very, very difficult for him to do so when he has not seen them.

On the day the report was made public, I happened to be down at the conference of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) and I picked up what I usually do not do, the noon edition of the paper, so at least I had seen the press report on the committee report.

Suddenly at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, I was called by a radio station and asked to state my views so that they could record them. At least I had had an opportunity to see the press reports, but I had not at that time seen the actual report of the committee.

As I say, this is not a complaint, it is just a suggestion that perhaps, when important documents of this kind are released in future, they might be sent to hon. members of the Legislature at the same time as they are sent to the press, with naturally the same stipulation regarding release time as governs the press.

I think it might assist hon. members of the Legislature in carrying out what I think are their duties if they could get at least the same courtesy as the press.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some reference to the question of appeals. I do not want to appear to be batting this question to death, but I do think it is very important. I am not going to go into all phases of appeals, which have been dealt with by other hon. members, I am particularly concerned with the matter of appeal, or suggestion of appeal, from decisions of the labour relations board and the workmen's compensation board.

When I first saw the press report of the Gordon committee report, I was very disturbed indeed on this matter. Though the gentlemen of the press did a pretty good job in summarizing the report as a whole, I think their reports were slightly misleading on this point. When I got a chance to read the report itself, I felt somewhat reassured.

I may say that the statement made by the hon. Prime Minister at the beginning of this debate was reassuring. I am also happy to note that the hon. leader of the Opposition is apparently dropping the position which he—well, I will not say that he took it, but certainly the statement was attributed to him by the press, both when he appeared before the Gordon committee and when the Gordon committee's report was released. This position seemed to indicate that he was in favour of pretty wide open appeal, and that he seemed to think that the panacea for bureaucracy was appeal to the courts. Now I believe that those statements that were attributed to him muddled up the water a very great deal on this important issue, and I am glad to note—

Mr. Singer: It is just the way you fellows read the report, that is all.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if he was misquoted, I wish he had corrected the misquotations at the time.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): If he had listened to his hon. leader, he cleared the matter up a few minutes ago.

Mr. MacDonald: What has wakened the hon. Minister up, anyway?

Mr. Bryden: I am glad to know that the hon. leader of the Opposition apparently is now prepared to drop the matter of appeals from decisions of the two boards which I have mentioned. However, there is more to be said than has already been said on the question.

The matter of the privative clauses has come up. I am not sure, from the statements of the hon. Prime Minister, whether he was in favour of the Gordon committee recommendation that these clauses should be deleted from the legislation, or if he takes what I think is an equally logical position on the other side—that since they do no harm they might as well be left there.

Mr. Grossman: Which does the hon. member think is right?

Mr. Bryden: But I would like to make a very strong plea for leaving the privative clauses in the legislation.

Mr. Gordon, in elucidating on this point in the press, said, in effect, that they do not mean anything and we can tidy up the legislation by taking them out.

Well, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the British Commonwealth of Nations has been one of the great bulwarks of liberty in the world, and one of the reasons why it has performed that role is that it has not been excessively concerned about tidiness. I think we will find in British statutes that there are lots of untidy features.

So if the sections do no harm, if indeed they are meaningless, why not leave them there? I would go further and suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a real danger in taking them out. I do not profess to be a lawyer, and those with legal training may be able to interpret court decisions better than I can.

But I think I can understand the English language, and I would like to read a couple of sentences from a judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Roach on behalf of the court of appeal of Ontario in the "Canadian General Electric" case. This is reported in the 1957 Ontario reports at page 333. Mr. Justice Roach says this:

In the absence of a "privative" clause—

Incidentally, I might mention that in regard to the spelling of that word the court appears to agree with the Gordon committee's version, and not with that of the hon. Prime Minister. That comment, however, was just in passing, I am more interested in the substance of the statement than in the spelling of a word, and the court's comments are:

In the absence of a privative clause, the court in certiorari proceedings has power to examine the record returned to it by the inferior tribunal, and if that record discloses error on the part of that tribunal to quash its decision as having been made in error—and then skipping a sentence which is not directly relevant to the point I am interested in, the judgment goes on to say:

However where there is a privative clause the court is restricted to determining whether or not the inferior court acted within the limits of its jurisdiction.

I think that is a very important point, Mr. Speaker, that should not be overlooked. This business of the court examining the record of the inferior tribunal in the case we are discussing—either the labour relations board or the workmen's compensation board, and if that record discloses error, of quashing the decision—that is exactly the thing that we want to get away from in boards of this kind.

These boards were set up—as the Gordon committee points out—because they are operating in areas where specialized knowledge is needed, and where undue delay should be avoided if at all possible. I believe it would be correct to say the Gordon committee were of the opinion that there should not be appeals from those boards except on the question of jurisdiction.

Now if I understand properly the wording of this judgment of the court of appeal of Ontario, it clearly indicates that, if there were not privative clauses in the legislation, there would be appeal on more than questions of jurisdiction.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Would the hon. member give me that reference again? I did not note it earlier.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Attorney-General mean the reference, or does he want me to read the quotation again?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I mean the case.

Mr. Bryden: The heading in full is "Re the Ontario Labour Relations Board, Bradley et al and Canadian General Electric Company Limited," 1957 Ontario reports, starting at page 316. The quotation I made was from page 333.

Mr. Speaker, may I sum up my views on this particular point? I think it is most important that there should not be appeals from these boards on any grounds whatsoever except the recognized ground of want of jurisdiction, which I believe also involves the matter of denial of natural justice. On those grounds there should be an appeal, and we know that appeals cannot be cut off on such grounds. But on any other grounds there should be no appeal.

I merely call the attention of the government to the fact that there is certainly at least an indication in the judgment I quoted, that if the privative clauses were removed, appeals would be opened up on other grounds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with another point which has been dealt with to some degree by my hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald), and which I think is a matter of extreme importance—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest to the hon. member that if he wants to go ahead at considerable length, he is raising a new point, it might be better to adjourn the debate and we will call on him again at a later time.

On the one hand, if he feels that the remaining few minutes are enough, by all means go ahead. But on the other hand if he feels that he wants to take more time, I suggest perhaps if he adjourns the debate, it would be acceptable to the House.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that suggestion. I am afraid that what I have to say may take me about another 15 minutes so, in that case, with your permission I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, may I say we will proceed with the Throne debate tomorrow, at which time the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) will again take the government to task, I have no doubt. If there is any time at the conclusion of the Throne debate, we might proceed with my hon. friend's remarks in connection with this particular motion.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome, as guests of the Legislature, pupils from St. Monica's separate school, William Burgess school, and Rhodes Avenue school, all of Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves, seconded by hon. W. A. Goodfellow, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until 3 of the clock on Thursday afternoon, February 4.

Motion agreed to.

He said: That, Mr. Speaker, is in accordance with our understanding.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Goodfellow, that Mr. J. H. White be substituted for Mr. H. M. Allen (Middlesex South), on the committee on health and welfare; that Mr. M. Belanger be substituted for Mr. G. T. Gordon on the committee on labour; that Mr. Belanger be substituted for Mr. J. P. Spence on the committee on municipal law; that Mr. J. A. Fullerton be substituted for Mr. A. W. Downer and Mr. Belanger be substituted for Mr. H. C. Nixon on the committee on private bills; also that the committee on energy be increased to 35 members, the additional 10 members to be as follows: Messrs. Bryden, Carruthers, McNeil, Reaume, Rollins, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Whitney, Worton.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

HEALTH INSURANCE ACT

Mr. T. D. Thomas moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide for health insurance."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Would the hon. member please explain his bill?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): On a point of order, no private bill can be requested for an explanation.

Mr. Bryden: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer you to page 56 of Parliamentary Procedure in Ontario, the seventh line from the top of the page where it says:

Sometimes also if a bill introduced by a private member appears to deal with some matter of great importance or is of unusual character, the member introducing it is asked to explain it.

I submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is both of great importance and of an unusual character, and that therefore I am in order in asking that the hon. member introducing it explain it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, that would be so if the hon. member introducing the bill were not a member of the caucus which is responsible for the bill being introduced.

Secondly, the rule provides for a member of the Opposition asking, and the question has been asked of a person who we were not under the impression is in opposition to the hon. member introducing the bill.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The rule does not say anything about that.

Mr. Bryden: The rule, I would point out, Mr. Speaker, says no such thing. It does not say who must make the request. It merely says that it may be made, and as a matter of fact I do not think the rules even take cognizance of the fact that there are separate parties in the House.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would you care to make a ruling on that?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Can you not wait for a second reading? It is political, eh? Oh, you can play that game better.

Mr. Speaker: I say to the hon. member for Oshawa that I will take this matter under consideration.

ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT

Hon. R. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to establish the Ontario energy board."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: This is a bill to establish what is called the Ontario energy board, which will replace the Ontario fuel board. It will possess, in effect, many of the same powers of the Ontario fuel board except only those powers which are of a quasi-judicial nature, dealing with the issuing of franchises and the granting of rates.

ACT RESPECTING ENERGY

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting energy."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Mr. R. Gisborn moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend the Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the fifty-first annual report of the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1958.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, notice of which has been given. It is this.

In reference to reports in the press and on television that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources made representations to the federal government concerning the location of a nuclear research centre at Elliot Lake instead of in the province of Manitoba, would the hon. Minister inform the House of the results of this discussion?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In reply to the question of the hon. member—and I appreciate receiving notice of his question—I would say firstly that I made no statement with respect to which my hon. friend has made an inquiry.

However, I would like to say to my hon. friend, for his information, that this government is pressing the federal government for a joint study of its municipal problems arising from the curtailment of Canada's uranium contracts.

The Ontario government is anxious that studies be implemented by the two governments to consider the future of the Elliot Lake, Blind River and Bancroft uranium mining communities, and find means of alleviating a threatening decline in their economies. We have made representation to the federal government that it join the Ontario government in such studies, because these communities were organized with the encouragement of the federal government so Canada could supply the free world with uranium when it was critically needed. Both governments spent large sums of money in setting up Elliot Lake and the Bancroft area.

We feel that the federal government has a tremendous moral responsibility as well in maintaining the healthy economy of these communities because they were established as a direct result of Canada's agreement to provide uranium to its allies. A joint study should investigate every means of aiding these communities.

Elliot Lake mines produced 74 per cent. of all uranium mined in Canada, and the area contains 94 per cent. of the country's proven uranium ore reserve, the largest high-grade ore body in the world.

The stretch-out delivery programme of supplying uranium to the United States and Great Britain will leave Canada's uranium mining industry in a difficult position by 1966, and there is an emergent need for alternate means to maintain the economy of both Elliot Lake and the Bancroft area.

Mr. Sopha: I had no idea that my question would trigger such a copious memorandum. I should like to ask the hon. Minister a supplementary question. Has he made representations to the federal government to locate the nuclear research centre in Elliot Lake, rather than in the province of Manitoba? If he did not, I should like to ask him why not.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would be happy to take my hon. friend's question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join in this debate and my first words are congratulations to yourself on the appointment to your high office. It was my opportunity to speak in your absence a few days ago to the motion for your appointment. At that time I tried to stress the importance of your position and the significance in this historic Legislature. I wish you well, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that you will act in the impartial and wise way that is required of the position.

Mr. Speaker, I would take the opportunity to add my congratulations to those of others that have been extended to certain hon. members of this Legislature, particularly the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), who has gone on to another position—his geniality and friendliness have made an impression on all of us; to the former member for Ottawa South (Mr. Dunbar) who is not with us during this session, but whose wit stimulated many interesting discussions in this Legislature over a long period of time; to the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) in his retirement from an important portfolio, a portfolio that naturally during these particular times is a controversial one. We commend him for his contribution to education in Ontario and express the hope that he will have a very pleasant retirement.

I would, Mr. Speaker, add my congratulations to the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Roberts) on his recent appointment to the important portfolio of education. I was particularly impressed with the hon. Minister's observation that we have in Ontario a serious teacher shortage, a problem of teacher qualification. I think that one of the important things in any particular administrative operation is to acknowledge the problem. At least then we know where to work from and we have some determination of what the objective must be. I commend him in that observation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to the government and in particular to the head of the government (Mr. Frost) for his victory last June. We did our best to make it otherwise, but the decision has been made, and I unhesitatingly offer my congratulations to the head of this government, the hon. Prime Minister of this province.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that in all probability the people of Ontario just presumed that they have grown accustomed to his face and they wanted him around for another 4 years.

But, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that after the passage of a few years, another title song will come to our minds, and that I suggest will be "You have been around this old House and played around this old House too long."

At this time I would like to make some reference to my home riding of Waterloo North, a cosmopolitan riding in western Ontario, made up of a great agricultural industry and diversified industry.

It is an area that, historically, has grown out of the woods to a position where today I believe the industrial productivity of the area is unmatched on a per capita basis by any other community in the Dominion of Canada. It is an area that has, Mr. Speaker, its historical spots, educational institutions and its cosmopolitan people.

With respect to history, I would remind this House that there is one area in the riding that is particularly welcome to some of us, and that is the birth site and the home-stead of the late Prime Minister of Canada, the late Mr. Mackenzie King. When I visited that home site recently, one thing I noticed.

As we travel about Ontario everywhere, we see plaques identifying historical sites. They are, I believe, constructed by The Department of Travel and Publicity. But on this historical site, there is no plaque.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) will take cognizance of this fact. This is, I think, the type of historical spot that even this government would be quite prepared in its generosity to acknowledge as an important spot in Ontario and all of Canada.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): The hon leader of the Opposition's hope will be fulfilled.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, considering the generosity of the hon. Prime Minister, I have one or two other similar requests.

For a long time, in my home riding, the several chiefs of police in the varying municipalities have sponsored and promoted the idea of a police college. There are those who told me during the election that they would like to vote for me, but they felt it rather embarrassing because if perchance I were elected, it might mean that there would be no police college in that area.

Now, I know the impartiality of this government. I know the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is not only cognizant of this problem, but has publicly demonstrated in the area that Chief Patrick of the City of Kitchener has done more to promote the idea of a police college than any other person. I am confident that this rumour that the folks back home talk about has no foundation.

Nothing would please me more than to have the hon. Prime Minister give me his personal assurance that this is all small political talk, and that the police college will be instituted in the near future and that it will be located in my riding. I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that it has its history just as his has; has its pride and has its tradition—different maybe, but important all the same.

Herein is one area where I am confident he will demonstrate the generosity that he demonstrated just a little while ago, particularly because of the University of Waterloo, an institution that is flourishing, I am proud to say, after only one year's experience as an institution of higher learning.

Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention something that is of historic interest. The day before yesterday, it was my pleasure to see a group of young athletes off to what I hope will be the championship of world hockey in Squaw Valley in the course of the next few weeks. We have, in my riding, a team called the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen. It was their opportunity to compete in the Olympic competitions 4 years ago. On that occasion they were defeated in the final round-robin. They took their defeat, I think, as sportsmen and in a sportsmanlike fashion. But, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, they are determined to reverse that situation and to bring to Ontario, to my riding, and to all the Dominion of Canada, our traditional pride in hockey supremacy.

I have mentioned that our riding is made up of many industries, and they are of varying kinds. We have furniture and we have rubber plants and leather tannery plants and a diversified series of other plants.

I might say, parenthetically, that my own family—and particularly my grandfather—can claim some credit for holding that industry together in the past, holding it together in a particular fashion. I would tell you, lest in the event that you do not know, Mr. Speaker, my grandfather was a glue manufacturer.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this next opportunity to refer to our Liberal caucus. I am proud of the group of men whom it is my privilege to lead in this House. I am particularly proud of the new hon. members and the old, experienced hon. members who were all returned on the occasion of the last election. We are a group of happy warriors, Mr. Speaker, a group united and determined to do our job as the official Opposition in this House.

We have worked hard. We have held many caucuses, and I am confident that the efforts that we have made will show their results during this coming session.

Over the week-end, it was my opportunity to undertake a little journey that I would describe as a journey through platitudia. I had the opportunity to read the Throne speech that was delivered in this House not long ago.

That speech contains many things, many gems of wisdom. I noticed particularly some things that we, on this side of the House, have suggested for a long while. I noted references to many new undertakings. I think we will wait in judgment until we have some practical demonstration that the platitudinous references that have been made will actually be implemented in action.

There is talk about portable pensions, there is talk about municipal reform, there is talk about northern development. These things we have heard before.

It will be interesting, during the course of this session, to see exactly what the government intends to do, and will do, with respect to the implementation of these several things.

And then, Mr. Speaker, we heard references to a new era, to the dignity of the individual. These things are on all lips at the present time and sometimes I believe they are becoming clichés.

It is true that we are in a new era. We have been in a new era for some time.

And, Mr. Speaker, I can speak quite sincerely at this point by saying that I was very much impressed a few years ago with a definition of personality that the hon. Prime Minister made in this House. He referred to the complexities of the individual. Somehow, to that complexity of flesh and bone is an immaterial spiritual force added to each individual in some Divine fashion.

We are in historic days. We are in a fight, in a fight we all know about at the industrial level of international competition. That, we are all familiar with.

But I say that, unless we begin to analyze and know that man is not merely material things, but likewise a spiritual thing, and that this dual nature of man is a real differentiation between our concept of the rights of the individual and the concept of the statist, that unless we understand that, and live by that, and pursue that—and this Legislature is one place wherein we can pursue that ideal—then I say that the communism which has been translated into terms of determining which system can produce most washing machines or most television sets, is a defeated competitive effort before we ever start.

The fight with communism is truly at that level, but primarily at a different level, a different concept of life in the dignity of the individual.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that, when we are talking along this line, the biggest challenge that you and I have, and all hon. members of this House have, is to identify a policy, identify a programme, that will bring peace and order, understanding and an equitable distribution of the productivity of our combined forces of management and labour.

I am not one who interprets these two groups to be irreconcilable enemies, who interprets these two groups to be such that they must forever be at one another's throats. That is not the case. Our challenge is to give some leadership to bring these two forces together. I have said that innumerable times in this House, and I am reminded that I was called an idealist, I believe by an hon. gentleman to the left. But the more I see of this area, the more I am convinced that the challenge of this House, and this democracy today, is to bring some real humanism, some true humanism into this field of management and labour. I think no more effective leadership can be given than for this Legislature and this government to go about bringing together these forces in conference.

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) undertook a conference of that kind in conjunction with the uranium industry. Herein is an opportunity. I was called an idealist two years ago, but I notice that Prince Philip has called for a similar type of conference in Canada in the course of the next two or three years. And I notice that Mr. Jodoin, the president of the Canadian labour congress, has likewise suggested this area.

Mr. Speaker, we must begin to realize that labour is not some force divorced from society generally, but it is an integral part of all society, and that management is the same.

I suggest that our society in Ontario today is an industrialized society.

Are we aware that 76 per cent. of the working force in this province are employees? That is about opposite to what it was 35 years ago. And of that group about 30 per cent. are organized.

Mr. Speaker, traditionally and historically in this area we have moved from what I would call privilege, to custom, to law. For example, years ago it was a privilege, they thought, to give a man a vacation. Then it became customary, and subsequently and finally it was written into our legislative books.

I believe that the time has come when the question of pensions has moved from privilege to custom, and is now at the doorstep and demands legislative action. I believe that a man who works for a period of 20 years should be entitled by law to a pension, and I believe that the pension should be transferable or portable. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come for this Legislature to act with respect to a minimum wage for all employees throughout all Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this House will provide the opportunity to debate possible amendments to The Labour Relations Act. At that time we will have our opportunity to express our opinions. But I say, in conclusion on this point, that law and legislation will not do the job alone. But the minds and the hearts and the ideals of the leaders of this Legislature can, and will, bring about a sensible human solution to the conflict of management and labour. This will be a solution that will bring these two forces together as a united group to help to develop our province. It will help to expand our province from an area that is historically industrialized in the south, in the form of secondary industry and work into that hinterland and northland that requires an opportunity of expansion, an opportunity of development, an opportunity of leadership in this province, in this country, and in the free democracies of the world.

These are the opportunities that lie before us. These are the challenges as I see them, and if we do not exercise our intelligent judgment, our imagination, our determination and our will, we will have failed ourselves primarily, but this legislative body indeed.

And now, I hope hon. members will forgive me, for I turn to a subject which, over a period of the last few years, has been of particular interest to me. It may not have any direct application at this time, but in view of the fact that I will be limited in the comments that I can make on this subject later on, I would make some reference to it now. It is the matter of finance.

Mr. Speaker, you know that over the last 4 years we have debated financial formulae. We have talked about the 15/15/50, the 9/10/50, the 11/13/50 formula, the $100 million that is to come from Ottawa. I realize that I might be introducing this subject a little jocularly. But, Mr. Speaker, I am very serious about it.

The fact of the matter is that we are never going to get to first base in any real reformation in Ontario in terms of the solution of our municipal-provincial problems, our educational problems, and the other various problems that become associated, and are associated, with the development and economy, unless we get down to brass tacks on this subject.

To the new hon. members in this House I would say they can do nothing better by way of introducing themselves to the basic problems that are at hand than to read that passage which was referred to yesterday and which I use repeatedly. I refer to the first budget address of the hon. Prime Minister in 1943, an address that acknowledged the problem, acknowledged the difficulties we have, acknowledged the debt, and determined to hold that debt and to finance our progress as we move forward in a sensible, economical and determined fashion.

I suggest that has not, unfortunately, been followed in these intervening years.

What I would like to know immediately, Mr. Speaker, is this: When are we going to get down to brass tacks on this subject? We are still talking about more money from Ottawa. I am told whenever we inquire, there will be more money, it will come in the fullness of time. Now the fullness of time has produced something like $17 million out of this $100 million.

But let me point this out to you, Mr. Speaker: The original formula, 9/10/50, simply meant that we would receive 9 per cent. of the amount of money that we paid into Ottawa by way of corporation tax as a rebate, 10 per cent. of the personal income tax and 50 per cent. of the succession duty. Now, as far as we are concerned, the succession duty is not a problem.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is a considerable problem—how to get rid of it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well now, it certainly is and I will be quite prepared to say so. When I say it is no problem, we have never put it in dispute. We are collecting our own succession duties. I beg your pardon?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): They should be out of that field.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Get out of it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, with that I have no particular quarrel, but—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon leader of the Opposition's people get into it, that is the trouble.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to make my point, and we can go into it. But the hon. Minister of Energy Resources knows, as well as any hon. member of this House, that in conjunction with succession duties, we are talking about a relatively small amount of money, as compared with the other sum.

What I would like to know of the hon. Prime Minister immediately is this: At the present time we are collecting, in Ontario, 11 per cent. of all taxable corporate income. Ontario is collecting that. We are getting a rebate of 13 per cent. on personal income tax and we are not in the succession branch rebates. If the 15/15/50 formula were followed today, I suggest that our corporate income would be increased from 11 per cent. to 15 per cent., or an increase of 4 percentage points.

Hon. Mr. Frost: To be increased from 9 to 50.

Mr. Wintermeyer: The amount of additional money that would accrue to Ontario would be 4 percentage points and that, Mr. Speaker, would be 4 times $13 million, or a total of $52 million.

If the personal income tax was increased from its present 13 per cent. to 15 per cent., it would represent an increase of two points and, according to the last public accounts, we derive about $7 million for each percentage point. Two times 7 is 14.

We could, therefore, envisage the sum of an additional $14 million, plus an additional $52 million, or $66 million.

I would draw the hon. members' attention to the fact that our deficit last year was in the neighbourhood of $82 million. Now, I suggest that even if we have the $66 million, we would still be $16 million short.

What I want to know from this government is simply this: Are their negotiations aimed at the distribution of these 3 sources of revenue; more equitable distribution of these 3 sources; or are their negotiations with Ottawa on some other basis? Is it the hon. Prime Minister's concept that what we should aim at in Ontario is a more equitable distribution of these 3 sources of revenue—that is the direct cash field?

I am not sure that it is proper, but I would like an answer to that. Is that the area of discussion at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend and I had better sit together and get his bookkeeping straightened out first.

Mr. Wintermeyer: This is my point. The hon. Prime Minister is being very cagey about this, but this is the situation. We are talking pie-in-the-sky and we are defeating the rights and the opportunities of development in Ontario if we continue to mislead the people of Ontario into thinking that the answer is in a different sharing of these 3 sources of revenue only.

I say to him that what we need is a complete overhaul of the taxation basis at Ottawa, in Ontario, and in the municipal level. But I do not think this government has ever approached it for the simple reason that such an approach would require amendments to The British North America Act, and I have never once seen in the newspapers or in public utterance any reference to that whatsoever.

I am confident, as I stand here, that we will muddle along as we are going now for another two or three years, until an election in Ottawa, when we will be told that out of the generosity of the head of that government, Ontario is to receive another $15 million or $20 million and our youngsters still will not have the opportunity of equality of education. There still will be no opportunity to build the type of transportation facilities that this great metropolitan area requires.

There still will be no opportunity to take care of our mentally retarded children and the other myriads of expenditures that are required of a growing industrial country.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing a disservice to all people in this province if we fail to stand up and say we need more money. The thing that should be done in Ontario is to start from the beginning to reorganize our provincial-municipal responsibilities, to determine what we are going to do with education. Then we should move from there to a plea and to a demand of Ottawa that either it share its direct sources of revenue as we think they should be shared, or, in the alternative, that we remove ourselves from those agreements. Primarily, we should insist that Ottawa call a conference that will be aimed at amending The British North America Act, if necessary, to revise the whole system of taxation in Canada, at the federal, provincial and municipal level.

Until this is done, Mr. Speaker, we can snicker, we can smile, but the youngsters who are denied the opportunity of equality of education in this province will be those who will suffer. I say that for too long we have moved as pawns these children, these retarded children, the need that there is for low-cost housing and the other things in Ontario on this financial checkerboard.

Rather, the time has come to determine in principle the responsibilities of the municipal government and the responsibilities of the provincial government. The time is certainly here when this government owes the responsibility to the people of Ontario to call such a conference, and begin to rewrite an Act that is outmoded, that is 110 years old, and that was designed and intended to serve a community that is entirely different from our present community.

Mr. Speaker, let me make some reference in the field of education to the sort of problem that I am talking about. The last figures that I have are for the year 1958. At that time, in our elementary schools in the province of Ontario, there were 1,027,000 youngsters, of whom 784,157 were in the public schools and 243,431 in the separate schools, about 76 per cent. to 24 per cent.

At that time, at the municipal level, there was collected for the public schools the sum of $121,607,000. There was collected at the separate school level, for separate school support, $15,072,000, and there was collected for the secondary schools $63,164,000—for a grand total of $199,844,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is that the municipal opportunity of taxation is just not broad enough, and not equitable enough, to provide equality of education in Ontario.

It is my personal opinion that, in principle, the basic cost of education should be transferred from the municipal to the provincial level. Until this determination and decision that requires some intestinal fortitude is made, I suggest to hon. members that we are going to Ottawa and to these conferences without any real case. The simple fact of the matter is that our case cannot be made effectively at Ottawa in terms of the other provinces.

Today we are taxing less at the provincial level than most other jurisdictions in Canada, and yet at the municipal level, Mr. Speaker, we are second only to the province of Saskatchewan.

Let me point this out, that on a per capita expenditure, in terms of dollars basis, at the municipal level, in Saskatchewan, each person pays for municipal government $31.43. In Ontario he pays $27.10; in Quebec, $14.11; in Nova Scotia, $12.63; in Prince Edward Island, $8.83; and so on.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that our educational burden is falling at the municipal level and the basic cost of expansion in this province is borne by the property owners. I suggest to you that 100 years ago, property was the basic source of revenue, the basic source of wealth. That is not the case today.

I am not talking about more taxes for the people of Ontario—because the person is the same, whether at the provincial, federal or municipal level—but I am talking about an equitable distribution of the total tax load to the people of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I, on the subject of education, may divert for the moment to the matter of university education, it was my opportunity some time ago to investigate this subject somewhat and to come upon a financial statement of the University of Toronto.

In introducing these remarks, let me say that, at the present time, the province of Ontario pays out roughly $23 million for higher education in Ontario. At the present time there is no formula under which these payments or grants are made. They are made after consultation with the various universities and in keeping with the demands of the respective universities.

But, I say to hon. members that, in the area of higher education, we anticipate a doubling of our university population in the course of the next few years. That will mean more professors, more faculty, more building, more facilities. We must begin now to prepare for that expanded period of time. My suggestion is simply this, Mr. Speaker, it is time we brought this whole matter to a businesslike basis.

The University of Toronto last year expended $17.5 million for ordinary expenses. That went for the payment of salaries, administrative facilities, all things connected with the university except construction of new buildings. During that same period of time, we had 12,000 students.

Therefore, if the total expenditure of $17.5 million had been required to be paid by those 12,000 students, it would have meant that every student would have been required to contribute $1,500.

Now, we know that is excessive. We know that is impossible. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what we, in our determination, should feel is an equitable contribution from each student towards that $1,500? I am asking how much we get from the federal government. I suggest that the difference be made up by the provincial government. Let me illustrate.

The federal government is making a payment of a little better than $400 for every student at university. That reduces the $1,500

I have been talking about to about $1,000. I would think that a student should be in a position to contribute something in the neighbourhood of, say, $400. The balance, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, should be contributed by this government.

Now, on the basis of 24,000 students throughout all the province, we are talking about a sum of about $15 million. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The figuring of the hon. leader of the Opposition is inaccurate.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, it is very close. Twenty-four times 6; 6 fours are 24, and 6 twos are 12 and 14—$14 and some-odd million. And I am giving hon. members the benefit of suggesting $15 million. All I am asking for is this, Mr. Speaker, that some formula be devised to take care of each student so that that university, and all the universities, will be in a position to meet their normal expenditures. I suggest a formula that will combine the students' contribution, the federal contribution, and our contribution, in a prescribed fashion that will assure the orderly development and the administrative economy of all the universities.

With respect to housing of those students who are required to live away from home, I understand that the cost is about $1,200 per year. That is, if one thought in terms of constructing a residence and providing facilities, it would be in the neighbourhood of $1,200 per pupil. It seems to me that in this area—an area that will increase, of course, but at the present time is represented by about 10,000 students—we should make a contribution that might be as high as $1,000, a contribution in overall dollars of about $10 million.

It would thereby assure that each student in Ontario, whether he lived at home or if he lived in a metropolitan area, would secure the opportunity of going to school and attending at school, irrespective of his financial ability. Obviously, a youngster today in the summer time can earn in the neighbourhood of $400 without difficulty. He can earn in the neighbourhood of $600 if required to live in residence.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to hon. members in this House, and particularly to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts), that when the committee on education meets, we call to that committee the president of the University of Toronto and other honourable, intelligent and knowledgeable people on this subject and get some of their ideas.

It seems to me the time has come when this Legislature, if the government refuses, then at least this Legislature should voice its opinion with respect to the orderly development of a proper policy of university grants for university student assistance. This policy should assure an opportunity for all to attend; it should assure the economy, the administrative facilities of our universities, as they grow during this period of the next 15 years, which will be a dramatic one at the university level, just as we have experienced dramatic growth at the elementary and secondary levels in years gone by.

These are serious problems. I suggest to hon. members that what we have to do at the present time is look at them in a business-like way, and make our determination now, in terms of policy of what we are prepared to do for the universities to assure not only their survival but their growth.

At the same time it should assure that youngsters are assured, not the day before they enter university, but long before, that there will be no financial barrier to their attainment of the goal that they set to attain, or to attend at university.

These are commendable objectives, Mr. Speaker, things that will help to develop the personality, help to develop the individual dignity, of our young people, on whom we are counting and on whom we must count and on whom we are going to have to put a large portion of the determination of our future success.

Mr. Speaker, I will leave that subject and turn to the matter of energy. I was delighted to hear the hon. Minister of Energy Resources introduce a bill on energy today. It does seem to me that this is the type of new department that we have required for a long while.

The hon. Minister will recall that on one occasion, a wintry night on December 8 in 1958, in my own riding, we discussed this type of thing. I think at that time I made it as clear as I could that a new department of energy is a desirable and a necessary thing.

Mr. Speaker, in discussing this particular topic, I would like to talk about oil drilling in the Great Lakes. I would like to talk about natural gas and about uranium, and in that order.

With respect to the problem in the Great Lakes, I have taken the opportunity to attend on Dr. Coley, the geologist for The Department of Mines in Ottawa, and who, I am told, is more knowledgeable in this subject than any other. He is a man on whom this department and this government rely for much of their information.

I understand that in the area bounded by—if hon. members can envisage this—Acton on the east, Jonesville in the state of Michigan on the west, and then in rectangular fashion to the south of the lakes, we have a rectangular area extending from Acton across Lake Huron into the state of Michigan and south of the lakes, an area of great natural resources in the form of gas and oil.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall likewise that, in the course of the last few days, an explosion took place in Jonesville in Michigan, wherein a deep well for oil exploded and caused considerable damage. I might mention that in this area I understand there are 3 strata—the upper stratum, consisting of that area of about 400 feet in depth from the surface down; the middle stratum, between 400 feet and 2,000 feet; and then the lower stratum, below the 2,000-foot level.

In years gone by, in the old oil drilling parts of southwestern Ontario, we were dealing with the upper stratum. More recently we have been going into the middle stratum. But the Colchester well on Lake Erie, the Acton well, the Jonesville well, I understand, are all deep wells. I understand that there is substantial oil in this area, and that it is conceivable that it could provide 10 per cent. of our total demand. It is nothing like the quantity that we find in the western provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think that, in view of this fact, we should give consideration to whether or not we are going to permit the Great Lakes, and in particular Lake Huron, Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair, to be used for the purpose of drilling oil.

Personally, I feel that we should not use those lakes for those purposes until it can be emphatically demonstrated that we are not going to cause pollution. The experience in Jonesville, a few days ago, certainly demonstrates that there is real danger of pollution, even with the most modern equipment.

If hon. members agree with that, Mr. Speaker, then I say that drilling in Lake Erie is still going on, or at least was going on the last time I was there. What I think is required—and I ask this of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Obviously we have an international problem here. We have a series of states on the southern portion of these lakes, but Ontario borders all the Great Lakes. Ontario has a greater interest in pollution of these lakes than any other particular state.

Why not call a joint conference of the states bordering this area on the Great Lakes and the province of Ontario and determine what we are going to do about pollution in the lakes? Let us determine once and for all what purpose the lakes are primarily intended to serve.

It is my opinion that primarily those lakes are one of the greatest natural resources we have. These are natural resources that will provide navigation, that will eventually provide the water for drinking and industrial purposes to serve all of southwestern Ontario and the industrial heartland of Ontario. I think those two purposes are paramount to the oil that we will get below the surface of the water, and I think that it is about time that somebody took a stand in this respect and did something about it.

We can talk from here to doomsday, but if they are going to drill across the lake, on the American shore, they will pollute the lakes, and if they are going to permit pollution to go into those areas, the effect will be on the Canadian side just as well.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources that, in view of the successful conference on uranium, he give immediate consideration to the calling of—I do not know what we would call it—but a joint conference of the various states bordering on the lakes and our own province. This conference should try to formalize and determine whether any drilling will be permitted in the lakes, or whether it is feasible. I suggest they can, and they will, have the assistance of men—geologists and the like—who have some accurate idea of what amount of oil is in this area.

If the oil is not fabulous, and if the oil is not of the quantity that we have out west, if it is never going to serve all our purpose, or any great portion of our total demand, I just wonder if it is worth while running the risk of polluting the lakes.

Or should we confine our drilling to the land that is included in the area that I have prescribed in southwestern Ontario? I think there is merit in the latter, but I do not think that we can continue to just go along and say: "Well, we are going to try to use the best equipment possible; we are going to try to assure that no well will blow; we are going to do everything else that is scientifically and economically possible"; and then some day have an oil well blow and the lakes polluted.

This is a primary determinate. This is a determination that we in this Legislature should make for ourselves. What are those lakes intended for, and what should they be intended to do for the province of Ontario?

I think their primary intent and purpose should be to provide transportation, or navigation, at least; and, secondly, water for commercial, industrial and personal purposes. I think if we are sure that those lakes are not polluted, then those basic purposes can be provided for ourselves and for many generations to come, in fact indefinitely.

We have lost our rivers in large respect. Let us not lose one of the greatest natural resources we have in the province of Ontario, that is the Great Lakes system.

Mr. Speaker, may I refer to the matter of natural gas in conjunction with these references and comments on the subject of The Department of Energy Resources.

I have had the opportunity, as I am sure all hon. members of this House have had the opportunity, to read the submission of the province of Ontario to the national energy board in conjunction with the export of gas to the United States.

Now, the report is a very succinct one, of about 12 pages. The essence of the report seems to be this: That the province of Ontario does not want the national energy board to permit any exportation, if it be at the expense of the people of Ontario. That is, they want to assure that Ontario will be provided with enough gas and oil to serve its purposes before anything is exported.

It is a commendable position. But I just wonder, however, as I read the report, whether we should not be more determined than that. As I understand it, the whole problem revolves around the question of terminable contracts. There are two types of contracts, Mr. Speaker. One is a contract that cannot be changed. Another is one that can be terminated.

I would think that every contract that permits of exportation of gas to the United States should be terminable. I do not see why in the world we cannot stand up on our two feet and say that Canadian gas and oil should be used for Canadian purposes, that we will export it at our convenience, and that if the United States does not like it that way, they should not take it.

We in Ontario can, and will, in the course of the next few years, use much more gas and oil than we are using at the present time. It is anticipated now that the second pipe line may be required, and I suggest that we have to be dogmatic about it.

I am not saying that we should not export. It may well be that we should. Who knows the future demands? Who knows the potential out west? But surely we should not permit contracts to be signed which would permit the exportation of gas to the United States that would be required to be delivered irrespective of what our demands happen to be 2, 3, or 4 years from now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We agree with that. That is all right, sure.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, getting to the St. Laurent government, Mr. Speaker, I would say this: If Rt. hon. C. D. Howe were here today we would not be in the difficulties regarding uranium—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): What about gas and oil?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with this same report and the submission, the province of Ontario provided us with a chart demonstrating the cost per cubic foot, I think it is, of gas in Ontario as compared with the cost to the consumer in New York state.

To emphasize, or at least to define, my position, let me simply say that in Ontario today the Consumers' Gas Company rates are $7.24 for each 3,000 cubic feet. In other words that is what the domestic user pays. The company that is asking for the right to import gas from Canada into the United States proposes to sell 3,000 cubic feet for $4.71.

Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong somewhere when the federal government is going to be put in a position to permit gas to be transported from the western fields through Ontario, and then to New York state, and retailed at almost one-half of the cost that we are paying in southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is just what he said.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, this is a real point, there is no question.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He could see it coming—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, this is certainly one area that we have to investigate.

We have had the opportunity this afternoon to hear the introduction of the energy board bill. But I feel very strongly that, in this area of rates, not only do we have to certainly determine why in the world it should be that Americans can buy our gas cheaper than we can, but we have another determination to make.

In southwestern Ontario they are selling gas cheaper than the $4.71. I understand that the Union Gas in southwestern Ontario is selling the same quantity for about $3.75.

The reason, I understand, that they are doing so, is because of the storage facilities. Storage facilities, without going into a lot of detail, simply provide a company with the opportunity to take peakload gas to store it, and then to distribute it in the area as convenience may require.

In a submission to the Borden committee on energy in July, 1958, the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Ltd. said that, without the storage facilities available to Union and Consumers' Gas Companies, Trans-Canada's load factor would drop from 90 per cent. to 65 per cent., with a subsequent increase in their transportation costs of 40 per cent.

Mr. Crozier, of the fuel board, has said that he has no control, nor does his department have any control, over the storage rates. He contends that the Ontario government has authority only over the rate charged to the ultimate consumer.

The point that I want to make is this, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, we have to revise our fuel board. It must be equipped with men who are knowledgeable and experienced in this field. I am not talking about Mr. Crozier at all, but I am talking about the people who will help him—the engineers, the persons who know something about rates and the costs, and the like.

Secondly, we must amend our legislation to insure that that board has some control over storage.

In Ontario today we have plenty of storage areas, and I was certainly amazed some time ago when I heard that negotiations may be going on between an American company and people who own a storage area in the Niagara Falls area to permit the Americans to use that area.

I do not know whether they are going to or not, but this is the sort of thing we permit. We must build up our storage facilities, particularly in southern Ontario, and control over the rates charged for storage must be brought under the fuel board.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I emphasize my point in these 3 respects: First, that we must assure adequate storage facilities in southern Ontario; second, that the rates that the companies who provide the storage can charge must be controlled by the fuel board; and third, that the fuel board must be expanded to include experts in engineering, and in the knowledge that certain people have of the gas industry generally, that they may not have at the present time.

There will be more opportunity to talk about these particular subjects. I leave them for the time because I want to proceed now to the matter of uranium and uranium export.

I understand that in Ontario today we produce about 20,000 pounds of uranium oxide each year. Now, Mr. Speaker, we use only a fraction—I suppose less than 500 pounds of uranium in Ontario per year—so that the hope that we will use enough uranium in Ontario to take care of the Ontario production is certainly remote.

But, I suggest this to you, Mr. Speaker. We have a problem that is acknowledged by all. We invested money in Elliot Lake and Elliot Lake is in difficulties today. We have a uranium industry that is second to none in all the world, and that industry is having difficulty finding markets.

I would remind the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) that had Rt. hon. C. D. Howe—or a man of his ability—insisted that the Americans carry out the basic undertaking that they made, that we would share our facilities and joint national defenses to the end that we would produce the uranium and if they would use the facilities—or at least the products that are required in this missile age—maybe the situation would be different than it is today.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend has suggested this before. Does my hon. friend mean that?

Mr. Wintermeyer: The hon. Prime Minister knows very well that he was disappointed with Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker on this score. I suggest that the hon. Prime Minister has a responsibility to this House to get up and tell this House what he thinks about the situation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. leader of the Opposition does not know anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Speak for yourself, speak for yourself. Was not Mr. Howe in power when uranium was negotiated? He made the contracts.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is right and my understanding was that there was a gentleman's agreement to extend those contracts. I think that was the intent of all, and I just wonder whether the federal people really pursued—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Howe would blast his way into the markets of the world.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I wish we had a man who would do exactly that today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what would happen if he had the chance to run there again? With respect to uranium the problem is known to all. There is no point in emphasizing that again and again. What we are looking for are solutions, and assistance, to the industry and to Elliot Lake and to Bancroft. This suggestion I have.

I am not a scientist, and I know little or nothing about the technicalities of atomic energy. But thanks to the co-operation of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources and the conference on energy the other day, I do have substantially more knowledge than I did heretofore.

My understanding is simply—if I may take the House's time for a little while—that atomic energy is produced in basically this fashion:

Raw uranium is radioactive. It is a self-starter. Neutrons and the like burst through atoms in that particular material in its natural state.

In the ground the uranium is not pure. It is mixed with many other minerals and with ground and all, and while radioactivity goes on, it causes no explosion or no disruption. But in a concentrated form, this self-starter does create an explosion.

Now, the objective that the atomic energy people have is to control that explosion, and what they do is simply this—as illustrated in my hon. friend's booklet. If hon. members can envisage a pail wherein they put a piece of raw uranium, immediately they would have a reaction set up without any outside influence. It starts itself. The objective is to control that reaction. So they would put an insulator around, or in, the pail to control the reaction. One of such insulators is heavy water; another is graphite. That insulator having been put about, then they are in a position to control the reaction, and the heat, that is consequent of it.

What is done in the Canadian reactor, or generator, is simply to add a sleeve, if you will, filled with water to the raw uranium tube. That heavy water, or that water in the sleeve, heats immediately and can be transformed eventually into steam and the steam runs the turbine.

Now the problem is this: Is the Canadian reactor—the heavy water reactor—the type of reactor that can produce, as its proponents claim, electrical energy 20 per cent. cheaper than any other form of energy or is it not? I do not know, and I do not think anybody else knows.

There is a fantastic argument going on among the scientists as to whether or not the heavy water reactor, the graphite reactor, or some other reactor, is the best reactor.

All I say is that we have started, and we have invested money at Rolphton. We are going to invest money at Kincardine. Now, why, in goodness sake, do we not get down to brass tacks and determine, just as soon as humanly possible, whether our Canadian heavy water reactor is the type of reactor that some scientists feel it is?

If it is, Mr. Speaker, we can illustrate that, in the course of months, provided the money is made available, there will be an area in demand for raw uranium that will be unequalled at the present time when there is no demand at the present time.

I know that even this type of demonstration will not use up the 20,000 pounds that are produced in Ontario. Maybe if we ran all our electrical equipment in Ontario with atomic energy, we would only use 1,000 or 1,500, or 2,000 pounds. But the fact is that we would add that to the possible market for raw uranium in Ontario—and think what we would do at the international level.

Think what it would mean to the world at large if Canadians could demonstrate that they could produce, with their heavy water reactor, energy 20 per cent. cheaper than it can be produced by gas, or oil, or hydro? This, Mr. Speaker, would not only mean a matter of prestige and world leadership, but it would mean salvation for an industry and a group of people who are in jeopardy at the present time.

I remember Avro a year ago. I remember the difficulties then, and then it was said we would assemble the best brains, and that those brains would solve the problem. But there is no solution today. And I simply remind this government that Elliot Lake and Bancroft may not, and certainly will not, with the support of the people of Ontario, become another Avro situation.

Before I go on to the next subject, I do hope that I made my point.

Hydro is the biggest public utility in the world and I sometimes wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether it would not be a good thing for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to resign his position on Hydro to concentrate on this important part of the development of energy and power in Ontario, and permit Hydro to negotiate directly to the hon. Prime Minister, where it would be brought under the financial responsibility of this Legislature. It seems to me it is the sort of thing that should be done.

Perhaps Hydro can be persuaded—not if they can be, I think it should be a question of should be—should be persuaded, Mr. Speaker, to embark immediately on what I might term a crash programme, for want of a better word, to determine whether or not the heavy water reactor can do what it might do.

I am not suggesting that it is the answer because I do not know. But if one of the competitors in this international field, and the Canadians at large, have tied their flags to heavy water, unlike the several other countries who feel that graphite or other forms are preferable, the simple fact of the matter is that we have here a real opportunity to do some good, and effect some leadership, and I think we could use our public utility to the utmost advantage.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to pass on to the matter of housing. In that connection, I am going to take just a few moments to tell hon. members the background, as they probably know, of the development of low-cost and low-rental housing in Canada.

As they know, in 1949 The National Housing Act was passed. That Act provided that the central mortgage and housing corporation may, pursuant to agreements made between the government of Canada and the government of any province, undertake jointly with the government of any province or agent thereof, projects for the acquisition and development of land for housing purposes and for the construction of houses for sale or rent.

Under the Act there are basically two types of projects, land assembly and land and rental housing. The land assembly, as hon. members probably know, is an arrangement whereby the municipal government, provincial government and the federal government share the cost of acquiring raw land, and of developing it for resale purposes. Under that plan, 75 per cent. of the cost is borne by the federal government; 25 per cent. by the provincial government; and the cost of bringing services to the edge of the assembly project is borne by the municipal government.

In the intervening years, 4,672 lots have been developed and sold under this scheme.

The second scheme, the cost-sharing scheme, for low-cost housing is a scheme whereby the federal government contributes 75 per cent., provincial government 17.5 per cent., and the municipal government 7.5 per cent. Under this scheme, Mr. Speaker, 4,234 units have been built in Ontario.

It is the number of units that I want to talk about.

Under the one scheme 4,600; on the other scheme 4,200; or a total of 8,800 units in Ontario.

I cannot help but make some reference to a booklet that was published by my hon. friends opposite called Forward Ontario, a few months back, wherein they suggested that, during the last 10 years, approximately 425,000 homes were built in Ontario, and they led the people of Ontario to believe that they were responsible for them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I draw to the hon. members' attention that we in Ontario and this government have participated in a total of 8,800 homes.

Listen to what Mr. Mansur, the ex-head of central mortgage and housing corporation, has said. He said that approximately 10 per cent. of all housing should be low-cost and public housing. In Toronto there are 400,000 units, which would mean that Toronto alone should have 40,000 such units.

Mr. Speaker, this is an area of real human need. Here is an area wherein we can do some good, and here is an area wherein this government has not done one bit.

It may well be that this government will take refuge in suggesting that the municipalities have not made the necessary requests. That may be. The simple fact is the municipalities are ready to go ahead, but under an archaic system of municipal-provincial relationship they just do not have the money to do so.

There is nothing more important to the social fabric of any society than a home. We can talk about homes for the aged, and such like. But frankly, Mr. Speaker, we are going to do more good at all levels, and at all age levels, by providing cheap low-cost home ownership and rental projects for the people of this province than any other way I know.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I am glad we finally converted the Liberals.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Woodbine—this group, hon. members know, they were going to sit where we sit. Six months ago, that is what they thought.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Boys, do not fight among yourselves.

An hon. member: The Liberals never said this before.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, to suggest that we have never said this before is ridiculous. The hon. member for Woodbine has been in this House for only a short while. He is an intelligent man, a man of ability, and I certainly hope that he will exercise it in a prudent and honest fashion, but to suggest that we have never made this reference before, is just ridiculous, and untrue.

Mr. MacDonald: They drag their feet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, in spite of this interruption, I want to emphasize that this, in my opinion, is an area wherein more human and social good can be accomplished than in almost any other area imaginable.

The next subject that I would refer to is the matter of northern development. Hon. members will recall that, approximately a year ago, I said in this House that I thought it was time we inaugurated a separate department in this province, a department of northern development. And I was interested when, a few weeks later, there was a very expansive press release issued by the government to the effect that a new northern development council would be established.

Judging by the publicity that was given every point, one would have thought that the bulldozers were already on their way to Moosonee and that industry and secondary industry were already—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are going to take the hon. leader of the Opposition up there and show it to him.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —were going to be put into operation immediately.

Hon. Mr. Frost: So we are.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I was disappointed when I found the northern Ontario development council is nothing more than the type of development council, industrial development council, that we have in southern Ontario whereby the communities participate, or join together, in given areas for industrial promotion, and get an assist in terms of dollars from the provincial government. That is not what I had in mind.

Northern Ontario has been the forgotten land of Ontario. The simple fact is that they are not prepared to stand by any longer and have hon. Ministers of the Crown go up and say in effect, "You are a great people and we are all for you; goodbye, we are going back to southern Ontario."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is exactly what happened, and I have been up there more recently and, more intensely than I have heretofore, I can tell hon. members the opinion up there. The simple fact is that we are doing nothing about the development of northern Ontario, except platitudinous pats on the back.

The simple thing that is required even now, Mr. Speaker, is to get a C. D. Howe—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He is a pretty good fellow.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —or to get somebody with foresight, to get somebody who will provide action and not vision, to get somebody who will be more interested in action than press releases, and Madison Avenue, who will go up into the north and fill the need that is required to be filled, to use the combined forces that exist in the north and secure the finances.

Where are we going to get the money to help the north? They need it, Mr. Speaker. Investment in northern Ontario would bring manifold results, it would bring back investments and dividends, if one will, in hundred score—

An hon. member: The hon. leader of the Opposition does not know anything about it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —it would provide opportunity. Mr. Speaker, I am serious about this particular subject. I think the simple fact of the matter is that we have not become Canadians. We are not sure whether we are going to be economic associates of the Americans, or just what we are going to be.

I suggest that all we have in Canada is a small span of secondary industry extending from Windsor to Quebec. What is required, Mr. Speaker, is that we do exercise our imagination and we do something more. Government is a form of action and not a form of salesmanship job; it is not required to sell people as one would sell snowflakes but it is required that we perform.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no appreciation of the opportunity, the desire for development of the potential of northern Ontario.

An hon. member: How true.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Therefore, I suggest that the House give immediate and serious consideration to the formation of a department of northern affairs that would:

Firstly, acknowledge the problem; that would give those people the feeling that they are part of Ontario, and that would assure them that the financial, industrial, labour and management facilities that are available there can be co-ordinated to provide that type of opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister from Port Arthur smiles. When I was there last time—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Does the hon. Minister realize that, in his very riding I believe it is, at Steep Rock, they are producing about 4 million tons of ore a year?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: They put out 1.5 million tons.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I point this out? It is estimated that, in the next 10 years, the United States will require about 90 millions tons more of ore per year than it is demanding at the present time. Quebec, it is anticipated, will produce about 45 of that 90. In Ontario, we are producing 4 now. It is anticipated—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: What about Anaconda?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the simple fact is the information I have from the very people who are complaining that we have no department of northern affairs in his very riding, that geologically speaking there are iron ore deposits in his area, in the Rainy River area, that ultimately could produce 45 million tons of ore, and we are doing nothing about it. This government is not providing—what did they do about freight rates?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: But we talked to them 3 days ago right in this House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —3 days ago right in this House—

Mr. MacDonald: Ask them what they did about freight rates.

An hon. member: Get back in your cell.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, all I say is this. We said we were in a new era. Now, if the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald), and the socialists generally, want to be 50 years behind times, then I can simply say, Mr. Speaker, we are in a new era and we had better forget about the politics—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the next subject to which I would like to make reference is a matter of civil service and the civil servants of Ontario.

It is my understanding that there are about 61,000 Crown employees in Ontario today. I believe about 31,000 of that 61,000 are civil servants in the normal terms, and the balance is made up of Hydro employees, in the amount of 16,000; the workmen's compensation board and other civil boards; and casuals in the amount of 7,000. In other words, about 31,000 are civil servants and approximately the same number are not.

Now, the second point that I want to make is that, in the various branches of government, the rate of pay and the so-called fringe benefits vary dramatically. For example, the civil service do have Physicians' Services Incorporated, but they do not have any other medical programme. They have no group life insurance, whereas the workmen's compensation board and the liquor control board do provide such facilities.

Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to point out, firstly, is that in this large group we have approximately only one-half of which are civil servants. The second thing that I want to point out is that there have been some real disputes among the civil servants in recent months.

Now, it is not my intention to use this opportunity to talk politics in its little sense. I fundamentally believe that we have made a mistake. I do not think we have treated our civil servants the way they should be treated.

I think they should have bargaining rights. I think that the position of the government is untenable, and I do not think it is right to say that our civil servants are the best civil servants in the world. Our civil servants themselves have repudiated that position in their statements, and I ask—

Mr. W. H. Collings (Beaches): No, no. They do not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are pretty good people.

An hon. member: They are good—if this government would pay them properly.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister insists, and I was not going to actually read this, let me just read a statement that the hon. Prime Minister made on September 22, 1952.

Mr. Frost stated on the 25th anniversary of the civil service association that this gives to us the opportunity to pay tribute to our civil service employees, whom we consider the finest assembled anywhere. This province feels it owes a great deal to those far-sighted, courageous servants whose energy and persistence since the association's inception have molded a working group with such a fine spirit.

Now, on October 21, 1959, Mr. Bowen, executive secretary of the civil service association, had this to say:

As far as Ontario's position is concerned, we submitted to the government in January last a very revealing brief on pay rates based on comparisons with 5 provinces: British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario. This brief made quite clear that the proud banner of the province of Ontario was trailing far behind in the treatment of its employees.

The statements repeatedly made by the Prime Minister to the effect that Ontario would be as good an employer as the better employers was shown to be completely without foundation.

The brief showed, while other provinces were consistently increasing the salaries of their civil servants, Ontario was standing still.

Mr. Speaker, this patriarchal attitude of the hon. Prime Minister is just what is at the bottom of this. Either these people are entitled to bargain for themselves and be treated as adults, and not as persons who received the gratuities of office depending on the wishes of the hon. Prime Minister, or they are individuals who are entitled to the same bargaining privileges as other employees in the province. I think it is as simple as that.

Mr. Speaker, if I may talk for a moment about the question of health, and I believe we have a resolution on the order paper, I would say simply that obviously, from all sides of the House, there is an appreciation of the fact that we must move forward with a comprehensive prepaid medical health and drug programme.

Mr. MacDonald: A bonanza for the insurance companies.

Mr. Wintermeyer: We will talk this out.

But I personally believe that a man in this country has a right to a toothbrush, a wife, and the selection of his own doctor. And now if that be the answer the hon. member wants, it is there.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): What is the toothbrush for?

Mr. Wintermeyer: But it may be a keener appreciation of what the people of Ontario really stand for and feel—

Hon. Mr. Frost: These fellows would socialize it—

Mr. MacDonald: They just socialized hospital insurance.

Mr. Wintermeyer: They would socialize it. They would bring our doctors under the control of government.

Mr. Speaker, this is a dramatic cleavage between those that believe that government should do all, and those who believe that government should be used as an instrument to bring about the necessary and desirable end.

I believe that a man should have an opportunity to prepaid medical and drug expenses. I believe that the Windsor plan, inaugurated in a free fashion, is a real illustration of what can be done in Ontario today. I believe that if this government was prepared to take the lead and do it in a dramatic fashion, they could bring about a prepaid and comprehensive medical and drug programme overnight. I know, as a result of investigations I have made, that they would have the medical profession 100 per cent. with them.

Mr. MacDonald: Like Ross Thatcher.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, there is no point in our arguing. There is a difference of opinion as to whether we should have state medicine or whether we should provide the facilities in some other fashion.

I have no hesitancy in saying that I do not believe in state medicine, but I do believe that government has an opportunity and an obligation to provide the facilities that will give people an opportunity to prepay their medical and drug expenses. For that, I and my party will fight whether this government takes the opportunity of free advice or not. Mr. Speaker, I ask them, steal this programme if they will, I would be delighted if they did, because it is for the good of the people of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: A state hospital plan.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, there is no point in arguing interminably. The hon. member for the CCF seated to my left will have the opportunity to present his programme. I do not know whether he believes in socialism or not. For myself, I noticed the headlines in the paper, and if he is a real socialist, Mr. Speaker, it conflicts with my conception of the dignity of an individual human being.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: We have already put in the hospital plan.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is not a hospital plan.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure it is.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am not an authority, I am merely saying that it conflicts with my concept.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the great agricultural industry.

In view of the late hour I would simply point this out to hon. members: that it does seem to me that this government has been content to follow the disastrous policies that have been invoked at the federal level, and that this particular area is no clearer or nearer to a solution and to order than it was a year ago, or a year and a half ago, when we complained substantially of this industry. There are others in the Liberal caucus who will speak on this subject, and, in view of the time, I would proceed to my concluding remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned to me very kindly as to the length of his address, but I urge him not to terminate his address because of any undertaking, because there was no undertaking with me. I would say that the hon. gentleman should take all the time he wants.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a wise thing to skip agriculture.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the matter that I would like to refer to now is a question that I will put on the order paper, a question that will be directed to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. Mr. Speaker, this question and subsequent questions involve the matter of propriety in government action.

I can assure hon. members that it is not my personal intention or desire to engage in any witch hunt. It is not my intent at any time to name people or cause embarrassment to anyone unnecessarily.

However, as leader of the Opposition, I feel I have a responsibility to draw, what appeared to me to be possible not only weaknesses but wrongs in government or any branch of government, to the attention of the proper authorities.

I would refer at this stage to the matter of the Sarnia land deals. In that connection my understanding is simply that the hydro-electric power commission were interested in acquiring approximately 31 acres of land in the vicinity of Sarnia; that they negotiated with the Indian band of that area; that Hydro undertook to pay what would be a fair price, a price to be determined by the federal authorities who supervise the Indian bands.

Then, subsequent to those negotiations which carried on for some time, a company called Dimensional Investment Company was incorporated, and that second company then began negotiations with the Indian band for the acquisition of the entire tract of about 3,100 acres; that subsequently Hydro withdrew from the negotiations; that the federal government evaluated the land at $2,200 per acre.

Dimensional bought the entire 3,100 acres at the rate of $2,200 per acre. Subsequently Hydro acquired not 31 acres, but about 180 acres, at the rate of $6,900 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, on the very facts, Hydro owes an explanation to this House to demonstrate that the price of $6,900 per acre, as compared with $2,200, was not exorbitant.

I must insist that this particular question be put on the order paper to be answered by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. I would ask the hon. Minister in his good discretion, because it seems to me it is a matter for good discretion, that he bring, before the proper committee of this House, the authorities in Hydro to demonstrate the explanation for this apparent discrepancy.

Then, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the matter of the Niagara parks commission, I would make the same comments as I have made heretofore. There has been a lot in the press about the subject. I think that I have known about all there is—if one will—all there is available to an ordinary member, for a long time.

I think it only proper at this time to simply say that we have in our possession information which, if it is correct, would suggest that there has been a discrepancy with respect to expenditures, and a lack of request for tenders in the purchase of articles by the commission. Whether this is right, or not, I do not know. I, simply, as leader of the Opposition, respectfully request this government, and the chairman of the commission, to refer this particular problem to public accounts.

I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that it is not my intention to indulge in any witch hunt; it is not my intention to try to make accusations just for the sake of attention. But I do feel that these are two matters that must be clarified, and I would respectfully request the government to refer this latter matter to public accounts.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South), that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House:

1. Regrets that the government has failed to protest against the disastrous farm policy of the federal government.

2. Regrets that the government has failed to recognize the needs of working men for basic economic security by failing to introduce a scheme of province-wide portable pensions.

3. Regrets that the government has failed to meet its primary obligation for the education of our youth by failing to provide a sufficient number of qualified teachers, and by failing to assume provincial responsibility for a greater share of the total cost of education.

4. Regrets that the government has failed to introduce a comprehensive, pre-paid provincial plan for medical and drug insurance.

5. Regrets that the government has given no indication of its intention to call a provincial-municipal conference to reallocate responsibilities and revenues between itself and Ontario municipalities.

6. Deplores the inability of this government to obtain, for the people of Ontario, a more satisfactory share of the total tax dollar from the federal government.

7. Regrets that the government has advanced no programme to provide low-cost housing.

8. Regrets that the government has not defined its responsibility to regulate consumer rates for natural gas, nor undertaken a comprehensive review of the gas rate structure.

9. Regrets that this government has proposed no programme for the development of northern Ontario.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I join with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) at this time in extending to you, sir, what has already been extended, every good wish. May I likewise join with him in congratulating the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) for their very thoughtful speeches, to which I shall refer in a few minutes.

May I say that it was a pleasure, and it was also tinged with some regrets, that we heard from the hon. mover from Peel, the successor to the great member for Peel who sat in this House and was the friend of all of us, certainly all of us who were sitting here at that time.

Now, sir, I may say that my hon. friend leaves me a little speechless after the stern castigation which he has delivered, his upbraiding of the government and his assessment of our work.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): It was friendly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As hon. members can understand, it will take a little time, perhaps, for me to recover my poise after listening to his address and after, sir, listening to the amendment which he moved to His Honour's great address to us here in this assembly.

Now, may I thank him for his words in connection with the endorsement that was extended to the government last June. I thank him very much for his generous words. I have never regarded such an endorsement as was given to us as a matter for elation.

Mr. Thomas: Oh, we know that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As a matter of fact, I suppose what occurred could be rated as a great political victory.

On the other hand, I must say to hon. members, as I have said in other places, that I have always regarded these things as challenges and opportunities, and perhaps the people of Ontario have been good to me in this regard.

I may say, sir, that I, at this time, am in a benevolent mood. I am not irritated, or anything of the sort, by reason of the things my hon. friend has said about the good government of this province, and the good government that it has enjoyed.

But I would say this: I think on the whole he made a thoughtful presentation, and we here are interested in thoughtful presentations. We are interested in thought-provoking and solution-producing contributions that will tend to solve and tend to enable us to meet the very pressing problems with which this great growing province, this young province and this young nation, is meeting in these days of 1960.

I have long come to the conclusion that nothing in this land is ever settled. I used to think that when we did certain things that that settled the issue, and that was something that was done and taken care of.

I have also come to the conclusion, in an expanding Ontario and Canada, that, as a matter of fact, nothing is ever settled. It is settled perhaps in a temporary way, but we are faced with pressures and changes and new opportunities and new challenges, with the result that we are always faced—despite the things we have done here in Canada as a people—with new problems and new challenges which tax us, and sometimes mean that we have to sail in uncharted waters in attempting to meet these great problems.

So, in that attitude, I thank the hon. leader of the Opposition for his words at the outset. That is about all of his address that I could agree with—the opening sentences and remarks of his address delivered here this afternoon.

I would say that it will be impossible for me offhand to deal with all of the problems that he has raised, but to some of them I should like to make very brief comment.

Commencing with having taken care of Mr. Mackenzie King—and that is a great thing for a Tory Prime Minister to say, although I must admit that I have had a great deal of admiration for that gentleman in my lifetime—and I am glad that what the hon. leader of the Opposition suggested this afternoon has been agreed to. I can assure hon. members that, when this government makes promises, they are carried out.

Now, concerning the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen, already I directed today that $2,500 be sent to that team to help them on their trip to uphold the good name of our province and our country. That is after the fashion of what we did for the Belleville team last spring, who did a very excellent job indeed. That is what we gave them, we gave them $1,000, then $1,500. That was the amount.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): What did they have to do for it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, of course, the hon. member would never expect that to happen in Kitchener, would he?

May I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I am not familiar with the particular building he mentions but I can assure him that I will give it my careful consideration and collaborate with my hon. colleagues.

In connection with other matters, the matter of portable pensions for instance: my hon. friend knows that that is a subject of great complexity. We are looking into that question. Professor Hendry of the University of Toronto, who is an expert on the question, has been retained. We have asked to come into our advisory group the gentleman from British Columbia who made the report for the federal government. We are drawing together other authorities, and are hopeful of finding reasonable answer to that very difficult proposition.

I may say here we have tackled difficulties before, and we have tackled them successfully, and I am optimistic of finding a solution. I am telling hon. members what I think and feel in that very important matter to which His Honour's speech referred.

We are taking steps that will lead to a sure foundation for the solution of that problem, and I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition, and all the hon. members of this House, that we will look forward to their suggestions in connection with this matter.

May I say that there has been introduced, in a number of things, the element of portability. There are, of course, very many problems involved in the contractual arrangements of workers with industry and various things of that sort, which have to be considered. But I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that we will give a report to the House in relation to the matter during the course of this session.

I listened to what the hon. leader of the Opposition said about uranium. I am glad that he found that the meeting convened by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) was helpful. I found it that way myself, although I suffered at that time from a rather severe cold and perhaps I was not able to grasp all of the points of that gathering.

But the hon. Minister will be making a report to the House in relation to some of the matters the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned—including the drilling matter, and the Great Lakes, and other things associated with energy in this province.

I was interested in what the hon. leader of the Opposition said concerning agriculture, although his remarks were abbreviated in that regard, and I was not able to get the background of what he was proposing to this House, other than the fact that he seemed to be in total disagreement with what we have done and with what the federal government has done.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): All the people are, and all departments are, too.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that it is not so long ago since an election was held, and I do not see very many farmer members sitting over on the hon. member's side of the House.

I just point that out to the hon. member, that perhaps agricultural Ontario rates more highly what we have done than the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, he is just—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I might come to that in just a moment. I will refer to that. As a matter of fact, I did not intend to, I thought I might deal with more—

Mr. Reaume: I think we are all going to have a crack at that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is very fine. If the hon. member says something worth listening to, I would be very pleased.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition referred to a few matters which he would like to have investigated. It is very properly within his competence to ask for such a thing, and I can assure him that, in connection with the Sarnia matter, the fullest of information will be given to him and to the hon. members of this House.

The hon. Minister representing Hydro (Mr. Macaulay) will, at the very first opportunity, lay before this House all of the relevant documents and the background, and I would be very glad indeed to have the matter considered in the committee to which he refers, if there are points he is unable to clear up to his satisfaction. I can assure him it will be a pleasure to do that.

As a matter of fact, I would say to the new hon. members of this House that is the way we do business over here. That is one of the reasons we are here.

In connection with the Niagara parks matter, I, likewise, will be very pleased, as the head of the government, to see that the hon. members opposite get every bit of information. As a matter of fact that is hardly necessary, because the hon. leader of the Opposition has a friend on his side of the House who sat on that commission for some 6 years, and no doubt will be able to give information in connection with it.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if you will. A privilege, I should say.

I would like to make one point clear: that I have the records of the minutes of that particular commission for 6 consecutive years, and I still have them, and I revealed nothing to anyone. I think there is a principle involved there, and I have a lot of respect for our chairman.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say to my hon. friend that in no way do I say anything that would be derogatory of my hon. friend, the member for Niagara Falls. As a matter of fact just a converse, except for the fact that I think his steps have strayed along wrong political lines. I have the greatest of admiration for him.

Now, may I say to the hon. members of the House, and to the hon. leader of the Opposition, the hon. Minister in charge of that commission, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), will be, at the very first opportunity, giving to the House particulars of the work of that commission.

I might say this to hon. members, that the system which obtains over there is peculiar, of course, to the Niagara parks commission. It goes back to the days of Sir Oliver Mowat during whose regime, nearly 80 years ago, this commission was formed.

May I say that during my leadership of the government, I have made that commission non-partisan in the sense that members are nominated from the municipal councils, and one of the members who sat on the commission was my good friend, the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

May I also point out that neither the chairman or any of the commissioners are paid, and that when my hon. friend talks about the entertaining allowances, may I say that I personally looked at them and I thought they were very reasonable.

On the other hand, I would say to my hon. friends in this House and to you, Mr. Speaker, that, in connection with Niagara parks, I have been completely of open mind.

Firstly I would say that it was myself, I believe, who introduced the bill which made this commission, instead of a straight government-appointed commission, one that is representative of the municipalities as well. Therefore, members of any party may be represented on that commission.

May I say this, that the old system is the system which is traditionally obtained in that area and with that commission. I have perhaps leaned to the type of appointments that would terminate at the end of, say, 2, 3 or 5 year periods, or something of that sort.

I might be quite open-minded on a question of paying per diem and salary allowances to the members there. I also might even go further than that, and be open to the matter of its being operated as part of Ontario's park system. Now, I would say that I think that latter would be objected to by my hon. friend, the chairman, the Minister of Labour. I think it would be objected to by my hon. friend, the member for Niagara Falls.

I only draw those things to the hon. members' attention to point out that I am quite open-minded myself as to the course that commission should take in the future.

For myself, perhaps I have a good deal of sympathy with the old traditions that are attached with what I think is one of the finest parks and park systems in America.

I share with our frontier, if I can use that old expression, their pride in the commission and the park, all of which has been a wonderful thing not only for the Niagara area, using that in its broad sense, but to the people of this province.

Now, sir, with that may I assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that the information he requests will be very gladly given and, as a preliminary to that, my hon. friend will make a full and complete statement of the matter to this House.

I come now to some of the things about which my hon. friend from Waterloo North spoke, and one of them is the matter of his caucus.

Now I say, sir, that I have watched these caucuses. I am around here, as hon. members know, a very considerable amount of the time and I have watched these caucuses. I have seen the hon. members opposite going to these meetings, which I think is an indication of their conscientious interest in the work of the province and its undertakings.

I think that my hon. friends opposite would, by this time, see that I am quite friendly to the work they are endeavouring to do and it might be that they may even invite me to one of those caucuses. But may I say this—well, I say that those hon. fellows have been my principal recruiting ground all of the days of my political life, but we can never tell where I might land.

I say, sir, that I have been somewhat depressed about my hon. friend's caucuses from the standpoint that I often watch. I watch the hon. gentleman who sits beside him, or behind him there, the member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), both of them pretty good fellows; fine fellows, as a matter of fact. I have seen them go to those caucuses with a fine outlook, with happy smiles associated with living in a great, expanding and prosperous province. I have seen them walk with springy steps to these caucuses, and then I have seen them come out, looking depressed and downhearted. May I say, sir—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): The hon. Prime Minister's eyesight is bad.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, my eyesight is very good, as a matter of fact.

But, I would say that I have watched these things happen, and I notice, after they come from the meeting, that they look like people who have been attending one of the gatherings that sometimes takes place in an old persons' home, where they start comparing their ailments, and so on. They start talking about the troubles that they have to face and they are completely depressed.

May I say to my hon. friend—he got into a row not long ago—I read his remarks in that great national newspaper that is published here every morning except Sundays, and I noted what he said there. I read everything he says, as a matter of fact, with very great interest and sometimes with great illumination. I read his comments on the great speech that His Honour made to this assembly.

I noticed that he, for instance, in a very depressed way, talked about the municipalities and this government's treatment of the municipalities. The fact they came here as orphans, that is what my hon. friend has said, the municipalities came here as orphans. Yes, and as beggars.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They are the hon. Prime Minister's children.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, he said that here. He talked about this provincial government.

Now, may I say to my hon. friends, I would just like briefly to read to them what the municipalities say about this government themselves.

Mr. Singer: He wants to read it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, now, I would just like to read to the hon. members what the mayors and reeves say.

Yes, I listened yesterday to the hon. member for North York make a little comment. I listened to him. I am interested in him as a new hon. member of ability and, yes, municipal expert, referring to the downtrodden municipalities of this province. Now, may I say this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: On a point of order, may I advise the hon. Prime Minister that he is presently directing his remarks to one of his own hon. members and not to me? My riding is York Centre.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, I may say that I thought I was talking to the hon. member for York Centre but, on the other hand, I addressed this to all here because they are all in the same boat.

Well, I would say that the mayors and reeves, of which he was a member as a matter of fact, is a good organization and comes here with great presentations. This is what they said about us. Let us take their assessment for a while. I would say to my hon. friend from York Centre, do not be so downhearted, we are getting to go places in this province, in a big way, too.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they say this:

It is very gratifying to the association to realize that these efforts have been fruitful. Why? Because the association has advanced sound proposals for the reform of the municipal position and the government of the province of Ontario has recognized the necessity of adjusting the circumstances of the municipalities.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Very rarely—does it go on to say what they wanted?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes. I continue with the quotation:

Here indeed is a great example of the co-operation and understanding of two levels of government, successfully working out on a democratic basis the adjustment of problems originally of gigantic proportions, but which now have been reduced by understanding.

Is that not a great statement?

So there is no good reason why the association of Ontario mayors and reeves, representing the municipalities of Ontario, should not gratefully acknowledge the high benefits that have accrued to the municipalities by reason of such co-operation and understanding. This association now does heartily.

Giant strides have been made to place the municipalities on a sound financial basis, and the association is grateful for the beneficial steps taken by the government of Ontario to alleviate the municipal structure by:

1. The enactment of The Highway Improvement Act, 1947, which provides for subsidies from the province for municipal roadway construction and maintenance;

2. The enactment of the Ontario municipal improvement corporation to provide for assistance to the municipalities in financing certain municipal works;

3. The enactment of The Municipal Tax Assistance Act, which provides for the payment to municipalities of the equivalent of the general municipal rate in respect to provincial properties;

4. The enactment of The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act, which provides for increased grants without conditions from the province to local governments on the basis of population;

5. The increased contributions by the province to the cost of education; and

6. By the recent action of the provincial government in respect to assistance to unemployed persons, medical services to recipients of unemployed assistance, increased provincial contributions, the homes for the aged, further assistance to charitable institutions serving unemployed persons, contributions for after-care of tubercular patients, and for the care of indigents as proposed by the plan of hospitalization—and which has, since the writing of this, been carried out.

The mayors and reeves association—

Mr. Reaume: Who wrote that letter?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I have no idea, this is delivered by—

Mr. Reaume: Who wrote that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have no idea.

Mr. Thompson: By the hon. Prime Minister?

Mr. Reaume: What year is that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it is Mayor Jackson of Hamilton and all the rest of them. I have no idea who it was delivered by this great association—the great association of—

An hon. member: 1958?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have no idea. May I say this—

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister on a point of order—

Hon. Mr. Frost: This was the mayors and reeves, one of the great—

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. members: Sit down.

Mr. Reaume: They are all the same.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, sure, this is the association.

Mr. Reaume: What association?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The mayors and reeves—

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I regret if the hon. member for Essex North has never heard of the mayors and reeves association of Ontario. He must have forgotten about it—he has heard it in his sleep.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Could I clarify with the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, would the hon. member mind if I finish?

Mr. Reaume: —exactly what he is reading, because I have an association of Ontario mayors and reeves submission here, and if I could read it—I was reading at page 6, and it states that the government of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister has stated that when he is through his point that it will be well taken.

Mr. Reaume: State who actually could find it. That might be something he had picked up.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend—

Mr. Reaume: I think it is only fair—now what is he hiding it for?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will give it to the hon. member. I am not hiding it.

Mr. Reaume: He probably picked it up in the alley.

Oh, I know, Mr. Speaker, but he probably picked up the document in an alley.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

An hon. member: Get a ruling of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure when the hon. Prime Minister has completed the part of his statement he is on—it is quite desirable that he proceed to the point.

Mr. Reaume: I just want to—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I know, but he does not want to hear anything. He never wants to hear the truth. That is the trouble with him. If he would listen to me, he would learn something.

Mr. Reaume: Well, why does he not tell us who signed it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: You know, Mr. Speaker, since my hon. friend backslid—because he was a Progressive-Conservative candidate down in Essex North—

An hon. member: Quiet.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As soon as he backslid, why he has got into the realms of darkness.

Now, might I read the balance of this?

An hon. member: Start at the beginning.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The great mayors and reeves association says this:

The association, therefore, pays great tribute to the Prime Minister—

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, and I blush over this, and I say to my hon. friends opposite:

—and the government of Ontario for its consideration of municipal problems, and for the beneficial results that have accrued to the municipalities of this province. Such recognition is deserving of the highest commendation and gives ample demonstration of the pursuit of British democratic processes to solve intergovernmental relationships between the provinces and municipal levels of government in the best interests of the people of this great province.

May I say this, I would say to my hon. friend—

Mr. Reaume: What page is that? I have a copy of it here, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in order to clear up the doubt which pervades the mind of the hon. member for Essex North—and when I say this, I have never been able to penetrate the fog which pervades his mind, I have never been able to do that—may I say that I am very glad to table this. It is the brief of the association of the Ontario mayors and reeves, office of the executive secretary and treasurer, 209 City Hall, Toronto, January 30, 1958.

Now, might I ask—

Some hon. members: 1958? 1958?

An hon. member: I will now table mine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I also say that I have here, which I will not read at this time, a very nice letter from the Ontario municipal association dated January 15, 1958, in connection with the same matter. When I get the opportunity I will read to the House excerpts from the report, the submission, which was made to us in 1959.

I hope that has straightened out the matter in the befuddled minds of some of the hon. members of the Opposition. It will please me greatly if I can contribute to elucidating some of these matters for them.

Mr. Reaume: Elucidate? He is—

Hon. Mr. Frost: In connection with the great party which I have the honour to lead, and which has received such an emphatic endorsement from the people of this province, may I say some things. I trust that the hon. members of the Opposition will agree with some of these things, but I am extremely doubtful that they will.

First of all, there are some questions that we might ask here of the support of 71 that I enjoy in this House as leader. May I say that 41 of these hon. members here were elected by clear majorities over all opponents. May I say also that on the other side, in the Liberal group, 6 of them received clear majorities. In the CCF group, from which we received a very great deal of talk, 1—just 1, that is all.

There are some questions that perhaps it might be well to ask at this time, because I want to get things on the record with hon. members. I like to have them straight, and then after that we can talk business.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to deal with a couple of basic things before I start: In this House there are 71 elected government supporters, and there were 27 supporters of this government—candidates—defeated. On the other hand in the Opposition group, there were 27 elected and 76 defeated. In the CCF group here, there were 5 elected and 75 defeated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question I want to ask this House is this—and I think it well to get down to basic facts—why are we here and why are they over there? Perhaps I can answer this in my own way.

Mr. Reaume: The answer, I think, is because of the pork barrel that the hon. Prime Minister had—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I will tell the hon. member. At one time the hon. member was a candidate for the Tory party. We had him once, and it is only fair that the other fellows should have him now.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

I want to answer that the reason I am over here actually is because I could not stand the odour over there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this: That the great majority of the people of Ontario and the hon. members of this House seem to enjoy it over a period of years.

May I say this to some of my hon. friends opposite—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There are so many hon. members talking on their feet that I can hardly make myself heard.

I want to say to the hon. members opposite that I listened to their hon. leader's speech today—a very excellent speech—and I must say that for him I have a very great admiration. But I would say to the hon. members opposite that one of the reasons they are over there—the basic reason—is: that Old Man Ontario has not forgotten what they did when they were in office.

One of the hon. members opposite made reference to the fact that, for goodness sake, a Minister of the government had written to a member of the Opposition and asked him for advice on the employment of somebody.

Now, I see the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) smiles. Now, why would he not smile? Just imagine his government ever asking a member of the Opposition to do anything, let alone ask him about employment. No wonder my good hon. friend from Brant smiles. Why, of course, that is not the way things were done when the great reformers were in office.

Mr. Reaume: That is ancient history.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say this to the hon. member who made that statement to the newspaper—I think it was to the great Toronto Telegram—that if there ever was a bridle path, if the civil service ever received a raw deal in any land in the British Commonwealth, it was during the time that his people were in office.

Might I say this: The hon. member for York Centre—I want to get used to the designations here, I will get used to them as time goes along—if he would really like to learn about patronage, if he would like to learn about really stepping on the neck of the civil servants, if he would really like to learn about being years in office and never giving members of the civil service a one-dollar or one-cent raise, I suggest that he go down and consult those two hon. members who sit on either side of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I say this because there are no greater experts in that matter, I think, who are still living, in the province of Ontario and probably the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): That the Liberal government never gave the civil servants one cent of a raise?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Nixon: They were generously treated and they admit it, sir. They were treated better by that government than they have ever been by a Tory government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was after the twelfth-of-July parade from these Parliament Buildings and since that took place—

Mr. Reaume: Who was in it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Everybody who had been appointed, everybody searched through history to find out if their greatgrandmother was a Tory and then they fired them. That is the way it was run in those grand days.

Mr. Reaume: How would he know? Who told him that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: And I would say to the hon. members opposite that is why they are there and that is why we are over here, because we do not do it that way.

I would say to the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), that he made a very able address the other day on seconding His Honour's speech. And he talked about the heartless discharge of ex-servicemen. Yes, sir, men were discharged from these buildings in droves. One of the men who investigated it was a great member of this House, a former member for his riding, Mr. Fraser Hunter, who died the other day up in Durham. He was a member of the government who took up the cause of these people and fought it right here in this House.

Fraser Hunter was a great man. I ask my friend, the hon. member for Brant, if that is not so. He would agree with me that that is so.

Talking about the future of Ontario, I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that he made a very excellent appeal. As a matter of fact there are a number of things in it that I thought perhaps were very worthy of carrying out, and I am certainly going to give consideration to that, although I hate to be accused of stealing anything from anybody.

Think of the hon. members of the Opposition who come here on an occasion such as this. These people, his government, sabotaged Hydro in this province. They turned away employment from our door, it was they who created the basis of Hydro shortage in this province and undoubtedly what they did—may I say this, they of little faith now come, and ask the people of Ontario to pay attention to them. I would say that is why 76 of their candidates were defeated in the last election.

May I say, sir, that another thing is this. My hon. friend talked about federal-provincial relations. I do not suppose that I may have the opportunity of touching on that today, but I intend to deal with it. May I say I think that is one of the great important areas of government—between the municipalities, between the province and between the federal government. I have always attempted and tried my best to get along with whoever was in office in Ottawa. During my day, there have been 3 Prime Ministers at Ottawa.

I would say this and that I think one of the great charges that can be levied against the Liberal party is this, and I say this to the hon. leader of the Opposition in drawing these things to his attention; that his party and his government that preceded ours did much to bedevil federal-provincial relations, achieving nothing at conferences and walking out and doing nothing, and doing damage to the Canadian construction. If his people, who had made these great professions, had not done these things, I would say that the hon. leader of the Opposition would not have so much to live down—

Mr. Nixon: He never walked out of any conference at Ottawa, I will tell my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh well, now I only refer to history.

Mr. Reaume: That is ancient history.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why, listen. I heard the gentleman, who stood in the place I am standing in, calling Mr. Mackenzie King the most awful thing. So did my hon. friend from Brant. He heard him calling Mr. King a mud turtle and all sorts of things like that. How would one expect to call a man names like that and then go down to try to make a deal in the interest of the province of Ontario?

My hon. friends talk about blasting their way into the markets of the world. That is another conception of federal-provincial relations that I have never been able to understand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I should like just briefly to turn to the other group here. I will leave those Liberal fellows alone for a minute, although I have a few things yet to say to them.

May I say this to the other side—they elected 5 members and there were 75 defeated in the CCF group.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Ancient history.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it is history, fairly modern history though. It is history that is associated with the present.

Mr. Thomas: Do not be so repetitious.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right. May I say to my hon. friends I have never said anything to them since the election. I have been working in the interests of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Thomas: We cannot keep up with him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have never had time to say anything to them.

May I say this to my hon. friends here, that I watched them the other night on television and, so help me, they had the whole party on television. I would say, sir, that they even had the chance to put the hon. leader's pipe on as well. I would say to him—just let them think this one over because they had the works, he had himself, his 4 followers and his pipe on the television show.

Mr. MacDonald: We do not go out and blow our top—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, may I say this, sir—all right, may I say to my hon. friend that it would take me 18 such occasions to show off the riches that Ontario gave to my support. Eighteen days. He did it on one show. I would say to my hon. friend—I told him this—after the series of by-elections which this government won, I think, in 1958, the by-election of Cochrane North—

Mr. Reaume: That is what we ought to have.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. leader of the CCF party was yelling for an election this time last year, and he did not do so well. But the point is this—

An hon. member: Why does he not resign?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say this, sir, that in Cochrane North, Huron, Toronto-St. George, and Renfrew North, his candidates did very badly and they did not do any better in the general election and why was that?

I would say to my hon. friend, as a matter of advice, that I think he has spoiled many a good effort by the fact that he has indulged in very cruel personal attacks on individuals and hon. members of this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Not as cruel as the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The people of Ontario had the opportunity of judging that in those by-elections I have mentioned, and then they had the opportunity of judging it in the general election, and I would say to my hon. friend, that he has come back here with such a following that he can put all on one television show in one 13-minute period. Now, I think myself that he might make a reassessment of his position.

Mr. Thomas: Is he finished now?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, Mr. Speaker, I might say this to hon. members that I hope that we have not been elected over here on this side by the mistakes of others. I would say that I am sure that we have been elected by the leadership we have given to the people of this grand old province. I have given some of the reasons to this party over there.

I would say, sir, that the record is very worthy of consideration. It is unprecedented, as a matter of fact, in the history of this province. Fourteen years ago—and there are some who were in this House 14 years ago—Ontario's population then was 4 million people, and projections were made—and there are some of the economists here today—projections were made on the basis of Canadian averages that at this time our population would be 4.5 million people.

As a matter of fact, we have passed the 6 million mark in an astonishing development, the fastest in America.

Now, I point out. Where did that come from? It came from good government and leadership. Now I want the hon. members and I would like the hon. leader of the Opposition to get this one, that in 10 years, 10 years—since 1950—nearly 500,000 dwelling units, enough to take care of our population increase, have been erected here in the province of Ontario.

This has been done because of the leadership that is given to our people in this fast developing economy. Over $20 billion has been invested in physical assets, in the material development of our province. Our productive capacity and our industrial strength in that period of time—10 years only, twice as many as the fingers of one hand—our productive capacity has multiplied 3 times. We—

Mr. Thomas: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

We built a house, my wife and I in Oshawa, 5 years ago. Did the hon. Prime Minister have anything to do with that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Certainly, because the hon. member has a job, that is why he built a house. I would say, sir, it is because there is high employment in this province that my hon. friend builds a house. He has been blessed with the general prosperity of this province.

Mr. Thomas: Unadulterated nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Our power picture has been transformed in the past 11 years alone. Hydro's generating capacity has multiplied by 5 and, added to our water power energy resources, we now have potentials and nuclear power and gas from the western fields which were simply not in the picture only 10 years ago.

It is just—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, I am going to come to Mr. Howe in a minute because I have considerable admiration for him, and

I worked very closely with him, as a matter of fact. And I never miss the opportunity of saying that I think he is a very great man.

Mr. Nixon: I agree with the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I am glad that we are in agreement on something, because we have differed very much in the past.

Now, sir, may I say to my hon. friend that just 14 years ago the people of this province were subject to the rationing of gasoline and worse prospects were in store.

Mr. Singer: The war is over.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would point out to my hon. friends that this is all changed, and it is very much due to the leadership given by this government and, from a standpoint of energy, we are free and independent. I say to my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, when he goes to one of those caucuses, let him come out with his head in the air and a smile on his face. He is living in a great land.

May I say this, sir, a new economic future has unfolded for northern Ontario and I have supporting me the majority of those from northern Ontario.

This great empire, with all its assets, suffered from lack of fuel. Today this has been completely altered, with gas and oil in abundance from western Canada, and with the possibilities of nuclear power generated from Ontario sources. Northern Ontario now—and it is written right on the wall—can support a very great population.

What I refer to as northern Ontario, or our northland, is relative. As a matter of fact, most of northern Ontario is south of the great western cities, such as Winnipeg and Regina and other places. The north country is a relative expression, actually northern Ontario is continentally not in the north at all.

May I say that our vast highway programme is indicative of the fact that there are today 3 times as many motor vehicles in Ontario as at the conclusion of World War II.

We have made notable progress in the abatement of pollution, in the preservation of water supply in this province. I have great sympathy with what my hon. friend said about drilling in the Great Lakes, and that matter will be reported fully to this House.

I would say that we have been tackling jobs here that we have been heir to because of the actions of people and governments over a period of 150 years.

May I say something about rural Ontario and the policies with which my hon. friend so radically disagrees, although he does not give the particulars of his disagreement. This year we shall pass the half-million mark in rural service, an achievement unequalled in America. The last year, the hon. leader of the Opposition's people were in, I think they added on something like 98 services, and this last year we added on 35,000 services here in Ontario.

We have brought to our people in rural Ontario opportunities of living and doing business unthought of a dozen years ago. Standards of education and opportunity in rural Ontario are today comparable with the best in the province, and that is the reason that these rural hon. members sit on this side of the House, almost in their entirety.

In Ontario, mighty strides have been made in education, which is undoubtedly our greatest problem.

May I point out to this House that a new school, or a substantial addition, has been built in Ontario every day in the past 10 years, Sundays and holidays included.

Mr. Singer: Who builds them? The property owners.

Hon. Mr. Frost: So I say this to hon. members, there is no achievement such as that in all America.

The standard of living of our people and wages and income have increased at an unprecedented rate. Among a multitude of other things—including pensions for the aged, for the blind, and the infirm—I would say that just this concluding year we introduced the greatest hospital insurance plan ever introduced by any government on this continent, with over 5.5 million people covered. So I say to my hon. friends opposite, they were the people who said we were playing politics and we would not do it, and today we come back and it is a fact, the great plan in America.

In human rights and liberties we have blazed a trail. In the past 10 years, and today, our province leads Canada, and most of the rest of the world—indeed the rest of the world—in this most important field which is fundamental to the peace of the world—the recognition of human dignity and personality without regard to race, colour or creed.

In the war against disease, beds by the thousands—yes, tens of thousands—have been added to our public general and our mental and tubercular hospitals. In mental and public general hospitals alone, 35,000 beds have been completed and are in use, and thousands more are in the process. May I say to my hon. friends that is one of the reasons that we are over here and that the people of Ontario, Old Man Ontario, has given us his endorsement and that they are over there sitting where they are.

There is a great list of things that I might mention, at this time, but may I say this: That the coming year will witness the joining together of the Lake Superior and trans-Canada routes. That is something that has been talked about.

Mr. Reaume: Well, why do they not do it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: As a matter of fact, it could have been done by the hon. leader of the Opposition's people but they would not start it, they would not sit down with Mr. Mackenzie King, they preferred to tell that man, whose memory they want now marked with a plaque—they called him a mud turtle, they applauded when things were said about Mr. King—now they come and they ask a Tory government—which is glad to do so—to mark the birthplace of that great Canadian statesman. My hon. friends opposite might consider some of these things in these caucuses of theirs.

May I say, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker—because I must adjourn this debate—that this grand old province, and her credit, provided half of the cost of the great St. Lawrence seaway that Her Majesty opened this year, which is opened to the shipping of the world.

Now, may I say to my hon. friends opposite that they may turn some of these things over in their minds. May I point out to them, as did my good hon. friend from St. Andrew, that they had the opportunity of doing that. That great Canadian statesman who was born at Kitchener, and whose birthplace we are going to mark, wrote to the leader of their government and suggested that in 1941, or thereabouts, Canada should proceed with the seaway.

I would be ashamed to give them the terms of the letter that was sent to that great Canadian, William Lyon Mackenzie King. I will table it. I will send it over to them so they can read that report of the mayors and reeves when they have the opportunity of getting down to digesting some of those things. Let them read what their leader, the leader that they fought—

Mr. Nixon (Brant): The poor man is dead—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, but he was not dead then, and neither was the hon. member for Brant. The hon. member for Brant is still around here, and I hope he will be around a long time.

Mr. Nixon: I personally signed an agreement as Provincial Secretary with Ottawa at that time—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did his leader say that he was not going to be power-played by any method by Mr. Mackenzie King into providing power which was needed in this province? Is not that what he said in 1941?

Mr. Nixon: Not in 1941.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it might have been in 1940, I do not want to split hairs over it, but he did say it and the hon. member agreed with it.

May I say to my hon. friends that, after 40 years of talk, this government proceeded with that.

As a matter of fact, we entered into the necessary agreements with Mr. St. Laurent and we worked closely in co-operation. That is one thing about us. We can work in co-operation with Ottawa, no matter who is there.

We worked closely in co-operation with the result that today over 1,001,000 horsepower is being put into the power grid of old Ontario, and the shipping of the world is piling up in the Great Lakes' ports on the Canadian side, on the Ontario side.

Those are just some of the things that, if it were not for the fact that time has now caught up with me and it is 6 o'clock, I could give hon. members a lot more reasons why the people of Ontario have returned this government to office. I have, I think, answered the question that I propounded here a moment ago, or a few minutes ago, as to why we are here and they are over there.

I assure my hon. friends of the Opposition that I have said them for their own good. I hope that they are a good Opposition. I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, may he be a good leader of the Opposition, long may he live.

I have said these things not from a standpoint of being hurtful, but of being helpful and getting things on the record.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, that is wonderful.

Hon. Mr. Frost: In moving the adjournment of the debate, may I say that there are a number of very important items which have to do with the great programme which was unfolded before this House by His Honour a week ago today. To these things I should like to refer when the House resumes its sittings on Thursday.

I may say to the hon. member for York South that I shall endeavour to complete what I have to say in plenty of time to enable him to go ahead.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Now I have no doubt that the clerk has sent to the hon. members the places of meeting of the various committees tomorrow, and that the Whip representative of the parties here will have notified their hon. members also, if they have not already been notified.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome, as guests of the Legislature, pupils from Forest Hill junior high school, St. Francis' separate school and Blessed Sacrament separate school, all of Toronto.

Last week 3 resolutions were refused consideration as unacceptable under the terms of rule 112. However, as we are guided by both rule and precedent, and since there is both precedent and sufficient doubt concerning the expenditure of public funds in the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), I now find that in all fairness it should be accepted. I am therefore directing that it be placed on the order paper, subject to question by any member when it is called.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, do you mean to suggest that the other two resolutions are being refused? And, Mr. Speaker, what is your reason for refusing the other two resolutions?

Mr. Speaker: Firstly, in respect to the general application of rule 112, the rule clearly states:

The House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the Lieutenant-Governor in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

The English Rule is stated in May's Parliamentary Practice, 16th edition, at page 691 as follows:

This House will receive no petition for any sum relating to public service or proceed upon any motion for a grant or charge upon the public revenue whether payable out of the consolidated fund or out of money to be provided by Parliament unless recommended from the Crown.

This makes it clear that any bill or resolution that seeks to authorize direct payments out of public funds is not within the competence of a private member. There have been numerous decisions to this effect, both in this House and in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that your rule is not debatable, and it is not my intention to appeal your decision. But I would point out what would seem to be pure formality, and that is the probability that, if we rephrase these resolutions to include one or two or three very general phrases, the resolutions will be accepted.

Now, the very thought I had in mind was that surely we are not going to be guided by such strict rules of this House, that the success or failure of a particular resolution depends on the phraseology, "that this House take into consideration the following"? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that at some appropriate time we give further consideration to this particular problem.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that his wishes will be regarded in that respect.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions were brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to acquire the transportation system of the Hamilton street railway company, without assent of the electors, price to be approved by the Ontario municipal board; to borrow on debentures for this purpose; and to establish a commission for control of the system.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting of reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. S. L. Hall, from the standing committee on standing orders, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption:

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of the township of Kingston praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for building an addition to Holsgrove public school, Westbrook.

Of the corporation of the city of Kitchener and the corporation of the city of Waterloo praying that an Act may pass enlarging the Kitchener-Waterloo General Hospital commission; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the municipality of Shuniah praying that an Act may pass confirming its corporate name.

Of the Canadian National Exhibition Association praying that an Act may pass altering the composition of the board of directors.

Of the corporation of the town of Oakville and the corporation of the township of Trafalgar praying that an Act may pass authorizing the establishment of a joint public utilities commission.

Of the corporation of the village of Streetsville praying that an Act may pass validating certain debenture by-laws.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by hon. W. A. Goodfellow, that in order to promote economy, efficiency and improved service in the transaction of public business, it is deemed advisable to invite the observations of the committees on agriculture, conservation, education, energy, game and fish, health and welfare, highways and highway safety, labour, lands and forests, mining, and travel and publicity on the present organization and methods of procedure of their respective departments, with a view to determining whether the procedures, methods and organization generally are well adapted for the most economical operation possible, consistent with the efficient and comprehensive conduct of the respective departments.

Now, sir, might I say that this motion is one which is designed to make a direct reference to the committees of the House.

Generally speaking, the powers of the committees of the House are conferred by this Legislature, and this is only a step in giving to the several committees mentioned here a general authority to inquire into the organization and the methods of the departments.

I mentioned, for instance, that I proposed that The Provincial Treasurer's Department should give a comprehensive explanation to the committee in relation to treasury board and other operations. This is more comprehensive than that, it includes all of these things, and I would say that the motion extends to these committees these particular powers.

Now, no doubt, as the session goes along, there may be other matters referred, but at least this is a comprehensive reference to the committees generally.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the face of it, this resolution would seem to be an effort on the part of government to extend the opportunity in the respective committees to do things that they may not have done in other years—in other words, to invite departmental heads and their assistants to explain the operation of the particular departments.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It would not have the power without this motion.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): I think it always had the power to do that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, what I am concerned about is, firstly, whether or not the committees do, or do not, have this power without the resolution; and secondly, if they do not, I suppose it would be advisable that they be given the power.

I question whether or not they do currently have that power. It would seem to me that they do. I know that, in committee meetings yesterday, we certainly discussed the advisability of calling in experts, department heads, to make explanation of the administration of their respective departments.

Now, what I am really concerned about—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I see that my hon. friend is out of order. That is why he put in this resolution.

Mr. Wintermeyer: All right, if that be the case it is fine. But what I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is simply this: That, on the occasion of several committee meetings yesterday, it was specifically agreed upon by the committees—particularly the committee on public accounts, for example—that certain things would be done.

Now, I want the assurance of the hon. Prime Minister that, in those respective decisions of the respective committees, this particular resolution will not be used to invalidate what they have already done.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh no. Oh no.

Mr. Wintermeyer: All right.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is this an effort to implement what is in the Gordon committee report? May I ask the hon. Prime Minister that question?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I do not know, sir, whether it is an effort. I do not know whether I would accept that word. But as to whether it was a move to accept or to implement the Gordon report or not, perhaps I could put it more clearly.

This is a move on the part of the government to make available, to the hon. members of the House, the fullest of particulars in relation to government organization. As a matter of fact, there are some things in the Gordon report referring to that. But I moved the motion without relation to the Gordon report at all, and I would say that deliberations that will take place on the Gordon report need in no way be influenced by this motion. This motion is only to give the power to the committees to hear and to call the various officials of the departments to find out what is the method, what are the procedures, that have been adopted in connection with carrying on the government business.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak at length on this, and I am at least reassured by the hon. Prime Minister's comments that this is not going to conflict with any deliberations to implement the Gordon report.

But it is obvious that since this has never been done in previous years, and committees, within their competence and resources to do this job, have been looking into the efficiency of a department, the motion is not really needed. Otherwise they have been acting illegally for quite some years.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the objective is not to play around with the problem, not get it completed, but to forestall the possibility of seriously attacking it by a select committee or in some other way.

I suggest that a committee of 50 or 60 people—which is the case in many instances—trying to give serious consideration to the details of changing department procedures is not an effective approach to the problem. This approach will destroy the benefits that might flow from the Gordon committee report.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why does he not vote against the resolution? The hon. member can do that if he wants to.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Prime Minister's motion does not mean anything. We are just legalizing—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am not saying anything of the sort. It is common to my hon. friend to distort everything anybody has to say.

Mr. MacDonald: We will give the hon. Prime Minister something to distort before the afternoon is over.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is all right.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, strange people do things in strange ways at times. The hon. Prime Minister has introduced a motion this afternoon which, on the face of it, is one—if one did not think too carefully about it—which one might think had laudable features. My hon. friend has introduced a motion to do something that those committees could do all along.

There is no question in the world about it. Now my hon. friend tells me the committee on agriculture could not ask departmental officials to come before that committee and explain the various functions of The Department of Agriculture. Why, it is silly to suggest that they have not had that power before, and so the motion of my hon. friend in that respect is a mockery, and nothing else.

In the second place, what my hon. friend is doing—and I have watched him in action for so long that I can tell pretty well what he has in mind—what he intends to do by this motion that he has presented this afternoon is this:

He is going to give to these committees powers that they already have, mind you. But because they have been re-emphasized in this motion of the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon, they are going to take on new status, as it were. And they are going to be deemed to be able to do the things that the Gordon report said should be done—examine the departmental fabric of government.

Now, when we go along that way a little, and we have these various committees doing this work, at the end of that time the hon. Prime Minister is going to say, I suggest, that these committees have examined into these matters, referred to them almost by the Gordon report—suggested to them at any rate—and therefore, that there is no need to have a committee of this House examine into the Gordon report and the recommendations made therein.

Now, time will tell, and I will be interested to see.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say that, having known the hon. member for Grey South a great many years, I have a great respect for him. But he suffers from a very suspicious mind.

Mr. MacDonald: It is the tongue of the hon. Prime Minister that breeds suspicion.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. member for York South that I have not yet diagnosed what he suffers from.

Mr. Speaker, might I say to the hon. members opposite that I was concerned with the procedures of, for instance, the committee on game and fish. That committee over the years has taken in a very wide scope in connection with its work, and I am doubtful as to whether that procedure was really valid.

In any event, what this motion does is to make it valid that this very wide examination can be carried on to clear up any doubts, and to make it possible for these committees to do this important work.

I can assure the hon. member for Grey South that I think he will be entirely satisfied with the method which is adopted by this House to take care of a further examination of the Gordon report. I can assure him that this motion has no other motive, or there is nothing connected with it, other than the clear wording of the resolution to clarify the powers of the committee.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister if it is his intention to set up a committee representative of the parties in the Legislature to study the Gordon report?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I regret that my words, which I attempted to make clear the other day, have not penetrated the comprehension of the hon. member. What happened was this, if I can remind the hon. member.

In the appointment of the Gordon committee, and in my letter to Mr. Gordon of May 1958, I made it clear that the report of that committee would be subject to the findings of the House. I gave it as my preference that the work of that committee should be considered by a select committee of this House. I so stated in the letter.

Now, I am not dogmatic, I know the hon. leader of the Opposition will agree with that. Some people have sometimes alleged that there is a dictatorship here. I know the hon. leader of the Opposition would disagree with that, and he would defend me.

What I have said to the House is this: That my preference is only my preference, that the outcome will depend upon what the hon. members say in debate. After we hear what they say, then we can introduce a resolution with so much unanimity that the hon. leader of the Opposition will second it. I think that will be the case.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question? Following the list of committees that he has included in this resolution, was the committee on commissions included?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, as far as I know, it was.

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, it was not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no, I am sorry. This resolution referred to committees that actually have to do with a particular department. The committee itself would have the right to inquire into the workings of that department.

In connection with the committee on commissions, I am looking into that. If a resolution or a motion is necessary—and I give as my offhanded opinion that it is—then we will pass a resolution providing that certain commissions and boards should be referred to that committee.

May I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would like to collaborate with him on this. As I explained the other day, there are certain boards, for instance, that might very well be referred to the committee on agriculture, instead of to the committee on commissions.

I will go over that with the hon. leader of the Opposition and explain to the House a possible disposition whereby certain of the committees and boards are assigned to other committees than that particular committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before we leave this, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a further question?

If the hon. Prime Minister was going to ask the standing committees to undertake a job of this great proportion, why did he not do it before the standing committees met yesterday and mapped out their programme for the year?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think there is anything that would interfere with their programmes for the year at all.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the committees cannot do what they planned yesterday as well as this great job now suggested by the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh yes, they can.

Mr. MacDonald: It is impossible to do the two jobs well.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of course it is within the competence of the committees to do certain things, and not to do certain things. How the committee operates depends on its members. This matter has been referred to these committees for consideration, and it is for them to make decisions within their own competence.

Mr. MacDonald: No hon. members raised that question in any committee yesterday. Not a single Progressive-Conservative hon. member raised the question of whether or not these issues should be considered by committees. So now we see how democratically it has emerged from the ranks.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word on this, because I had occasion to attend every committee meeting yesterday, and there was not anything raised in any of the committees that could not be well handled at this session. I heard all the suggestions, every one, and there was nothing out of line. There was not anything that cannot be handled during the term of this session.

I think everybody, representing all parties in the House, were well satisfied at the suggestions made in the committees, every one.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

Now, the challenge has been thrown across to us, the Opposition, that if we do not like this resolution we should vote against it. Well, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we should not be asked to vote against this or for it today—a resolution of this importance, with the obvious ramifications that it has.

For one, I should say that the committee on commissions should head the list of those to whom this request and powers are directed. I suggest that there is a rule on the order paper that requires two days' notice of resolutions of importance, and that this resolution should be received as a notice of motion. We should not be asked to vote on it today.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I should be very glad to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Brant, and I try to be obliging and helpful and it would be a very great pleasure to allow this to stand over.

Mr. Speaker: This, then, will be taken as notice at this sitting.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE LORD'S DAY (ONTARIO) ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney-General explain the purpose of this bill?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I would say that this bill is to legalize concerts, recitals and other musical performances of an artistic and cultural nature, at which an admission fee is charged, on Sundays between 1.30 p.m. and 6.00 p.m., local time, produced by non-profit organizations.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Police Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I take it that was a request for an explanation of some point. I would say that, as the bill now stands, it is not possible for villages and townships having a population of less than 5,000 to form a board of police commissioners, and this bill will permit that to be done, in those cases, on the consent of the Attorney-General.

TOWN OF INGERSOLL

Mr. G. W. Innes moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the town of Ingersoll."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We have a dictator over here.

KAPUSKASING DISTRICT HIGH SCHOOL BOARD

Mr. R. Brunelle moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the Kapuskasing district high school board."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

METROPOLITAN TORONTO YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

Mr. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the Young Women's Christian Association of Metropolitan Toronto."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

VILLAGE OF STREETSVILLE

Mr. W. G. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the village of Streetsville."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION ASSOCIATION

Mr. A. H. Cowling moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the Canadian National Exhibition Association."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. seconder is not present.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer) seconds it.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Pretty sharp over there, boy.

TOWNSHIP OF KINGSTON

Mr. J. R. Simonett moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the township of Kingston."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

INCORPORATED SYNOD, DIOCESE OF TORONTO

Mr. H. E. Beckett moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the incorporated synod of the diocese of Toronto."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE BOARD OF OTTAWA

Mr. I. Haskett moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting the collegiate institute board of Ottawa."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to table the interim report of the motor vehicle noise research committee of The Department of Transport, and I should like to make a few comments in respect thereto.

Last year, the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and the city of Toronto presented for approval to The Department of Transport, for the approval of the Minister, by-laws for the purpose of legislating the maximum noise standard which should be tolerated from motor vehicles.

In each case, the identical by-laws set a maximum noise level based upon a reading in decibels by a specified meter.

Since The Department of Transport had no scientific studies, either within the department or in other jurisdictions, on which to base an approval, it was decided to constitute a special committee to investigate and to report to the department upon this problem of noise levels which the public might be expected to tolerate.

In particular, it will give attention to the methods of measurement as set out in the by-laws.

I will have available for each of the hon. members of this House a copy of the report, but I should like to read the terms of reference to this committee:

1. To investigate the noise problem as it relates to motor vehicles in use on public streets and highways and to determine, if possible, the maximum noise levels which should be tolerated by the public.

2. In the determination of these maximum noise levels, to consider the various methods of measuring noise, and to report upon the most accurate method in relation to the sensations produced in the human ear.

3. To consider and report upon the present situation in regard to newly manufactured vehicles in this province, and whether or not the "sones" measurement used by the manufacturers is a proper one.

4. To consider and to review any materials to be presented to the committee by any persons or groups and to report upon such submissions at the completion of their inquiry.

5. To consider the by-laws submitted to The Department of Transport by the city of Toronto, and to recommend whether it sets a fair standard in noise measurement that would permit its approval, modification, or replacement by another method which may be recommended by the department to interested municipalities.

The membership of the committee is, in my mind, an outstanding one, and I should like to place their names within the records of this House.

The chairman is Professor V. L. Henderson, BAsC, AM, associate professor of applied physics of the University of Toronto. The members are: L. M. Steinburg, BA, lecturer, department of applied physics, University of Toronto; E. H. Brzezina, BAsC, research engineer, Ontario Department of Transport; T. Cummings, BAsC, engineer, industrial hygiene division, Ontario Department of Health; W. M. Earl, deputy registrar of motor vehicles, Ontario Department of Transport; Dr. L. B. Leppard, MA, PhD, physicist, industrial hygiene division, Ontario Department of Health.

On pages 14 and 15 of the report, the committee has submitted preliminary observations on the by-law, which demonstrates the need for a fair investigation of the subject before any model by-law is drafted.

I shall not endeavour to discuss the problem of measurement of noise in the two systems presently used. It is referred to in detail in the report.

The two systems are: The measurement by sones, or measurement by decibels; systems based upon a different basis—sones measuring loudness, decibels measuring the energy of the sound waves.

At the present time mufflers are manufactured to conform to a maximum sone measurement of 125 sones. We have discovered that motor vehicles of current manufacture, equipped with mufflers meeting the 125-sone standard, still do not conform to the requirements of the by-laws under certain conditions. That is a major problem that has to be considered and solved.

I should like to make my position, and The Department of Transport's position, clear. As I pointed out to the city of Toronto and the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto last October, I quote from a letter:

I am strongly in favour of a noise by-laws . . . and I have strong feelings against those who disturb the peace and quiet of our citizens by noisy vehicles. But my concern is to assure that we are on absolutely sound ground in any action, for I believe that the standards set in the by-law will become the standard for the province.

That is why I would ask and suggest to each hon. member of this House—not only from the city of Toronto and from Metro Toronto—that they examine this interim report and become familiar with the problem of the measurement of sound by a fair, impartial and enforceable method.

The radar device used on our highways, and so commonly known to all of us here, measures motor vehicle speed accurately and has been accepted by our courts. Speed, however, is determined by two factors—distance and time, which can be exactly measured.

The development of a meter to measure noise, however, is a much more difficult thing, since noise is composed of loudness, pitch and other presently unmeasurable physiological factors.

I give to the hon. members of this House the example of the foundry building side by side with an abattoir of a meat-packing outfit, and Mrs. Jones living on the right and Mrs. Smith living on the left. Mrs. Jones's husband works in the foundry, and every time the drop hammer comes down she is very happy because that means a dollar in the pay cheque for her husband; but to Mrs. Smith that is annoying.

But to Mrs. Smith, the sound of the pigs going into the abattoir where her husband works is very pleasant, whereas it is not so to Mrs. Jones; so that the question of sound is a relative one; so is the annoyance in respect of a person's ears.

The sound of the muffler belonging to a sports car enthusiast may sound very pleasant and musical to him, but to someone sleeping at two o'clock in the morning it may be more than that. I will not say what people say about those things.

The reading of this interim report, I think, will demonstrate to the hon. members of the House the complexity of the problem. I point out at this time that under section 17(1) of The Highway Traffic Act, which provides that some 8,225 convictions were registered in Ontario last year. In the report hon. members will find the detailed number of convictions which were made in Metropolitan Toronto in the last 6 years.

Every motor vehicle shall be equipped with a muffler in good working order and in constant operation to prevent excessive or unusual noise,

In our industrial society, noise is becoming a major factor and a major problem. In some areas we have developed noise control measures which show promise that, with the ingenuity of man, we will be able to place some controls on this annoying intrusion into our daily life. Research into this problem is continuing by industry, universities and government, and there is already considerable literature on the subject.

I take great pleasure in submitting this report because I believe it is a landmark in scientific appraisal of a problem which has caused concern to all jurisdictions, not only on this continent but throughout the world. Nowhere have we found, on a state or provincial level, a satisfactory answer to this problem.

Our search, therefore, will continue to be of considerable general interest, not only locally but throughout the province and on this continent.

The committee estimates that they will be in a position to place a final report before the department within a year and, in the interim report, there is set out, on page 15, the items they still have to consider, and they are considerable in number.

I will look forward, Mr. Speaker, sometime in the future to tabling this report either in this House, if it is in session, or presenting it to the public at large when the report is presented.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. Minister a question relative to the statement he has just made? Am I to understand that Toronto's by-laws have got so mixed up with pigs and drop hammers and shilly-shally that they are not going to get approved in the foreseeable future?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is the hon. member the Minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had intimated to my learned friend, the hon. member for Woodbine, when the report was going to be completed. I had hoped that he who has, I know, an interest in this matter, would have been paying attention to my words, but I will repeat them.

On page 15 of the report, the hon. member will find the items which still remain to be considered by the committee. If there were a fence around Metro Toronto, so that only the vehicles within Metro Toronto would be affected, then this could be considered on a local level. But the hon. member will notice that both the city of Toronto by-law and the Metro by-law are identical in word, which leaves no doubt that it would be a model by-law if the exact terms could be approved.

This department hopes to establish, through the means of this research committee, something which will be of benefit and fair and proper to all, including the transport industry throughout all of Ontario.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question?

First of all I want to point out that the by-laws he refers to were passed in 1958, not a year ago. Then I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if there would not be some good sense—after all of the months and months and thousands of tests that Metro Toronto undertook before they passed this by-law—in allowing the by-law to go for a trial period? I suggest this because the department has had it under investigation for two years, and the hon. Minister now tells us it will be another year before we get any answer. Surely the thing to get at is some positive method, as there have been tests going on for 3.5 years now, and we still have not got an answer.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I should hope that my learned hon. friend will be more right in the future than he is at the present time. The letter which I have before me from the late Mr. Angus, city solicitor, says:

I am therefore applying for approval of by-law 20457 amending by-law 14913. and it is dated March 3, 1959.

Mr. Singer: May I ask the hon. Minister, then, if he did not receive by-laws in the same terms in 1958?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: From the city of Toronto, no.

Mr. Singer: From Metro.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If it were in 1958 it would be towards the end of 1958.

Mr. Singer: It was passed, because I—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It is far from two years; we are just in the beginning of 1960.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Oh, they get all mixed up, that is the trouble with them.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), notice of which has been given.

Today's issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail carries a Canadian Press dispatch from North Bay which credits Mayor Dickerson of North Bay with the statement that North Bay will press the government to establish the projected police college there.

If a decision on location has not been made already, will the hon. Attorney-General add North Bay to the list of cities to be given consideration? I ask because it eminently meets the qualifications recommended by the investigating committee.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member for Nipissing, in his desire for his home town, may find that he is not quite in accordance with the desire of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) in respect to this question.

But I would say that the very enterprising mayor of North Bay has very quickly picked up a hint that he probably read in the paper, or heard over the radio. I would certainly like to tell the House that no decision has been made, and the second in the series of the gateways to the north, that great city, will certainly be considered with the others.

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Attorney-General very much, and for the information of the hon. Attorney-General I may say that I have already cleared with my hon. leader, and he is quite willing to fight it out with North Bay.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to call to the attention of the hon. members an announcement which was placed on their desks on Tuesday, respecting the concentration of The Department of Highways for this province in a new administration building at Downsview.

I think, Mr. Speaker, all of us in the province of Ontario are very proud of the road network that we have and we hope that, in our new building and working from there, we may be able to give to each of the hon. members here, and to all the communities with which we deal, much better service than has been possible in the past.

Similar announcements, Mr. Speaker, have gone to all the municipalities, the consultants, and all the various people who deal with the municipalities and with my department, and with whom the hon. members deal.

But I would ask the hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker, to please do us the courtesy of advising us in advance of delegations who are coming in on business for the next few months while we get settled. We will do everything possible to expedite the highway and roads business which the hon. members have to transact with me and my department, but we would ask for that courtesy as outlined in the letter which went along with the circular.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all the hon. members, that things will be even better in Ontario this coming year, regarding highways, than they ever have been in the past.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to his announcement? While I congratulate the hon. Minister on the opening of these buildings—they are fine buildings, they are located in my riding—I wonder when arrangements are going to be completed to make the cloverleaf on highway No. 401 of adequate and sufficient size to take care of the 900 vehicles per hour that will come out of these buildings and fill in to the already badly overcrowded traffic arteries, as a result of the location of these offices?

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question regarding the notices which already have been given, in relation to a story in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail:

Magna Carta invoked—man's house is his castle, except when commercial bailiffs enter to repossess furniture.

Now, the reason for clarification on this, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that in today's business circles, most business is done on an instalment basis between buyer and seller, and my question is this:

In view of the story on the front page of this morning's Globe and Mail on the activities of certain bailiffs in Ontario, is it the policy of this government to permit bailiffs forcibly to enter people's homes to make collections? Does the government of Ontario appoint these private bailiffs?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Wellington South, I would say that the fact that the Crown was prosecuting the case which has given rise to the question would itself indicate that the Crown certainly is not permitting bailiffs to do things they should not do, where the evidence is made available.

In this particular case, where the charges, I think, were for assault and for forceful entry, the judge apparently on the facts—I think the term was used "gave them the benefit of the doubt"—but at any rate, he acquitted them.

At the present time, the director of public prosecutions has asked that a copy of the evidence be supplied in order that we may look at it, to determine whether or not that decision should be appealed. But I would point out that the appeal would have to be made on a question of law.

With regard to the more general question, as to whether the government permits bailiffs forcibly to enter people's homes to make collections, I would say it certainly does not permit them to do anything that they have not the lawful right to do by statutes which have been passed in years past.

"Does the government of Ontario appoint these bailiffs?" The answer to that is that they are appointed by the judges. They may be nominated, but they must go before judges and get their appointment from the judges of this province—that is, the county or district court judges.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, may I just clarify that? Does that concern commercial bailiffs, too? That is, not just the bailiff who is connected with the division court?

It seems to me there are two types of bailiffs, one in connection with the division court and the other one that is on a commercial basis.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, the name "bailiff" may be used perhaps a little loosely, but I am referring now to those who are entitled to use that name officially. That is the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue my remarks in connection with the Throne debate, which were interrupted by the lapse of time last Tuesday, I should like here to refer to 3 or 4 matters which I consider to be of very great importance to the people of Ontario and to this House.

I have reduced what I have to say to more of a note form than I am used to using, or which I like to use, because I want to place my remarks in a reasonable compass.

The first is in connection with Metropolitan Toronto. That is something with which, of course, I have had a very great deal to do in the last 7 years, particularly 7 years ago. It has been said that Metro is an experiment. This is only partially so because there can be positively no turning back. It is experimental in the sense that it was never intended to be, and is not, the last word in the government of the metropolitan area.

At the time Bill No. 80 was introduced, and since, I have expressed the hope that from Metro itself, and its constituent members and municipalities, would come the answers as to its future government.

I expressed the hope that solutions would not be imposed but would be evolved. In other words, I hoped that, with the partnership created by Bill No. 80, that from that point on, Metro would work out its own destiny.

Personally, sir, I do not think this is wishful thinking. At least I have not come to that point as yet, and I shall give my reasons for so saying.

Any considerations of this question should first be premised on a reading of the Cumming report of 7 years ago. This was based upon the most exhaustive studies and inquiries, including public hearings.

In brief, the problem facing this area was the fact that, for over 40 years the city of Toronto had refused to annex progressively on the basis that it could live unto itself in this area. In the meantime, 12 surrounding municipalities had acquired large population and assessment, and had grown to the extent that, in very many places, a person who did not know the community would not know where the boundaries of the communities lay. This was the position when the annexation application was made about 7 years ago.

I hope to say this without oversimplifying the situation but I should like to give a very concise picture of the problem.

At the time Bill No. 80 was introduced, the considerations were mainly:

(a) Outright amalgamation of the whole area with a government in the traditional municipal form; or (b) development of a metropolitan or federation type of government somewhat after the fashion of the county council system.

Now, one of the principal reasons, in fact an overwhelming reason, for turning to the metropolitan type of government was to save the city of Toronto from being overwhelmed by being confronted with the combined problems of the 12 surrounding municipalities. At that time the question of amalgamating certain of the suburbs of Toronto was exhaustively gone into, and it was found that it solved nothing. It was unmistakably found that the suburban problem had to be considered as a whole. The problem was indivisible and that is still, generally speaking, the case. Whatever is done, the whole problem of the metropolitan area must be considered.

Now, I have made mention of the problem of overwhelming the city of Toronto in those days and driving up its tax rates. In the careful working out of the metropolitan plan everything possible was done to enable the area to look after, as far as possible, the essentials of water, sewage, education, arterial roads, and things of that sort that are set out in the bill itself.

As a matter of fact, the unification of services went as far as was felt would be practicable without causing undue burdens on any section.

Now, sir, let me give an example. The problem, for instance, of fire services was at that time considered. This would appear to be, to all of us, a natural place for unification. The difficulty is that the cost per capita in the city of Toronto is about 3 times as great as the average in the suburbs. The result of unification would, of course, very greatly increase the costs, and these taxes have to come from the people. This in itself would be an added burden to the city of Toronto which, at that time, had 57 per cent., or in excess of 50 per cent., of the assessment of the area.

Since that time a Metro committee—that is, a committee of metropolitan council—has studied the matter and, after a study of these problems, has felt that the matter should be set aside, at least for the time being.

There are a great many other items that could be mentioned, including the unification of welfare services, and so forth. Now I urge that, in any consideration of this matter, these problems should be studied. It can be simply stated that the problem had grown so large that it was simply indigestible, and it was simply too expensive for Toronto, if taken in anything approaching one step.

Now, of course, there are many other factors in connection with the decision to turn to the metropolitan or federation type of government for this area and I should say that what I have said before is one of the basic considerations.

In the meantime, very considerable progress has been made. Quite frankly, I had hoped that the considerations as to the form of government would have been more objective than they have been. Nevertheless, substantial progress has been made, which leads me to be not without hope that Metro in partnership can substantially work out its own destiny.

In the meantime, in these intervening 6 years, there has been the amalgamation of police forces; the amalgamation and centralization of licencing functions, of civil defence and of air pollution. These were matters which were left out of Bill No. 80 and have now been taken care of by the action of Metro itself.

Now, may I point out that, in this great area, references are made to sectionalism.

Mr. Speaker, that will always be the case. There is sectionalism in Canada. As a matter of fact, there was evidence of sectionalism in the Opposition this afternoon, as between the claims of Nipissing and Waterloo North. That is a healthy thing. These things, of course, occur. There is sectionalism in Canada and in Ontario and, very often, these matters can be overemphasized.

I would not want to say that what took place this afternoon indicated any split in the Opposition, but I would say that these things come forward with good feeling and they can be overemphasized. Very much of this comes from the fact that everyone, everyone who is natural, considers that his or her business is the most important. That is always the case.

Now, sir, there is sectionalism within the city of Toronto itself. I say that with the greatest respect to some of my good friends and supporters who are here. But the city of Toronto itself is really made up of a large number of separate entities, or entities which were separate at one time. For instance there is Parkdale; there is North Toronto, and a large number of other familiar names of places, separate entities in other days which still have their sectional prides. I do not think that hurts the great city of Toronto.

The fact is, however, that in the long pull—and this is true of Canadian confederation, it is true of this great area—sectionalism is always displaced because of the great common sense of our people, by the overwhelming reasons which lead to united action. That is true, and it will be true, of the fine people of Metropolitan Toronto.

Right at the present time there are places, of course, where I think that very obvious progress can be made, and where it can be made by metropolitan council.

One relates to the representation on metropolitan council. In its original organization, the present set-up was the most feasible and practicable plan. There were, however, obvious disparities, although these disparities exist in the county council system across Ontario. In the meantime, of course, these disparities have increased.

There are, I think, 5 small municipalities having a population of about 10,000 each. On the other hand, there are suburban municipalities with populations rising as high as 250,000.

A very practical way of working this out is by devising a system of multiple votes on important questions. The multiple voting system has been used in Ontario municipal government for many years, and it would seem to me that this might be one of the short-term solutions to the problem.

Concerning the problem, may I say since January 1, 1954, almost unbelievable changes have taken place. I would commend to the House the reading of Professor John J. Grumm's paper on "The Toronto Experience," published by the University of Kansas, 1959, for an objective, impartial consideration and criticism. There is a lot of criticism, in it, of the Toronto metropolitan experience.

In this 6-year period the suburbs have come from a position of substantial minority in population to a substantial majority. Toronto's population then, and now, was about 670,000, but the suburbs today have a population of better than 800,000.

Six years ago Toronto's share of assessment was better than 57 per cent. This year will probably see it about 51.5 per cent. and it is only going to be a short time until the suburbs will have, in total, the greater assessment.

The problem—and I say this after great consideration—is not going to be one of the city of Toronto absorbing the suburbs, but rather that of the city and other municipalities being absorbed in this gigantic and fast-growing metropolitan area. That is the situation today.

True, Toronto is the largest constituent member, but again I say we have to regard the problem as a whole. It is indivisible and, therefore, in its general premise, it is one of assimilating the problems of Toronto and the suburbs, and indeed the problems of the various areas within the suburbs into a workable form of government without causing undue burdens on any section.

I repeat what I said 7 years ago on the introduction of Bill No. 80—February 19, 1953. What is being done now, as then, is by no means the last word. I say that very many of the difficulties assessed in the Cumming report are present today. Some of the problems assessed in the Cumming report have been taken care of. The solution overall will come with care and patience. The system is not perfect.

In the meantime, very great progress is being achieved: the original principal problems—the backlog of 40 years which included arterial highways, water, sewers, schools, housing, homes for the aged, police, and so forth—are being met, in very many cases, with outstanding successes. But, in any event, in the whole area progress is being made.

Bill No. 80 has made possible progress in the whole area which is phenomenal—phenomenal indeed in America. The chains which have bound the development of the area have been cut.

May I say to hon. members that I was very much impressed here a few weeks ago when I was able to make a comparison of the situation in this area. About 5 years and 8 months ago, my wife and myself had been asked to open the first subway in Canada. That, I believe, was on March 31, 1954. I think some time in the month of November last, I was asked to take part in the turning of the first sod of a new subway, or subway addition—5 years and 8 months afterwards—and I found, in the meantime, that no less than 250,000 people had been added to the population of Metropolitan Toronto. These people very largely are living in the suburban areas, which were the cause of the problem. It may very well be that the future will lead to outright amalgamation. There are very many reasons for saying that it will.

Now, if such is the case, a good ground work has been laid. On the other hand, there are very many authorities—and I ask those who are interested in this problem to look at this question—there are very many authorities studying this problem, both here and afar, who are very much impressed with the federation plan.

Please let us remember that the metropolitan problem is far from being peculiar to Toronto. It is a problem almost everywhere in America.

At the present time there is talk of further enlargement. I mean that it is not a practical consideration at the moment, but there has been talk of the enlargement of the metropolitan area to include such areas as the township of Toronto which goes over into another county.

The form of government is a question which deserves—and I know will get—very great study. At the present time it is study that I would commend to the government of Metropolitan Toronto, and to this House, and to those who are interested.

The Department of Municipal Affairs, particularly under its new organization, is able to give to the metropolitan area very great assistance in this regard. Here we can prepare to view the whole matter with a completely open mind, and with only the objective of achieving what is best for this great Toronto community. For myself, since the days of the first intensive studies which started in 1952, I have personally kept an open mind on the matter of amalgamation or federation.

Unquestionably in 1953 the only legislative solution—indeed the only practicable solution—to the metropolitan problem was the metropolitan plan, and it has worked. The two alternatives are still available to this area, and on this I would urge study which will chart the future course on principles which are accepted by everyone as being common sense.

I might say, in conclusion on that subject, that one hears of the break-up of metropolitan government and the cessation of certain municipalities. It sounds like the days of the American civil war. May I point out that none of this can happen without the consent of this assembly and I am certain that this assembly, no matter what its complexion, would never permit things to go back to the conditions which existed prior to Bill No. 80.

Metropolitan council, of course, could be confronted with a series of deadlocks such as occurred in Canada in the days of The Act of Union, in which case action would undoubtedly have to be taken by this assembly. In my judgment, however, I think there is too much good sense in the community of metropolitan Toronto, and in the council, from time to time, ever to have this happen. I do not judge the common sense of the people of this area by isolated incidents.

I may say that I am now fortified in this statement by pointing to the mighty achievements of Metro in the last 6 years. Deadlocks anticipated have not occurred in general. This is an answer to the pessimistic point of view. Of course things are going to be debated out and thought out. Of course there are going to be sharp differences of opinion. But ultimately, I believe, these good people will find a solution. I want them to be assured that we here, both in government and elsewhere, are anxious to help in one of the great experiments in America.

Personally, I again express the view that I did 6 or 7 years ago, that I would like to see the future of government of this area bettered by evolution, by experience, rather than by the imposition of remedies from this level.

I am not discounting the fact that it could be necessary. As a matter of fact, it was necessary in 1953, but on the experience of these last 6 years, I express with some confidence that this will not again have to be the case.

Remember this experience, or this experiment—which is now being studied across the world, even in Japan where Osaka's system, a city of 3.5 million, is being modelled on Metro's—is just 6 years old, that is all.

This government and this assembly has taken action before and it will not, now or in the future, evade its responsibilities. But again I express my confidence in the wisdom and the good common sense of the people of Toronto and the York community where there has been shown a genius for government ever since the beginnings of our country.

I was greatly interested in the thought in that last sentence. I would say that in the county of York was the birth of the idea that made all of that possible. I have no doubt that, out of this matter—which is, of course, in itself controversial, upon which there are very many points of view—that, from the people of this great community with their genius for government, will come solutions and answers to questions which, today, appear to be very perplexing indeed.

In relation to the municipal problem as a whole, may I make a very short reference to that here. I do this to place this matter in perspective, May I point out that the fact that The Municipal Act of today had its root in The Baldwin Act of 100 years ago—or 110 years ago—has really no relationship to the form of The Municipal Act today.

The rewriting of municipal statutes is a nice thing to talk about, but I can assure hon. members that it never could be done by a select committee of the House. It is a matter which will have to receive the attention of experts in The Department of Municipal Affairs, including Mr. Cumming and Mr. Yates, and then be submitted to this House for consideration.

I have already said, in this connection, the appointment of Mr. Yates as general counsel and executive assistant to the department was primarily for the purposes of really studying, and perhaps rewriting, many of our municipal statutes.

May I again refer hon. members to the defining of municipal responsibilities and federal-provincial responsibilities. This has often been referred to, particularly in the briefs of mayors and reeves. May I say, and express my opinion here for what it is worth—but certainly based upon not an inconsiderable amount of experience—that, if a rewriting of the statutes refers to this, then I may say that I believe that the entire idea is wholly impracticable.

First of all, municipal government is an arm of provincial government. Municipal responsibilities cannot be segregated from provincial responsibilities simply because they run together, and municipal responsibilities are delegated because of the fact that municipal administration, in very many cases, is not only necessitated by the constitution itself—that is The British North America Act—but by the fact that government and administration close to the people is absolutely an essential.

Now, let me give hon. members one or two examples:

First, perhaps I might here refer to the 1959 submission of the Ontario mayors and reeves. On Tuesday, I filed the 1958 submission; regarding the 1959 submission, I would have used the other brief but I tabled it, and this brief is almost the same in its essential wording.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Not quite as flattering.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it is pretty flattering. I thought it very nice.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Complimentary, not flattering.

Mr. Singer: It was pretty short.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say it was very heartening. Well, on the other hand if it was short, it was no less sincere, and I would say that in this brief, which I shall table, the hon. members might find the flattering references to the way the municipalities are treated by this government.

But that is not the point I am coming to because, as I say, those flattering references make me blush, and I am a modest individual, and therefore I do not want to elaborate on that at all.

Mr. Grossman: It is complimentary; that is better.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Complimentary; well—

An hon. member: The hon. Prime Minister will not have to blush so much at the reference there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: At any event, I want to refer to this.

In the brief of the mayors and reeves, over a period of years, has been a reference to a segregation of municipal responsibility from provincial and federal responsibilities. Those, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to read other than this:

Municipal responsibilities are said to be, for instance, water supply, sewage, street cleaning, snow removal and a host of other things of that sort—including local police and fire protection. The provincial responsibilities are indigent relief, public welfare and social services, education, subsidization of housing, civil defence, administration of justice and some other things.

Most of the hon. members are familiar with that representation, but in case they are not, I would be very glad to file this brief which will mean that both the 1958 and 1959 briefs are available for the hon. members of this House.

Mr. Singer: Has the hon. Prime Minister the 1960 report?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it has not come to my hands yet, this was given in November of last year. I would say that my hon. friend, like Rip Van Winkle, ought to wake up. This was filed with us in November or December—I think in the month of December, 1959, just last month, or the month before.

Take, first, education—which the mayors and reeves suggest should be segregated to the provincial level. In education it is impossible to separate this from the school board and municipal administration due to the fact, if for nothing else, that separate school rights, which cover about 20 per cent., I think, of our population, are entrenched in the constitution—The British North America Act—and the safeguards which run to those people are safeguarded at the municipal level, and accordingly could not be removed.

I could give very many examples of attempts we have made to better the situation, but the constitutionality of those things immediately comes into question, because of the entrenched provisions of The British North America Act.

Now, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) says, of course, that it is unthinkable that it could be removed from the municipal level.

I try always to read my hon. friend's speeches, with great respect, and from them I try to gather grains of wisdom. I may say that I do, too.

May I point out to him that it is unthinkable, it is impossible, to remove it from the municipal level. Of course, the only answer to it is in the grants system, which, I may point out to my hon. friends opposite, has been enlarged in my day as treasurer, and head of the government, from $8 million to over $150 million in this present day.

Secondly, we might take indigent assistance. We went through this problem last year in this very House in connection with hospital insurance. It is completely impracticable and impossible to deal with the indigent problem on purely the provincial level. It has to be municipal because of the complexities of administration. This is the only way it could be done, and that is true of practically every item mentioned by the mayors and reeves.

Now, that does not take away from the validity of the fact that the incidence of these things perhaps should be related to real estate. I think that is a fair statement. Of course, the mechanics of removing it are impossible, but the problem of removing the incidence is another question.

May I ask hon. members this question? What has been done to meet this?

I would say that there was never any real attempt to meet it, except by this government, and the answer is found in The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act.

I would ask hon. members to look at the schedules of the rewritten Act of 1957 which is in the statutes. It is much in the same form as it was passed in 1952 or 1953. If hon. members will look at the schedule they will see that part 1 of the schedules to the Act reads:

To assist each municipality in Ontario, the taxpayers of which contribute to municipal taxes towards the cost of administration of justice in a county, by way of unconditional grant, $1 per capita.

Now, sir, generally speaking, that pays for all the administration of justice. As a matter of fact, I believe that the county of York, certainly Metropolitan Toronto, is running in quite a substantial surplus position.

These inequities cannot be taken care of—there are perhaps some—the county of Hastings ran somewhat in a deficit position there, but not very largely—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Very, very few.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Very, very few.

Now, as a matter of fact, we have the benefit of local administration, but we are paying the bills ourselves but doing it in a way which does not increase the volume of cost very greatly.

That is true in part, too, to assist each municipality in Ontario in the position of welfare and social services, including indigent and unemployment relief, hospitalization and institutional care costs, and other services for its inhabitants by way of an unconditional grant, $2 per capita.

Where Hastings runs into a deficit on the other one, they run into a surplus here. As a matter of fact, I think the city of Toronto would probably run into a deficit on this item, but it runs into a substantial surplus in the other.

Now, sir, if we go to part 3:

In recognition of the larger per capita expenditures that municipalities, with large populations, are required to make in the provision of welfare and social services—including indigents and unemployment relief, hospitalization and institutional care and costs, and other services for their inhabitants—the following per capita payments to municipalities having a population of over 2,000, in addition to those set out in parts 1 and 2 by way of unconditional grants—

These grants vary from 10 cents per capita to $2.50 per capita.

Last year, in connection with hospital insurance, provision was made to pay a grant of 40 per cent. of the annual statutory payments made by municipalities on the average of the 3 preceding years, as set out in chapter 64 of last year's statutes.

I think, from what I have learned, that is working out reasonably well. In any event, I have not had complaints of its operation, which really means that while the municipalities are connected with the administration of hospital indigents, nevertheless, their costs are taken care of. I have not had any representation from any municipal body that I am aware of on that.

What does all of this tremendous municipal assistance add up to? It means that $18 million were paid out in municipal assistance in the year 1944, in the budget which was prefaced by that great document the hon. leader of the Opposition liked so much. The $18 million for municipal assistance altogether has grown last year to $265 million and, in this current fiscal year expiring March 31 next, to no less than $310 million.

Assistance for education has grown from $8 million in the year of that document of 1944 to $130 million, which I mentioned in this House this time last year, and to $150 million in the current year which is expiring on March 31. It has grown to mean that about 18 per cent. or 19 per cent. of our budget of 16 years ago has grown to be about 50 per cent. last year and something in the neighbourhood of 44 per cent. in this current year.

I would say, sir, that gives hon. members some idea of the magnitude of what the hon. gentlemen of this House, the members of this House, are going to be asked to do here this year, because those figures of $310 million and $150 million are going to be greatly exceeded this year.

In my concluding remarks, I want to mention federal-provincial implications and I do so in the light of that fact.

But, before coming to that, there is a matter concerning this House to which I would like to make a brief mention. I refer to a matter which appeared in the press on Tuesday I think, in anticipation of a statement which I was unable to make by reason of the lapse of time—the fact that 6 o'clock came around—and that has to do with pensions for members.

I would say that in the Throne speech, and since the commencement of this session, there has been discussion—by way of the Throne speech, and around this House—concerning the preservation of parliamentary procedures of government, and incidentally those of hon. members.

We presently are engaged in considering proposals for the strengthening of our democratic way of life, and improving the efficiency of our form of government.

All of this is going to increase immeasurably the responsibilities of individual hon. members, to say nothing of hon. Ministers of the government. This is a facet of the problem which I think we all have to consider.

Now, sir, last session I had occasion to refer to the duties and obligations of hon. Ministers of the government and, indeed, hon. members of Parliament and assembly. Actually, public service involves very great sacrifices. I want to say this: that my public service now runs well over 20 years, and I have found that public life in Ontario is of a high order. I say that after experience, both in Opposition and in government, I can speak highly of public life in this province. I am very glad indeed to pay tribute to public life as I have found it.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, public service involves very great sacrifices. A person entering public life must burn many bridges, and must abandon much of the security that can be built up and enjoyed by other persons. As a matter of fact, the hon. members of this assembly are making very great sacrifices to be here.

Very many of our best people under no circumstances would consider accepting a seat in this, or any other, assembly. I know that, over the years, from trying to get men to run in various ridings and constituencies.

Our people, I know, are prepared to assess that on its merits. I have had people say to me with the restrictions imposed on public life that certainly it is going to be pretty difficult to get people to serve.

At a time when we are talking about increasing and bettering the efficiency of democratic government, and increasing the responsibilities, now and in the future, perhaps it is time for this House to have a look at this matter. It must be remembered that the work of an hon. member of this assembly is year-round. It can be nothing else.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada, of our 11 Parliaments I believe that 6 have introduced pensions for members on an optional, and on a contributory, basis. They are the governments of Canada, New Brunswick, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Saskatchewan. I think that this is a matter that must be the subject of consideration here. It is a matter affecting this House. The opinions, therefore, of the House are important.

I would say with this background I would be prepared personally—and I am sure that my hon. colleagues would be prepared—to give every consideration to this matter. I want to be perfectly frank about my own views.

If it is not adopted now, it is my belief it will inevitably be in the future. Exacting demands and restrictions are required and imposed by our way of life. A person willing to enter public life, of course, must accept these things. I can assure hon. members that, without the recognition of this, it is simply not going to be possible to get the type of people to take an interest in the affairs of government which are constantly growing in magnitude.

As to the method of handling that, I am prepared to take into consideration the views of hon. members of this assembly. As a matter of fact I have some studies available for consideration if the House, in its wisdom, thinks that should be the case. This is a matter which involves this House, and I think on that basis it should be considered. So at this time I put the suggestion forward for the consideration of this House.

May I conclude by making some references to the matter of not only federal-provincial relations, but the position of this country and our province in this country, in a very brief and inadequate way.

Might I say that, in times of peace, the provinces and their municipalities are the right arm of government. That has been our historical past. It will be recalled that, at the conference on fiscal arrangements in 1955 and 1956, there was perhaps too little understanding or tangible recognition given to the problems of the provinces. In the light of Ontario's rapid industrial and population growth, the arrangements that emerged were in my judgment—and I so stated it—unrealistic and unjust to our people.

On November 25 the government of Canada convened a new conference and, from this—although it was only of a preliminary nature—much has been achieved, and the conference is to be reconvened this coming July as I understand it. Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think the Diefenbaker government, if I can put it that way, has done much.

Very much remains to be done, and I was very much interested in a television interview of the late hon. Paul Sauvé, whose lamented passing has made a great gap in public life in this country. Listening to Mr. Sauvé on the, I guess, the last days of December, I heard him say, among other things, in his very nice way: "It is the duty of a provincial government to be independent and to have its hands free."

I think that is a fundamental. I heartily and entirely agree with that. At the same time, with that I want to give this as my belief—and I use my own words in a way—that, despite the fact that we represent the great interests of a province, nevertheless we have to be Canadian in our outlook. As I have said before in one of my budget speeches, I am a Canadian, and I am proud to take that position. I am proud to take the position of one who independently represents our great province, regardless of who may be in office in Ottawa. I say that in a co-operative sense, in a sense of understanding. But I would say that a provincial government has always to sit on the opposite side of the table, as very probably a municipal government has to sit on the opposite side of the table, although I may say the mayors and reeves for a brief time got along on my side of the table. I think that is the case—that is the situation.

In my very considerable experience in federal-provincial affairs, I have always tried to get along with the government at Ottawa. It is well known that I had very considerable admiration—perhaps from a distance—for the late Rt. hon. Mr. King and for Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent. I have very considerable admiration for Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker and I am aware that the Ottawa government, of course, have their problems.

I would say that, in a very brief survey of what has taken place, first of all we had the federal attitude of refusing to contribute to the cost of relief for any case load below 45 per cent., and this has been reversed.

That was because of the insertion of the threshold provision that Ontario, at that time, refrained from signing the agreement.

Now happily we have to give credit to the Ottawa government, the Diefenbaker government, that this provision was removed, and Ottawa entered into an agreement that eliminates the arbitrary and invidious distinction between employables and unemployables.

A further advantage of the new arrangement is that the province was able to reduce municipal relief share of costs from 40 per cent. to 30 per cent.

Another achievement of this conference to date concerns hospital insurance. I would say there was a totally unrealistic condition required—the participation of 6 provinces before the plan came into effect. Thus, one of the notable advances in human betterment in all our history became a certainty with that removal in 1957. The Ontario hospital service programme came into effect January 1, 1959, and this plan offers very important advantages to our people in every walk of life. Another notable advance that has taken place in the meantime in the field of hospital services was the greatly increased schedule of capital grants to hospitals introduced two years ago at this time. The upward revision in both federal and Ontario grants stimulated the construction of all classes of hospitals, and made it easier to meet requirements of the Ontario hospital insurance programme.

The federal government also took a very important step in recognizing the province's need of additional revenue. The provincial share of personal income tax was raised from 10 per cent. to 13 per cent. as an interim measure until a federal-provincial conference had an opportunity of assessing the fundamental problems of provincial and municipal requirements. This important conference thus completed a great deal in a very short time.

That brings us up to this moment. The conference reconvenes this summer with this very important background. The co-ordinating committee of the conference, formed at the instance of this province, has been in conference. Very many meetings have been held; better understanding on the complex questions of federal-provincial relations have been arrived at. Very many studies which are in process will form a basis for discussions to be held at the plenary conference next July.

Now, Canada is faced with great problems. This province is faced with great problems. It is more than ever necessary, in this day of our country's development, that there should be closer federal-provincial collaboration. This is something that my hon. friends opposite know very little about, because theirs was a history of breaking up conferences, ours has been by the bringing together—

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. members know this, that I very much like to get into a fight with them, but I am endeavouring to keep this on a very high plane and level.

It is more than ever necessary, in this day of our country's development, that there should be closer federal and provincial collaboration, the lack of which our country and our province suffered from greatly until this government came into office.

At this conference we shall strive for a rational equitable tax structure in Canada which will do justice to all levels of government: federal, provincial and municipal. Our objective will be to make effective the great principles of Confederation. We shall assert the rights of our province and our people. May I repeat that, Mr. Speaker? We shall assert the rights of our province and our people.

But at the same time we shall, as we have in the past, be mindful of the problems of others. As I have said before, as a measure of justice, we have advanced the much discussed 15/15/50 formula which means about $100 million to Ontario in new revenues.

The present conference, which is about to make a survey of Canada's tax structure, offers an opportunity and a challenge to Canadian statemanship in arriving at a just and equitable settlement of the tax problems, in cutting the chains which bind Canadian development, in making it more possible for Canadians to avail themselves of the great opportunities which are ours.

I should say that this conference—and I say that I shall press this—should not only deal with the tax structure, but with the credit that is so necessary to develop our country and its possibilities.

Canadians are going to be faced with very great problems because of the expansion requirements of Canada. It is well that Canadians should know what are the objectives of our country, where it is necessary that we, as Canadians, should pull in our belts, where as Canadians we should perhaps expand the things that we are doing. In other words, at this conference we should assess the possibilities of this great land in which we live, and we should lay the foundations for all Canadians, regardless of party or anything else, to pull together for the good of our country.

Among other things—I think it is well the duty of this assembly here—we should inform the people of our country of our opportunities and also of our problems, in order that we may get everybody's shoulder behind the wheel.

One of the things that causes us to wonder, in this world in which we live in this day, is the fact that Canadians have here half a continent, a tremendous country, with 17 or 18 million people living in it, stretching from coast to coast. Yet in other countries their territory, their lands, are crowded beyond all comprehension on the part of our people. I say this, that in this world today Canadians have to get out and develop their heritage if they are going to hold it. I think that is a very positive thing.

In this country today we have to remember this: That we have opportunities that are unequalled in the world. No nation ever had the opportunity that our nation has. But it is up to us to take hold of these opportunities, and to go ahead with them, and it is that position I would like to take at this conference, and that is what I intend to take and am taking.

I feel it is a great opportunity and challenge for Canadian statesmanship and Canadian people.

In this field I think that we have a background of experience and accomplishment. This government has not refused to co-operate with other people. We have co-operated with other governments in Canada regardless of their political complexion, and I may say that I co-operated with other governments in Canada when we were the only Progressive-Conservative government in Canada. I have lost track of how many there are now of that great party of progress which is capable of doing such a great job for our country. And I would say, founded on this experience and accomplishment, we feel that we are fortified by all of these things and are going ahead with what I hope is a great Canadian opportunity.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister permit a question with respect to the subject that he has just concluded?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister—and before I ask a specific question, I would say that I am sure all hon. members of this House agreed with the observations he made, particularly his concluding remarks.

But the simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the people of Ontario are entitled to know, to appreciate, and to try to understand this financial problem. It does seem to me that, in order to do so, they must know specifically where this government stands.

Now, does this government intend to suggest to the Ottawa authorities that The British North America Act be amended so that there may be a wider distribution of tax revenues beyond the income from corporate and succession duties which we have talked about for the last 5 years?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that this point has arisen on one occasion in the proposal made, I think, by Mr. Garson if I recollect correctly when he was Premier of Manitoba. I could be wrong about that. I am speaking purely from memory. But it was a proposal that the federal government should collect certain indirect taxes, sales taxes, at the instance of the provinces.

That did not involve a constitutional amendment, and I would be very doubtful that a constitutional amendment on that, or the subject of indirect taxation, could be obtained. That is my judgment.

I think myself that there are, of course, these things. I have advanced the 15 and 50 formula. It is something that we previously have advanced, and I do not need to explain that that requires no amendment of the constitution.

I think myself that there are some other places that the federal government might well roll over, and that is in the matter of liquor taxes. At the present time, in liquor taxes and profits, the province gets about 40 per cent. and has all of the headaches—and I use that in its right sense you understand—whereas, the federal government sit in and clip the coupons to the extent of 60 per cent.

I think myself that we can have a real good look at some of these things. I would say to my hon. friend that I am not contemplating asking for constitutional amendments. I think that we can make Canada work within the gambit of our own constitution at the present time.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask a question that has to do with this business of pensions? I thought today that the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister were very fair. As a matter of fact, for a while I really thought I had seen a tear of kindness dropping out of his eyes.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I often cry over the hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: Apparently the hon. Prime Minister has a warm feeling today, and that is something, of course, that is very rare. But I was wondering—he went on as he always does, of course, in a very vague way—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I ask my hon. friend if he is asking a question? He reminds me of a baseball pitcher in the World Series. He takes about 5 minutes to wind up! Would he mind asking the question, and keep away from making speeches?

Mr. Reaume: Just a minute now. The hon. Prime Minister is not going to have the whole show—he has been talking for an hour and a half.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that the member asked if he may ask a question. I presume that has been answered in the affirmative, so I would believe it is perfectly in order for the member to go ahead with his question.

Mr. Reaume: Now, as I was saying, the hon. Prime Minister was explaining the business of pensions in a vague way. I want to know how he is going to handle this. There are some people in the House, and I think that the House is probably split on it, as to whether or not we ought to have a pension plan.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, sir, is this a question or is this—

Mr. Reaume: Well, the hon. Prime Minister did not explain it. I want him to explain that pension plan. How are we going to bring it about? Is he going to appoint a group of the House?

Mr. Speaker: Do not take a motion on it.

Mr. Reaume: I am not moving anything at all, I want to ask the hon. Prime Minister. I think that, after that long speech of his—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: Well then, I wonder if he would explain that to the House, the part on how we are going to handle the pension plan?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I did not get any semblance of a question in what the hon. member stated. I have been endeavouring to deal with serious problems here. I may say that I do not rate my hon. friend as a serious problem. He has a certain nuisance value which I would ask you, sir, to abate. I do not think I would add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. Reaume: Well, of course, he is making smart cracks. I asked a question I should think the hon. Prime Minister should answer. He is a wisecracker all the time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

I do not think we need any recriminations, and I might add that a member can ask another member a question which he has a perfect right to refuse to answer. But—

Mr. Reaume: We get these smart answers.

Mr. Speaker: —the questions must be questions and not statements.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House have not permitted me an appropriate occasion before now to express my congratulations to you on your election to that important chair and I want to do that immediately. You have succeeded a very distinguished occupant of the Speaker's chair in this House.

In acknowledging my appreciation to him, and extending my best wishes to you, I think I would put it this way: That if it is possible to live up to the high standards that he has set, I am certain that we, the members of this House, are going to be the fortunate benefactors. I know this is your objective and I wish you well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, every new session brings cabinet changes, and once again we have had them. I would just like briefly to say a word of appreciation to two of the hon. cabinet Ministers who have stepped down since the last House.

One, the hon. former Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop) is still here with us in the House. We had some fundamental differences during the time he was Minister of Education. But now that he has set aside these duties at an age when most of us would have set them aside many, many, years ago, I am certain that all hon. members of the House will join with me in wishing him the very best for many years of happiness and satisfaction, either in public life or when he wants to step out. Since he comes from the riding of Eglinton, I suppose it will be his privilege to step out when he wants to.

The other member of the cabinet, the former Provincial Secretary (Mr. Dunbar), is not a member of the House now, and all I would say of that happy warrior is that we miss him. This House could do with some of his colour on occasions.

There are two new hon. members of the cabinet and this is an occasion, Mr. Speaker, when it is a bit more meaningful, as far as I am concerned, to congratulate them on taking over posts, because they happen to be men with whom I had the privilege of working in committees of this House. Therefore neither is just another name—somebody that I have merely spoken to—but each is somebody whom I have come to know while working with him. I certainly would want to wish them well in the two extremely important posts of The Department of Energy Resources and The Department of Education.

Also, it is traditional to extend congratulations to the hon. mover (Mr. Davis), and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman), of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne. As far as the hon. seconder is concerned, he is an “old pro”, and I am not going to waste many words. As for the hon. member for Peel, however, he is one of the newcomers to the House.

It has always been my feeling—and I have expressed this before in this Legislature—that there is no nobler calling in a free society than to represent one's fellow citizens in a democratic Legislature such as this. I hope that he, and all the other newcomers of the House, will find it as satisfying an experience as they had anticipated.

However, once he gets his feet planted here, I hope that he is going to be a little more discriminating in the advice he takes from some of those “brain trusters” who provide the material for speeches on the other side of the House. I say this because there were some occasions—and I am not going to take the time now to go into them—particularly when he got talking about the province of Saskatchewan, for example, that his facts were at least 15 years out of date. They do not become any truer just because the Tories continue to repeat them.

However, he looks like an intelligent fellow and I am certain that he will become more discriminating.

Now, I have a plea which, at the early stages of this Throne debate, I would like to express. I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether it is necessary that we have this monotonous flow, these paucins of praise about the government—from the government's side of the House. Now you nod, Mr. Speaker; I hope it is not a nod of assent that this is a magnificent government. We have heard it so often that I suggest if we are not convinced now we are not going to be by constant repetition from the other side of the House. Therefore, this pouring of superlatives upon superlatives, until it sounds as phoney as a soap ad, I suggest, might come to an end.

It is usually with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) that they “heap it on,” and understandably so—most of them would not be here if it were not for him.

However, when they talk about the hon. Prime Minister, sometimes I wonder whether it is really the man I know. I know he is a magnificent fellow, I know he has many great achievements to his credit; but I remember, for example, one hon. member of the House, who has since moved on by the decision of the electorate, who reached a peroration in one of his speeches in which he said that there were 3 great men of the twentieth century, and who were they? Einstein, Salk, and Leslie Frost. That is what he said!

Now, the hon. Prime Minister assures us that, on occasion, he blushes, and I am certain he has been blushing ever since about that.

In short, spare us this Niagara of adulation.

Now, before I leave this, I have a suggestion. I know the government may not accept it but since it is in a generous mood this afternoon, I am throwing it out in the hope it will be accepted.

The Scottish clans have a fierce sense of family pride. In fact, with some of them, I am told it is so fierce that humility rarely appears in their relationship with their fellow human beings—only in their approach to God.

One of them had a prayer, and this is a prayer which I want to suggest as the Tory prayer. I offer it free, gratis, to hon. members on the other side of the House. Their prayer was this:

Oh, Lord grant that we may be worthy, at least in some small measure, of the high esteem in which we hold ourselves.

No ill feelings; just let those hon. members take it and add it to their words each night as they seek forgiveness.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): He is using it himself, is he?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We try to live up to our great opportunities.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, turning to the Throne speech, I would say that the contents of the Throne speech fall into two general categories.

The first category is with regard to legislation which is foreshadowed for this session of the Legislature. Now, there is not much point in talking about it until we have the details, so we can let that portion rest for the moment.

But the other portion of the Throne speech is a frank acknowledgment of many of the problems and needs of the people of the province of Ontario. But, Mr. Speaker, it was absolutely amazing the number of occasions on which, when these problems had been acknowledged, we were then told that this government was proposing not action, but study.

I wonder if the House is aware of the fantastical array of commissions—Royal commissions, commissions of inquiry, technical committees—that are all going on now looking into subjects on which, I want to suggest, this House could act immediately. Just consider some of them for a moment:

A year ago, the government faced this "hot potato" of fluoridation. Now, what did they do? They handed it over to a committee. Of course, the immediate problem was an election and since some of the back benchers—and front benchers like the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman)—were not happy about it, they handed it over to a committee. Now we discovered a few weeks ago that this committee, appointed a year ago, has scheduled its first meeting for May 2, in the year 1960.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): First public meeting.

Mr. MacDonald: First public meeting? Well, I shall be interested to know what has been going on behind the scenes if this is the first public meeting.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: He made the statement. He is wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Farm marketing is an issue which is increasingly important and controversial in this province, amid the whole complex of agricultural problems.

A year ago the government decided, particularly once again on the eve of an election, that this should be looked into. They set up a committee of inquiry. Now, we are informed that we are going to get only an interim report. At a later date I would like to find out a little more as to what exactly this committee is doing—how effectively it is operating.

The government, for example, admits that the question of portable pensions is an important question. It weeps and wails about the difficulties faced by people who have not an adequate pension when they retire; about the tragic waste of human talents of people who cannot get jobs after 40, when employers will not hire them because of the results it has on their pension plan. Yet what is the government going to do about it? They are going to set up a technical committee.

In fact, the government is even going to investigate itself—on this issue of drugs, for example. The government is going to investigate itself because here, faced with all the public concern over the high cost of drugs, we are told in the Throne speech that they are going to look into the cost of drugs only in our provincial institutions. Why do they need to look into the cost of drugs for the provincial institutions? Surely that information is readily available. It is the cost of drugs for the people of the province of Ontario—

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald:—you and me and the next person, not just the provincial institutions. This is merely chipping at the corners of the problem, instead of coming to grips with it.

Take the issue of housing. We now know that 10 per cent. of the homes are required on a low-rental basis, and one-third on something below the current economic cost of privately constructed homes. This simply means that we need homes built on a low-cost and other arrangement for some 10,000 to 15,000 people in the province of Ontario each year—since we are building 50,000 homes a year, and one-third of them should be in this category. At least 10 per cent. of them, which would be about 5,000, should be in the category of low-rental homes.

Yet we discover that this government in 10 years—in 10 years, not one year—has built something fewer than 5,000 low-rental homes. This is a proud boast which we are supposed to accept enthusiastically as the record of this government.

Then there is the unsatisfied judgment fund—everybody is unsatisfied with it. Nothing was ever better named than the unsatisfied judgment fund. Yet, once again, the government is going to look into—merely look into—this high cost of auto insurance.

We now have the experience of establishing a hospital plan in the province of Ontario, and with the lead once again in the province of Saskatchewan, of moving towards a full health plan—not just hospital insurance—surely we, in this rich province of Ontario, could move. But what is the government going to do? Mark this, Mr. Speaker, it is going to look into the implications of extending it to out-patient care.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hon. Mr. Douglas was looking into it out there.

Mr. MacDonald: He will have it a year from now, and he is looking into the whole question of health insurance—

Hon. Mr. Frost: But did he say so? Has he a committee to look at it?

Mr. MacDonald: —and the hon. Prime Minister was looking into the implications of the cost of out-patients only.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in reply, I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that about a year from now we will be able to judge the results of his committee, and compare them with our hon. Prime Minister's government looking into the implications of one small aspect of the problem.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the need is for action, not for study on a lot of issues. This government is going through the motions of study which is designed primarily to delay action. Before this session of the Legislature is over we, in the CCF group, will give the House the opportunity to rescue the government from its procrastination.

Now, Mr. Speaker, turning from that general consideration of the Throne speech, leaving the details of legislation, I want to look for a few moments at some of the basic attitudes of this government with regard to what, I think, is an extremely important phase of the life of the people of this province.

I refer to the collective bargaining agencies of farmers through their marketing schemes, and of labour, the industrial worker, through his trade union, because these are the organizational means, at the grass roots, through which the people themselves are seeking to come to grips with their problem. This is one of the most important aspects of the fulfilment of democracy in a meaningful way.

The more I watch this government in action, the more I am forced to come to the conclusion that, when the chips are down, this government is proving to be a fair weather friend of both the farmers, in their struggle to get effective collective bargaining agencies through farm marketing, and of labour, through the trade labour movement.

I want to examine first the question on the farm side. Now, the policy of this government was laid down pretty clearly about two years ago. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) made a statement of policy which I have quoted before in the House—but for our consideration at the moment let me re-quote it.

Speaking to the Ontario federation of agriculture, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of November 7, 1957, he made this statement:

Farmers have the right to work out their own marketing plans. I am not interested—said the hon. Minister of Agriculture, —in any organized opposition to farm marketing plans from any mercenary group which have interests of their own.

The Canadian Press reported in a somewhat more colourful version, but the import is the same thing. The Canadian Press dispatch read as follows:

I don't propose to be on the fence. I don't propose to be a jellyfish. I hold no brief for any interest trying to take advantage of organized agriculture in this province.

Fine, Mr. Speaker—there was the statement of policy by the hon. Minister two years ago.

The hon. Minister attended another federation of agriculture convention this past fall, and it is interesting to note the changes in his thinking during the interval. I have here a transcript of his speech, in speaking to the convention. I would just like to read a few paragraphs of it.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): Read it all.

Mr. MacDonald: I will be reading sufficient of the portion that—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Let us get the full impact of it.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister of Agriculture said:

Legislation within the powers of the Ontario government has been provided to facilitate marketing operations, but the government must always be in a position to see that the powers granted are used within the framework of the authority.

Now, the real controversial issue at the present time on the marketing front is, of course, the hog marketing scheme. The question I would like to ask the hon. Minister is this: In what way has the hog marketing scheme moved outside the framework of authority which has been granted in the marketing legislation?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: By selling hogs over the telephone.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will come to that later. I continue:

Abusive power or discriminatory action cannot do other than place the government in the position of having to rationalize or even revoke the authority granted.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, to note the threat running through this whole speech—the whole tone has changed from two years ago, when the farmers were assured they were going to be master in deciding the kind of marketing plan that they wanted for their produce.

Now, if the hon. Minister chooses to object to some specific phase of a plan, like selling hogs over the telephone, he says in effect, "If this doesn't cease, then your authority is going to be revoked." The hon. Minister went on:

The sole intention of marketing legislation is to grant to producer groups the necessary authority to help the producer groups bargain in the face of our changing economic conditions. I am confident we have done this to your advantage.

It is my feeling, however, that this authority is being misinterpreted in some quarters, with the result that it has been suggested that there is a faction seeking to take over authority which would tend to disrupt orderly marketing as a whole.

Now, here is another instance of the big club, the allegation that somebody has taken over authority, and if they do not do as the hon. Minister says, then he is going to revoke their power. But he goes on:

One thing is certain, and that is it is the duty of the government to assure itself that the methods of sales under any marketing plan are above reproach. Under the hog producers' marketing plan, the powers delegated give them a monopoly of the product.

Officials of my department, and those who have made a study of the plan, feel that pricing and selling must be done by a system that is completely in the public view, and which would have the confidence and trust of all concerned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question I would like the hon. Minister to explain to the House some time later is this: Who complained on this specific aspect of the plan? I recognize there are many controversial aspects in the hog plan—for example, with regard to assembly points, personality clashes, things of that nature—but for the moment we are concentrating on the actual sales method. Now who made the protest?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: The farmers, hundreds of them.

Mr. MacDonald: Hundreds of them? Well, it is about time the hon. Minister found out who the hundreds were, because they do not seem to appear every time the hog producers' association have a meeting.

As a matter of fact, except for a few stooges, some of whom came from the hon. Prime Minister's own county, there were only about 5 at the last meeting when they considered the whole proposition. Five out of something over 400.

And I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the main source of all the protest with regard to this procedure of sales, leaving aside the other controversial aspects of the scheme, the main source of protest is coming from the big packers—from the big packers and the drovers who used to be getting under-the-table payments from the packers when they took the hogs directly to the plant. But let me continue with the hon. Minister:

I am of the belief that a local board, having the monopoly on a product, must assure themselves that their selling methods are not open to question.

Open to question by whom? To the hon. Minister, when he is bowing to the dictates of the packers?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: We give them the legislation and we must make sure that they are above board.

Mr. MacDonald: To the hon. Minister when he is bowing to the dictates of the packers, because this is the main source of protest.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Read the Gordon committee report on boards.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, this is where the whip comes down, Mr. Speaker. Gone is all the generosity of two years ago where farmers can decide on their own marketing scheme. Now the whip is being cracked. Listen to the hon. Minister:

Speaking as Minister of Agriculture, I must say that, in my opinion, the present selling methods in the case of hogs is not in the long-term interest of orderly marketing. After long consideration I feel that this selling method must be modified prior to the submission of a plan to another vote.

Incidentally, that is an enigmatic phrase or sentence, if I ever heard one, because obviously the hog producers do not want a vote or a change in sales methods.

However, the vote has since been laid on the line.

Quite apart from hog marketing it is true with any commodity that marketing cannot be wholly satisfactory unless there is mutual confidence and respect between producers and processors.

In other words, unless the producers are willing to change their plan to suit a Minister who bows to the dictates of the big packers!

This is supposed to be mutual trust between the packers and the processors. We have now gone full circle, Mr. Speaker. The promise of the hon. Minister two years ago, that the farmers can develop a scheme in accordance with what they want, is now out the window—at least, when there is a group as powerful as the packers cracking the whip, and this government, in its working relationship with big business interests, responds obediently.

The hon. Minister concludes:

The present programme must undergo some modifications in selling techniques, but the most important development will be in the adoption of a policy that breeds confidence and trust.

Well, I could go on more with what the hon. Minister said here, but the point I want to draw to the attention of the House is this: That here are a group of producers who have problems in their scheme. There are differences among farmers—I will concede it. There are differences among farm organizations. But, Mr. Speaker, this government is operating on the old imperial principle of divide and rule, playing off one group against another, and the net result is that they are going to see that the interests and the demands of the packers are realized.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: How many farm marketing plans have they in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind what is happening out in Saskatchewan. Just consider what is happening here.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: No more interest in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacDonald: Just consider what is happening here. This is the red herring that is always dragged across.

Before I leave the hog marketing plan, Mr.

Speaker, there is another phase of this on which I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister.

I have had some communications from out in the country in the last few days, and I am a little curious to know what is going on in a survey that the government or the farm products marketing board is now having made. At this late date, one would assume that the government would be certain of its facts about this scheme. They have been cracking the whip and trying to undercut and destroy it for the last two years, so one would have thought they would have had the facts about the scheme. But now, at this late date, they are going out looking for the facts.

They have fielded a survey team, which has investigated the central agency on Dundas Street, it has gone out and looked at the assembly yards, but now it is going out and talking to the farmers, and it is asking questions. In view of the past attitude of this government, one would legitimately have some suspicions as to the objectivity of these questions, and I know, at least in one instance which has been communicated to me, that the whole bias of the question is against the present scheme.

So, in addition to the fight of the packers and the drovers against the producers, now the government has openly entered the controversy in opposition to the plan.

I can cite one instance, for example: After some discussion, this farmer turned upon the man who had been sent to get his reactions, and asked: "Well, what are your views on the scheme?" The man advanced a couple of views. He said that he thought that the hogs perhaps should go directly to the packing company. He also expressed a view that a different method of sale should be introduced.

This is a wholly inexcusable proposition—that the government, on the eve of the vote, should have survey men, so-called, in the field, who are in effect intervening on one side of this issue.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members want final proof of just where this government stands when the chips are down, in terms of farmers being able to build their own marketing schemes, they have it. They have it right there.

However, the interesting thing is this, that when the hon. Minister of Agriculture went down and laid this on the line to the assembled delegates of the Ontario federation of agriculture, there was a resolution on the order paper regarding marketing. That resolution came up the next day, and the result was perhaps as striking a display of militancy that has been seen in farm federation in quite some time.

As a matter of fact, the Rural Co-operator summed it up nicely in their November 10 issue. On the front page, the headline reads:

CHANGE YOUR METHOD OR ELSE
—GOODFELLOW

There was the dictate.

Now what was the reply of the farmers?

OFA WILL ASK MORE POWER TO PRODUCE MARKET BOARDS

The opening paragraph is this:

The Ontario federation of agriculture has moved to ask that the provincial government clearly assign to producers' marketing agencies the right of determining their own marketing policies and selling methods.

In other words, the hon. Minister had wavered in his stated policy, and the federation of agriculture has now become so uncertain about it that they ask the hon. Minister to reconfirm government policy.

The Rural Co-operator account continued:

Strong approval of the resolution by the convention came the day following Agriculture Minister Goodfellow's address, warning the hog producers that they must change their selling methods or face some form of government intervention.

Little wonder that the federation accepted the challenge, and fought back. Little wonder also, Mr. Speaker, that when the Ontario federation of agriculture came this year and presented their brief to the cabinet and got what delegations coming to this government always get—a verbal runaround, particularly from the hon. Prime Minister who usually launches into some irrelevant dissertations about his boyhood in Orillia, how he carved his name in the trunk of the apple trees and all the rest of it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I never heard anything so stupid in all my life.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the kind of thing that happens.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would never have thought of carving my name on anybody's apple tree.

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, after the delegation had got this verbal run-around from the cabinet, they were so incensed that they went back to their offices on Huron Street and held a meeting.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Who?

Mr. MacDonald: The Ontario federation of agriculture delegation.

They had a meeting in which they were so incensed that they passed a resolution of protest at the way they had been treated. If I may presume to suggest to the Ontario federation of agriculture—the only mistake that they made is that they should have sent that resolution of protest to the hon. Prime Minister so he would have known exactly how they felt after they had left.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why would they pass it if they did not send it?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will not go into trying to explain the motives of why, having passed the resolution, they did not send it to the hon. Prime Minister. But if the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Frost: They passed the resolution and then put it in the wastepaper basket.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister and hon. Prime Minister do not believe what I am saying is true, let them do some checking. Of course they know it is the truth. This government has its—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Gestapo?

Mr. MacDonald: They have their friends in the federation who will inform them of it.

After the election last June, Mr. Speaker, the Rural Co-operator carried an editorial. In that editorial, they have a paragraph which I thought was very interesting:

ELECTION MANDATE

The return of the Frost government with the vast majority of rural ridings indicates strong support by farm people for marketing plans under The Farm Products Marketing Act. In addition to popular support, the government can count on the support of the smaller opposition group, the CCF, which, far from attacking present marketing legislation, has demanded stronger enforcement of it. The Liberal opposition supports marketing legislation to the extent of having promised a marketing department if elected, although their support for present marketing plans appeared less wholehearted than that of the CCF.

I think that is a pretty accurate assessment of the situation—with this exception, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Where are his new ridings?

Mr. MacDonald: Where are the hon. leader of the Opposition's?

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is accurate except that, in light of developments of the last 6 or 8 months, it is clear that the government support for legislation has been so uncertain as to suggest that the editorial praise for them was too fulsome.

However, let me turn from this to another example of the kind of thing that agriculture is facing in the province of Ontario at the present time: I refer to the effort of a little group in Brant county who sought to establish a milk co-operative to haul their milk. This is one of the most illuminating developments on the Ontario farm front for some years.

I had the opportunity of sitting in on the hearings of the milk industry board on last October 8 in Brantford, and again in this city two weeks ago. Seldom, if ever, Mr. Speaker, have I seen a more blatant ganging up of business interests to deprive a group of farmers of a basic right. Not only the dairies; not only that well-heeled trucking lobby which has kept this government from instituting taxes which were unanimously suggested in the special select committee report some two or three years ago; not only these forces, but what puzzles me most, Mr. Speaker, is what I can describe only as the dubious role of the milk industry board in the whole situation.

I am not going to speak at length on this because of the fact that the decision of the milk industry board came down only yesterday, and I have not had a chance to read it in detail.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There was an interim order first, but this is a permanent order.

Mr. MacDonald: I realize that. In fact, it is the interim order, in what time permits, that I want to draw to the attention of the House.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Maybe he is the one that stirred up that Brantford situation.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right? Well, I am flattered, Mr. Speaker. I am flattered to think that the hon. Minister thinks I could have stirred up this whole battle in Brantford over the milk situation. But I can assure the hon. Minister that the first time I visited Brantford, to look into it, was on October 8, and it had been going on for a little time by then.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: It got worse after that.

Mr. MacDonald: It has been going on, not just since August, it has been going on since May.

This co-op came into existence—at least started hauling operations—last May. Immediately, the dairies started to discriminate. They would not accept full quotas. They would leave a few pounds of milk in the cans and send them back. They would dispute temperature readings that had been accepted for years.

They eventually started to colour the milk, and return it. Finally, of course, the whole issue blew up when they laid off 4 of the producers. This was the development which brought the issue before the milk industry board.

Certainly, as the hon. Minister observes, an interim order was established. But, Mr. Speaker, the thing that puzzles me about the operation of the milk industry board—and I submit this in all seriousness to the hon. Minister—is that, after they had examined the situation, and were provided with clear-cut evidence of the most flagrant kind of discrimination, they passed an interim order—ordering, among other things, that these shippers be taken back. They were taken back, and some two months went by before the board reconvened on October 8, in Brantford.

During that two-month period, the situation settled down, because the board had appeared to take a strong hand and the dairies apparently saw that they were not going to be able to get away with it. But what happened on October 8? I hope I can say this respectfully—but I have to say as a frank reaction to the hearing—I sat and watched in amazement the judge of the milk industry board arguing vigorously, with the representatives of the co-op and the lawyers, for the dairies.

The record will show beyond any shadow of doubt that, time and time again, he tried to get on the record an admission from the lawyer for the co-op that there was no more discrimination, even when the co-op lawyer insisted that there was discrimination. The plea of the judge and the plea of the board was, in effect: "Let's forget about all this. This is nasty past history."

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I think my hon. friend, when he is talking about a member of the commission, had better refer to him as a commissioner. He is not sitting there as a judge.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he is often referred to as judge, but the hon. Attorney-General is technically correct.

But here was a case of flagrant discrimination by dairies. The milk industry board in effect argues: "Well let's forget all about this."

If I may draw a sharp analogy, it is the equivalent of saying: "You have committed murder, but fine, let's forget about it. Just be good fellows from this point forward."

At the same time, the chairman of the board repeatedly reminded the co-op of occasions when it had overstepped the line, and did not follow the regulations. But the important point, Mr. Speaker, is this: At least in my interpretation, and I know it is an interpretation that is shared by many people around Brantford, because of the attitude of the board, the dairies were encouraged to revise the war of attrition—I use the words, "war of attrition" as a direct quote from The Country Guide.

The battle has gone on until, not only do we have this little co-operative—some 50 farmers, 33 of whom are shipping on the co-op truck—backed by the local milk producers' organizations of this province, to fight their battles, backed by the milk producers' organizations of this province backed by the United Co-operatives of Ontario, in a life and death battle with these business interests—the dairies backed by the Automotive Transport Association, in other words, the truckers' lobby.

And the government agency in the picture took a stand which, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, was so weak and so uncertain that it reopened the whole issue which, I am told, has split and torn families apart, torn a whole community apart, so that it will be literally years before the repercussions have died down in the Brantford area.

Now, if farmers are going to be able to build their collective bargaining agencies, Mr. Speaker, just as labour is going to build their collective bargaining agencies, they are entitled to have government policies and action which will create a favourable atmosphere—not an atmosphere frustrated by what the hon. Minister described in that speech two years ago as intervention by every "mercenary or selfish interest" that wants to come in.

A study of the situation in Brantford leaves one with the almost incredible conclusion that everybody has a vested interest in farming except the farmer. The truckers claim that they have their vested interest; the dairies of course claim they have—everybody, except the farmers. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

It is interesting to note the extent to which this kind of battle is being waged on the labour side of the picture. I want to start my remarks with regard to the labour aspect by reference to the select committee report. This report has become a matter of considerable soul-searching and controversy at the present time. I know that it is easy to be wise in hindsight—what was that the hon. Prime Minister was saying?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say, are there any divisions about it on the hon. member's side?

Mr. MacDonald: There are not, and if the hon. Prime Minister brings down the wrong kind of bill he will find out how united we are in the fight.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I thought a couple of the hon. member's fellows were split up.

Mr. MacDonald: Our numbers—we were never divided on it.

The point I was going to make a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Prime Minister interrupted, was this: That in hindsight I think there was a serious weakness in the approach that we took in the preparation of this report, and it was responsible for a lot of our difficulties. For two years, the committee listened to investigations and then, about June 10, it was decided that we were going to move towards the preparation of a report.

In fact I recall distinctly that the chairman of the committee expressed the hope that we could get this report completed before we went on holiday, about July 10. The result is that we had two weeks of sittings, in camera, in which we discussed the 700-odd different recommendations that came before the committee. We sweated them out.

In many instances, I found myself in disagreement with other members of the committee; at least, of the 11 dissents, there were 10 of them in which I was one of the dissenters along with a succession of other members of the committee.

However, after we had worked out these recommendations in draft, and the secretary of the committee had compiled the report, it was brought back about July 8, or July 10 for a final quick review. Then the draft document was taken away and members of the committee did not see it again until just before it was tabled in the House.

One of the reasons for some of the problems that have arisen is that, in the last stages of that report, the work was too rushed, with the result that some of the recommendations,

Mr. Speaker, are just plain sloppy and nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member say that last year?

Mr. MacDonald: I agree; I did not, though I did mention one last year—this question of essential services. In fact, if hon. members will look at Hansard for the day after the report came down, I got onto the record the fact that recommendation No. 25, with regard to essential services, had been made in response to a plea that, in certain northern towns only—where the essential services of the community were supplied by the local mill—if there was a strike, steps should be taken so that the heat or light or the power would not be turned off in the rest of the community. I think everybody in the committee agreed with this.

But in the editing, it was captioned generally as “essential services,” as though it were in reference to all essential services, all across the province. While this was clarified in Hansard, unfortunately a clarification in Hansard does not go out with every copy of the report across the province, and there has been widespread misunderstanding.

But even more significant—and I draw this to the attention of the members of the committee, I am not proud of this at all—I did not dissent from it, why I do not know. This is recommendation 31—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Just listen.

Financial reports, pensions and welfare funds—this is recommendation No. 31. In the second portion, it stipulates—if I may put it in paraphrase—that if a member of a union who has been contributing to a welfare fund withdraws from this union, either because he loses his job or he moves elsewhere, he should be able to withdraw his contribution from the welfare fund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why any group of 11 people, including myself—other than the excuse of haste—let that kind of a thing go through, I do not know. Because one cannot operate a welfare fund on an insurance basis, with the privilege of withdrawing contributions after, say, 5 years, if somebody leaves the job. This would be about as impossible an arrangement as to concede to the holders of a 5-year fire insurance policy the right to reclaim his premiums at the end of 3 years if he has not had a fire. It is just not operative, it is nonsense.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I want to explain about what happened in the rush in which this report was completed during the final month. Here is another example—in recommendation 31:

That all funds collected by a trade union for the purpose of pension or welfare funds, and all funds collected by a trade union and an employer for the same purpose, shall be invested and retained in Canada.

Now, the interesting thing, Mr. Speaker—and I say this particularly to my legal friends, who were on the committee—is that there is a gross discrimination within that proposal itself. It says that if the funds are collected by the union alone, or if the funds are collected by the management and the union, then they must be invested in Canada. But it does not say anything about those funds which are collected by management alone—presumably they are free to do what they want if the plan happens to be one in which management alone contributed.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Why would he fight for that?

Mr. MacDonald: It is a good question. But when the hon. Minister asks me that question, let him put it also to the 8 Tories on the committee, 5 of whom are lawyers.

There is a further question, Mr. Speaker. It is this: Quite seriously I question the jurisdiction or the power of a province to dictate that anybody's funds in this province cannot be invested outside of the country. I am not a lawyer, but I feel rather certain that, with our controls over foreign exchange and investment all appealed, it is beyond the powers of the province of Ontario to say to anybody, whether management or labour, that they cannot invest their funds outside of the province.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): May I ask the hon. member a question? Are there any other points with which the hon. member agreed that he dissents from now?

Mr. MacDonald: There are 4 or 5 others, and I can assure the hon. Minister that there is no doubt about them.

I made the recommendation—and this is for the information of the hon. Prime Minister, who is being misled by news stories—I made the recommendation to our caucus with regard to those that we should oppose. The caucus agreed, and the executive and the provincial council of the CCF in the province of Ontario has endorsed it. If the hon. Prime Minister has any illusions as to where we stand on this, let him just bring down his bill with regressive amendments and he will find out the kind of fight he is going to have on his hands.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member's party was split right down the middle. Right down the middle.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): The hon. CCF leader cracked the whip, because that is what he does.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): This speech is for the Ontario federation of labour.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there were a few things in that report I agree that I should have dissented from, but I will have to bow to the two hon. representatives of the Liberal party on this. They were consistently wrong on what they did, and what they did not do.

Mr. Speaker, it being 6 of the clock, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, the hon. member for York South is making aspersions and allusions to the hon. members of this House that are not true, and that he knows are not consistent.

In reply to what he has just said, Mr. Speaker, I would make a recommendation to the hon. Prime Minister. I think the man who operates the children's hospital in Orillia should be dismissed from the civil service because, the other day, he had the best specimen the world has ever seen of mental retardation and he let the thing escape.

Mr. MacDonald: I will only make this comment, that after the clobbering the hon. member for Kenora has taken from everybody because of his comments, not with regard to Orillia, I can imagine he had to take time out to dig up something like this. It is about the level that he normally produces.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, on this happy note I move the adjournment of the House.

Now, might I say that tomorrow we will go ahead with items on the order paper. There are a large number of bills that should be referred to these committees, and I will see, or try to see, that there is sufficient authority on the part of the committees to take care of it.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome as guests of the Legislature pupils from Lynden high school, Lynden; Grandview school, New Hamburg; and Orde Street school, Toronto; and also visitors from McGill University.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions were brought up, laid on the table, and received:

Praying that an Act may pass incorporating the Ontario Institute of Professional Agrol-ogists.

The supplementary petition of the corporation of the city of London.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE TREES ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Trees Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to authorize counties and townships to use any of their lands for reforestation purposes, rather than only lands that have been acquired for that specific purpose, and to use any of such lands for forestry purposes as defined in the Act.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT, 1953

Hon. M. Phillips moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Corporations Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we can divide this into two parts: The first, we are adding 289A which simply states that no corporation which holds its charter in Ontario can change its address from one place to another or even from one address on a street to another address on a street, without the consent in writing of the Provincial Secretary.

Now the second part is to delete section 352 and insert a new section 352. The purpose of the amendment to section 352 is to give Quebec corporations doing business in Ontario the same right to hold lands in Ontario as Ontario corporations, doing business in Quebec, have to hold land in Quebec.

And I may say to the hon. members of this House that we have a reciprocal agreement only with the province of Quebec which covers a licence to do business, and also a licence in mortmain. But under section 352, Quebec corporations can do business in Ontario, but not hold a licence in mortmain. Now this gives them a licence in mortmain in order that they can hold or dispose of or alienate any property.

Corporations incorporated in the other provinces, and in other countries, require an extraprovincial licence from this department in order to do business in Ontario. When they obtain this extraprovincial licence, the present section 352 gives them the right to hold land in Ontario for the purposes of their undertaking in Ontario.

Certain corporations such as, for example, corporations incorporated at Ottawa, do not require a licence to carry on business in Ontario. Such corporations do, however, require a mortmain licence if they wish to hold land in Ontario.

Ordinarily they are for a Quebec corporation wishing to do business in Ontario. This company would require an extraprovincial licence, and when it obtained such licence, it would then have the right under the new section 352 to hold land in Ontario.

However, since 1930, by virtue of reciprocal legislation in both Quebec and Ontario, Ontario corporations are exempted from the requirement of obtaining a licence to do business in Quebec, and likewise Quebec corporations were exempted from the necessity of obtaining an extraprovincial licence to do business in Ontario.

Under the Quebec legislation, Ontario corporations do not require a licence in mortmain to hold land in Quebec. However, in Ontario, Quebec corporations are not exempted from the mortmain law, and because they do not require an extraprovincial licence to do business, they do not have the right under the present section 352 to hold land in Ontario.

At present, therefore, they must obtain a mortmain licence to hold land in Ontario, whereas Ontario corporations do not require a mortmain licence to do business and hold land in Quebec. I may say that we are simply bringing our legislation in Ontario in line with Quebec legislation.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ACT, 1954

Hon. J. P. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Department of Education Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill has two sections, the first of which authorizes a form of contract to be made between a board of education or board of trustees and an itinerant teacher; and the second section provides authority to establish additional schools for the deaf and for the blind.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Public Libraries Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill also has two sections, the first of which provides for a maximum fee to be charged between library boards when one library board is providing service to another library board. The second section is merely procedure to clarify the way voting is done in a library board.

THE TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the first section of this Act provides that a certificated teacher, who is serving as an employee of an organization of trustees or ratepayers, can continue to make contributions to the superannuation fund.

The second section provides that the next actuary evaluation of the teachers' superannuation fund will be done as of the end of 1958, rather than as of the end of 1957.

The third part of the bill provides that the commission may, in certain circumstances, recommend that a person who has been given a partial disability pension be reclassified to receive a full disability pension. The situation arises where a person is adjudged to be partially disabled, subject to a further examination which may reveal complete disability, and if the individual dies before that second examination takes place, then a dependent might suffer as a result of being classified as partially disabled. This will give the commission authority, in circumstances like that, to award a pension to a dependent on the basis of full disability.

The final section of the Act provides for making regulations to clarify the conditions under which teachers may continue to contribute to the fund while they are away from teaching on leave of absence, in order to further their professional status as teachers.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

DRIVER DEMERIT POINT SYSTEM

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Before the orders of the day, in a moment, I will ask permission to file certain statistics pertaining to the demerit point system of the province of Ontario.

The statistics consist of 5 parts:

1. The number of drivers with demerit points (cumulative totals).
2. Automatic suspensions under The Highway Traffic Act (monthly).
3. Automatic suspensions under The Highway Traffic Act (cumulative totals).
4. The convictions within the point system regulations and by nature of offence on a monthly basis, and
5. On a cumulative basis.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that a year ago in this House I dealt rather extensively with the coming into being of the point system into the province of Ontario. You will recall that, back in 1954, a select committee of this House, in presenting their report which has been very largely brought into legislation, had a recommendation whereby they suggested that the initiation of a point system in the province of Ontario should be considered.

Shortly thereafter, a committee of magistrates and representatives from The Department of the Attorney-General and The Department of Transport considered the matter, and regulations were passed toward the end of 1958 which came into being on April 1, 1959.

As of December 31, 1959, we have had a 9-month experience. I think all hon. members of this House will agree that, from their own basic experience, of the 3 things that have to do with highway safety—the automobile, the highway and the driver—that the driver is the predominating factor. Indeed, two-thirds of the accidents in which there is death, or loss of limb, or property damage are brought about by either error or improper activity on the part of the driver.

We, in The Department of Transport, are confronted with continuously devising means whereby we can get right to the individual driver, to save him and save others against his careless and—in many cases—wrongful actions.

On the desks of the hon. members, they will find a calendar card which we are distributing this year to some one million drivers as part of our safety promotion. On the back, they will find, in a condensed form, the whole of the point system scoring.

Now, the 9-month period perhaps is too short a time for a scientific analysis or approval of the point system to be positive that it is achieving all that we had hoped it would achieve. But the statistics indicate to us that sufficient has come forth to justify the bringing into being of the programme in order to bring about and encourage more responsible individual drivers.

From the moment that each one of us as motorists place ourselves behind the wheel of an automobile or any motor vehicle, we are immediately confronted with a series of circumstances and situations which very often call for accurate and quick activity on our part.

We have, within the system of traffic control, laws laid down in The Highway Traffic Act which indicate to motorists what they should do in relationship to each other, and a breach of those rules and regulations are offences under the Act. The reason they are offences is not because somebody thought it a moral thing in itself that a driver should not go against a red light, but because that is where injury, loss of life and damage will occur.

Concurrently, we have devised a system whereby there is a correlation between the offence committed and the points which are assigned, varying from 9, 5, 3 and 2. It gives the individual driver the opportunity of several things.

Firstly, he can keep score for himself, and, as he commits an offence or a series of offences, he has in a very easy form a standard by which he can judge his own driving.

Secondly, because we, as human beings, are prone to obey the law when there is a policeman looking over our shoulders, the point system is, in a way, a policeman, a constant reminder to the driver that he must obey the law, drive properly, or consequences will follow.

That is where I believe the magic in this system is, that it is a means whereby we can reach down to the individual. The enforcement officers are on the outside; the realization of the consequences of the point system operates from the inside, we hope, to make better drivers on our highways.

It is significant that there are some 25 jurisdictions on the North American continent which now have the point system. I recall for hon. members the operation of it. When a motorist has accumulated 6 points, he receives a letter from the department, purely and simply a warning letter. This warning letter states that he must improve his habits or take more care, or something serious is going to happen to him—the suspension of his licence.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. members of this House who have considered the matter, and especially those hon. members who had the privilege of sitting on the select committee on highway safety, will agree that the only thing that we discovered that was in any way a deterrent to continued improper driving practices was the suspension of a driving privilege.

We have now reached the stage where there is some controversy whether the carrying of an operator's licence is a privilege or a right. Some people are apt to believe it is theirs as a right. I take it as a privilege—a privilege not extended by The Department of Transport to a motorist, but a privilege extended by the citizens of the province to each other through the agency of The Department of Transport.

That privilege is dependent upon several things, mainly obedience to the law, and The Department of Transport is the agency to keep track of whether that man should continue to enjoy that privilege.

I am one who does not believe, Mr. Speaker, in very lengthy suspensions as applied to the general run of our citizens, our two million motorists in the province of Ontario; by and large they are those who take care, who drive carefully, who obey the law. Sometimes they are apt to be thoughtless or forgetful.

But on our highways and streets and roads, we cannot permit that, even for seconds.

And I believe that, basically, our system of highway safety, in a deterrent way, should be based on very easy methods of suspending the licences of our motorists over short periods of time.

The lengthy suspension brings into play factors which sometimes are too costly to the individual motorist; that is, the 3-month suspension or the 6-month suspension very often can bring consequences, such as loss of employment or otherwise, which are over and above the type of factor that we want as a deterrent. I am not speaking of those who, through a course of conduct over a period of time, have indicated that they have no claim of privilege at all to be on the highways for any period of time because they constitute a continual danger to others. I am talking of the average citizens who form the bulk of our two million motorist population.

I believe it is only necessary for a motorist to be deprived of his driver's licence, for a short period of time, for him to realize that he should change his ways in the future. I would suggest to hon. members of this House that if they would try, for a period of two months, to lock up their driver's licence in a vault somewhere and not use it, they would realize what a deterrent it is, and how dependent we all are in this day for the operation of a motor vehicle.

I believe in the short suspension to remind the motorist that his conduct on the highway must be proper, not just for his safety but for the safety of the other 1,999,999 drivers.

The statistics, Mr. Speaker, will show hon. members that there are now some 4,355 drivers who have reached the warning level. That is, they have either received, or will shortly be receiving, letters from The Department of Transport. This is in itself an advantage over what was in existence prior to April 1, 1959, because there are over 4,300 drivers who have now been told that they should be on their toes.

At the 9-point level the motorist is called in to show cause, or to indicate, why his licence should not be taken away. The purpose of that interview is that we have skilled trained personnel who will discuss the matter with the motorist, and indicate to him a change in his ways for his own safety and the safety of others. We do this because we are not desirous of taking people off the road, we want to keep them on the road but keep them in safety.

I would say that 1,251 have advanced to what we call interview level; and at this stage some 27 were suspended for a period of one month and some 212 were suspended because they failed to appear. The others went on their way, we hope, determined to do better and in fact did, as I shall indicate shortly.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Where do they report for these interviews?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have the interview officers in our examination centres; and in the course of this session I will indicate to the House the spread of our new examination centre system throughout the province of Ontario, and there will be interview officers in each of these locations.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Minister is answering that question, maybe he would permit another one. Did I understand the hon. Minister correctly to say that he favours the shorter suspension rather than a long suspension after an accumulation of points? He made reference to—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was indicating an overall philosophy that I subscribe to in the matter of suspensions.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, this philosophy is wholly different from the philosophy that has been prescribed by the government in the legislation thus far. Now, very frankly, I think it is a good philosophy, but is this government going to change its legislation? Is the hon. Minister going to do anything about the convictions they personally have?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We now have under consideration the whole matter of suspensions, because basically our intent is to keep the drivers on the road, but to keep them there safely.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the hon. Minister going to do about this? It seems to me this is a fruitless report. I know, but this is just silly—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I am now tabling the results of a very affirmative step taken by this government in that direction during this past year. The present suspension period under the point system is 3 months.

I will be discussing, during the course of this session, with hon. members of this House, some of the effects that long suspensions bring into place.

I think that the man is the predominating factor, so that only if we can reach into him and convey to him the importance of his driver's licence, that is what we should drive at. If we can do it by our safety promotion campaign, that is the best thing. If we have to actually take away his licence in order to bring to his attention how important the licence is, that is what we will have to do.

Mr. Wintermeyer: For goodness sake, when is the department going to make its decision? It has had a year and a half, or more, to study this, and it is still, it seems to me, up in the air.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the point system in itself alone. I was explaining an overall philosophy of suspensions.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Is the hon. Minister's philosophy going to be policy?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I think that there will be very serious consideration given to it by the government and, as a matter of fact, I intend to propound it before hon. members of this Legislature. I am very happy to know already that the hon. leader of the Opposition agrees with me, and that is 50 per cent. of the battle. I am sure that when the hon. leader of the Opposition sees—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Agreement on this side is 50 per cent. of the battle.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I was referring to the hon. leader of the Opposition, but with the addition of the hon. member it would be 50.005, I think.

The hon. leader of the Opposition will note that I come to the 12-point level. At the 12-point level, there have now been some 89 suspensions under the point system.

But the important thing is not the fact that we have just suspended 89 drivers on our highways, the important thing is that, although there are 123,000 drivers who now have points assessed against them, that represents only 5 per cent. of the over two million drivers who have licences; and that, of those who have received the warning letter, only 6 per cent. have gone on to gain any more points; and of those who were called in to have an interview, only 3 per cent. went on to commit further offences to get 12 points. That is the—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): They get caught at committing—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I go on the basis that our enforcement of this province is complete.

Now a further interesting thing is that women drivers, Mr. Speaker, who constitute 20 per cent. of the motorists of this province, have only 2.6 at the 9-point level; that is the female sex, who constitute one-fifth of the motoring population had only one-fiftieth reach the 9-point level.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): My wife always thinks she is the better driver.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, the report has served one purpose.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask my hon. friend, concerning these automatic suspensions of 12 points, for how long are they?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The automatic suspensions come under The Highway Traffic Act, that is apart from the operation of the point system itself.

Mr. Nixon: No, on the point system.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko. On the point system it is a 3-month suspension.

Mr. Nixon: How do those points accumulate, over what period of time?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Over a two-year period.

Mr. Nixon: And then the slate is wiped clean, is it?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the motorist has accumulated 12 points in a two-year period, he is suspended for 3 months. Then the slate is wiped clean and he starts again.

Mr. Nixon: But if he has accumulated only 9 points—is that wiped off?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The points that are more than two years old are taken off the slate. At least they are taken off the point system slate. We continue to carry a full driver's record into perpetuity because the second time—and I hope there are not too many in the province of Ontario who will reach that level—the man who gets 12 points the second time, in a second-year period, is taken off the road for 6 months.

Now, perhaps I can enlist the hon. leader of the Opposition, and share another thought with him, that in respect of the suspension under the point system, it is a full suspension for a 3-month period.

As to my own thinking, I am inclined to believe that the suspension should perhaps remain the same, but that half of that period should be on a full suspension and the other half should permit him to use the motor vehicle in the course of earning his livelihood. Now I have 51 per cent. on my side.

That is my own thinking at this time, because the basic philosophy is to bring to the attention of the motorist the necessity of careful attention and obedience to the law at all times, because accidents happen in split seconds.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have arranged for all hon. members of this House to obtain these statistics. I would ask them to read them and to follow them for, in the course of this session, there will be ample opportunity I believe for all hon. members of this House to express themselves within this House, and before the safety committee, in regard to matters relating to highway safety, suspension and other things.

Within the statistics there are also, apart from the point system—that is, suspension by the accumulation of points—the statistics representing the automatic suspensions under The Highway Traffic Act. That is where a motorist gets 12 points at one crack—that is, if he is convicted of criminal negligence, drunk driving, impaired driving, or obtaining a licence by misrepresentation. Of those there were, in that 9-month period, some 7,000 so suspended. In that 9-month period there would be approximately, on these figures, about 7,300 suspensions.

There were other suspensions in relation to financial responsibility. I shall go into that on some other occasion.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): May I ask the hon. Minister to comment on a point in regard to driver responsibility? I have not heard it mentioned. I refer to a statement I read regarding a survey taken by the hon. Minister's department which said that a large percentage—I forget the figures—of automobiles were mechanically unfit in the steering mechanism, the tie rods and the gears. I feel this would come in the responsibility of the driver.

It is not mentioned on the card, and I have not heard anything about it since I read about this survey pointing out the high percentage of mechanically unfit cars on the road. Does the hon. Minister have some comment in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, that is not relevant to the point system. It could come up on some other occasion, but I would be very happy to answer the question of the hon. member.

The point system is actually based on the moving violations, action on the part of the driver himself with the exception of one or two, I believe, and that is obtaining a driver's licence by misrepresentation and failure to report.

Now, in respect of the motor vehicles, and there will be other occasions during this session upon which we can go into this more fully. But we have set up, in the Metro Toronto examination centre, one of the most up-to-date motor vehicle inspection lanes on this continent, which is presently mainly on a voluntary basis, and we are gaining the experience within that area. On the basis of our examinations there, it was indicated that a fairly large number of vehicles that were tested had some defect, not necessarily unsafe, but had some defect to some degree. We hope to gain experience on a wider basis.

I had an inquiry from the mayor of Oshawa just a day or so ago, in which he indicated his interest. They have an examination centre there. What the future will bring depends upon our experience here, particularly where we feel we should channel our efforts in the immediate future.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I should like to ask the hon. Minister for some information which he did not deal with in his résumé to the Legislature, but arises naturally out of the remarks which he made.

I should like to ask, through you, Mr. Speaker, after the period of suspension is over, what proportion of the drivers are then able to get their driving privilege reinstated? The hon. Minister will know what I mean by that. It is that he has a requirement that they must file proof of financial responsibility. I should like to hear what percentage of drivers are able to file that proof, because in many cases, Mr. Speaker, we know that it is the insurance companies, in refusing to give insurance coverage, that determine, I should say, more than the hon. Minister, who can drive motor vehicles in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Here again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury should have held his question until perhaps another time during the session, because I am really only dealing with the point system at the present time.

However, I cannot give him the percentage because I have not those figures before me. Those are other sets of figures. But I can tell him this, as I indicated to the hon. member for Brant, that once our examination centres are set up, including the new examination system throughout the whole of the province, it will then be a requirement for everyone to attend upon this examination centre and be re-examined, after a suspension period has been filled, to determine whether he is qualified to continue driving on the highways.

But the matter of his financial responsibility enters into a whole new ambit of discussion which perhaps could be saved to a later date.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Minister if all types of people are treated in the same manner with respect to the automatic suspensions under this plan? In other words, does the man who drives 10,000 miles a year get treated in exactly the same manner as perhaps the taxi driver or some other individual who might be inclined to drive as much as 100,000 miles per year? Further, do the statistics point out any grave injustices as a result of those who have already accumulated the points?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, that opens up also a wide ambit of discussion.

First of all, all citizens are treated equally under the point system. That is, there is a charge laid of an offence under The Highway Traffic Act, a hearing by a judge under our system, and a conviction registered. Notice of that conviction is sent to The Department of Transport, the driver control branch, and on the basis of that conviction the points are assigned.

There is no discretion whatsoever, in this respect, within the department to pick and choose as to who will get the points. That is an automatic procedure.

In respect of whether those who drive 10,000 miles are treated any differently than those who travel 5,000 miles, I may say they are not. Indeed, that is a point which was brought forward at the time that the point system was being initiated, and some representation was made by those who drive many thousands of miles during the course of a year, that perhaps they should receive a preferential treatment—that is, that perhaps they should have more points.

But I think if hon. members will examine that proposition, they can see that it lacks a certain amount of validity.

In the first place, this is based on offences, convictions against the law. That is, we do not give any person an opportunity of committing an offence more often than somebody else.

In addition, I think we should take the position that those drivers who drive many thousands of miles, who depend in a way for their livelihood on the operation of a motor vehicle, fall within the class of what I call the professional driver; that is his job and he, apart from asking for preferential treatment, should consider himself in the preferred position. He should consider that his talent and skill enable him to comply with the rules of the road, and with the law, perhaps to a better degree than someone who has only the opportunity of driving on the so-called week-ends.

I am happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that the examination of the statistics that we have of those at the 9-point level, and of those who have been suspended at the 12-point level, lead us to believe that not only is there no so-called discrimination against that type of driver, indeed their record bears out the fact that they are what we believe them to be, professional drivers in the true sense.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

First, the report of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959.

Second, the report of the hon. Minister of Public Works of Ontario for the 12 months ended March 31, 1959.

Third, the return from the records of the by-election held in the electoral district of York West on October 4, 1956, and October 18, 1956. Also the return of the by-elections held in the electoral districts of Glengarry and Middlesex North on August 22, 1957 and September 5, 1957. Also, of the by-election held in the electoral district of Lanark on October 10, 1957 and October 24, 1957. Also, of the by-election held in the electoral district of Elgin on January 16, 1958 and January 30, 1958. Also, of the by-elections held in the electoral districts of Cochrane North, Huron, Renfrew North and St. George on April 28, 1958 and May 12, 1958. Also, of the by-elections held in the electoral districts of Hastings and Lanark on August 28, 1958. Also, of the general election held on May 28, 1959 and June 11, 1959.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): A very satisfactory report. A very satisfactory report, indeed.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): On what date was that York West by-election held?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, first the advance poll date, and then the by-election date.

Hon. Mr. Frost: A wonderful report.

THE INTERPRETATION ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 1, "An Act to amend The Interpretation Act."

He said: I might just say that this is a very short amendment to the Act. It simply repeals section 22, and the effect of the repeal is that this very old section, which deals with the administration, is being re-enacted in a more appropriate form in The Evidence Act which will appear in, An Act to amend The Evidence Act, section II.

Yes, this will go to the legal bills committee, and I would say all these bills, unless especially mentioned otherwise, could go to the legal bills committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE EXPENSES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 6, "An Act to amend The Administration of Justice Expenses Act."

He said: In moving this second reading, I would say that the purpose of the two amendments is to give more time for the delivery of criminal justice accounts to clerks of the peace for audit by county court boards of audit.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much additional time is, in fact, being given. The Act simply says that one—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): The word fifteen will be substituted for the word one.

Mr. Wintermeyer: It gives two weeks?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Two weeks, yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is that of any material assistance?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, apparently it is. I might say that this amendment is recommended by Judge Derby of Lincoln county and is endorsed by the auditor of criminal justices account.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 7, "An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act."

He said: On the bill, sometimes there has been great difficulty in dealing with small estates of a deceased wife due to the inability, sometimes, to determine who were her heirs or relatives.

The committee on administration of justice has agreed in principle with suggestions made that the husband of a deceased wife should be put in the same position as the wife of a deceased husband. That is, that he should be given the first $5,000 of the estate clear, in that situation. One-third or one-half of the remainder, depending on whether or not there was issue of the marriage, would be divided accordingly.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BILLS OF SALE AND CHATTEL MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 8, "An Act to amend The Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgages Act."

He said: This bill repeals section 35 of The Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgages Act, and it merely has the effect of doing away with a return to the Minister of Agriculture showing a number of undischarged chattel mortgages in the clerk's office, which seems to be a completely useless procedure, and the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) is quite happy to have the amendment made.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): May I ask the hon. Attorney-General what he is going to do with the mass of records of these things that are in the hon. Minister of Agriculture's office now?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I have not worried too much about that. But, I suppose, at some time or other, we might have to do something about that. I have not considered that particular point at the moment.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BULK SALES ACT, 1959

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 9, "An Act to amend The Bulk Sales Act, 1959."

He said: The hon. members will remember that a new Bulk Sales Act was put on the statute books last year. It was a complete revision with a number of changes and improvements in the old provisions. But in the working out of the actual wording, there has appeared a few anomalies, and there are some provisions that could still be improved upon. The effect of these amendments is to try to do that.

The main amendments are:

1. To make it clear, beyond any doubt, that real estate is not covered by The Bulk Sales Act in any sale of a business.

2. To facilitate more readily the completion of small sales up to $2,500 without holding them up by reason of provisions of The Bulk Sales Act, 1959, which apply more readily to larger estates.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what is the significance or purpose of section 1? Would that include bank loans and things like that? "Secure trade creditor means a person to whom the seller is indebted—"

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The purpose of this amendment, of section 1, is to insure that the landlord is included in the definition.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, that is explanatory but the section itself reads as follows:

Secure trade creditor means a person to whom the seller is indebted, whether or not the debt is due: 1. for stock, money or services furnished for the purposes of enabling the seller to carry on business.

Now, what about a bank loan?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, all I can say is that the wording is done by the legislative counsel from the previous subsection. It merely purports to have the effect of insuring that a landlord is included in the definition. It goes to the legal bills committee. If there is any question on general principle, I will be glad to deal with it but we are not changing what is already in the Act, just broadening it.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CERTIFICATION OF TITLES ACT, 1958

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 10, "An Act to amend The Certification of Titles Act, 1958."

He said: Mr. Speaker, having had a year's experience in the administration of the Act, it was felt that certain minor amendments should be made and these are the ones that are appearing in the bill. I do not think it needs any more explanation than that at the present time.

One of the provisions was requiring posting on the land, and that seemed to be quite an unnecessary method of giving any notice—items of that sort. Again, the legal bills committee can have a good look at the whole thing.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 11, "An Act to amend The County Courts Act."

He said: This is merely to put in this particular Act the same rate for clerk's fees as appears in the general sessions and county court judges criminal courts which were made last year, but apparently it was overlooked in the county courts, raising the fees from $7 to $10 per day.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN ATTORNEYS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 12, "An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act."

He said: The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to make regulations providing for the safe-keeping, inspection and destruction of books, documents and papers of Crown attorneys. A similar clause was added to The Magistrates Act in 1958.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN WITNESSES ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 13, "The Crown Witnesses Act, 1960."

He said: It was recommended again that the requirements of the Act—that the judge must sign the Crown witness sheets of which the judge knew nothing—should be removed. In doing this, it appeared advisable to revise the Act to bring it up to date—which has been done by this amending Act.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): There are a couple of principles—in fact, I think maybe it is basically the whole principle in this bill—that I am a bit curious about. It arises out of the figures the hon. Attorney-General has on the schedule. I mean, on what basis does one discriminate as between people who are being called for witness, paying one $15 a day and another $6 a day? Or, alternatively, on what principle do they arrive at the proposition they would pay them a half, or a third, of what they normally are going to earn?

For example, the average attendance at court or for attending a court for one day is $6. Now, anyone who is only earning $6 a day today receives something around $2,000 a year on the basis of an average income.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: In connection with that, of course, the attendance would be on the basis of that, so it does not mean necessarily that one be there for a day. In a well-organized case—what I hope the co-ordinator of justice administration working with the courts will accomplish eventually, and with good lawyers like some of the hon. members opposite who conduct their cases in good manner—one would expect the witness to be on tap perhaps for just a matter of a short period. If he is going to be there to give evidence for half an hour, he may be there for the morning, something of that sort. There are cases when, of course, he may be there for several days, but after all, these schedules have to be average, and it is felt that this is a fair figure.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is a very fine explanation but I suggest it is not going to fit the facts. If a person is going to be off for a day he is going to be off for a day.

Supposing it is a man working in a plant. Does the hon. Attorney-General mean to say that he is going to be off for the morning and then rush in for the afternoon? If he is called for a witness, he is going to be off for the day. If he is earning $12 or $15 a day, and that would be a very modest amount,—today that is $3,000 in terms of income—he gets $6. In my experience with people who have been in courts it is the opposite. They go and find they are sitting around for heaven knows how long before they are called, let alone getting out so quickly they can go back and work the latter half of the day.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Or the case is adjourned for another day.

Mr. MacDonald: Or adjourned for another day, exactly.

It seems to me that a $6 fee is inadequate. If we are, in effect, going to order a person to come and be a witness, the fee should be more in keeping with today's income.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that we are a little out of order asking questions at this stage. I think the members will agree that the questions of the details of the bill will be more appropriate during the committee stage and—

Mr. MacDonald: The whole bill is the principle of how much we are paying these people, and I would deduce from the hon. Minister upon what principle he comes to this conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: I am referring to questions. Actually, questions are more appropriate at the other time.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, if you will give me that indulgence—if you will rule that this is out of order I will not pursue it—I have no objection to dealing with it for a moment. I would say that witness fees have always been in question, at different times, as to their adequacy or sufficiency. But we have built up a system of administration of justice that is not based entirely on the value of time. If it were, why the costs would be a great deal higher than they are. Actually, it is an attempt to give, as my hon. friend says, good public service, and at the same time to give people the opportunity, too, of coming before those forums and preserve their own liberties.

Now, we do not expect to meet the rate of pay of the highest paid people in the province when they come before our courts. When that time arrives, I expect the courts will suffer.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would direct the hon. Attorney-General's attention to subsection 2 of his proposed bill. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it introduces a novel practice in the law.

I draw his attention to the difference between the second subsection and the first one. The Crown attorney in the first one is limited in the amount by the schedule attached that he may pay a witness, and yet in subsection 2 it would appear that the amount that he pays the witness for the preparation, or for the trial, or preparing any documents or article is unlimited.

At first blush, Mr. Speaker—I know this is going to be examined very carefully in the legal bills committee—it seems to me to give a great deal of power to Crown attorneys, a power that might be exercised in a very ill fashion by an unscrupulous Crown attorney.

I am not suggesting that there are any such in this province, but I would ask the hon. Minister to consider whether, for example, it is not possible that a Crown attorney might hire some very fancy psychiatrist or some other person, and bring him long distances, and it might in that fashion—by being able to pay for ability—that it would work a prejudice to accused persons who are not able to provide themselves with experts or with the facility that Crown attorneys sometimes can.

I draw from my own experience in making those remarks.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My hon. friend has drawn attention to something that perhaps could be well discussed in committee. Actually, I think this is a change from the judge to the Crown attorney, am I right in that? And it might be that, after talking to the officers of the Crown, it might be found that perhaps that was not a wise change, but that is what we have legal bills for. It was in the judge's discretion that this now changes it to that of the Crown attorney.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): There is merit in what he says.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you. That compliment shall make my week-end complete.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am all for the accused myself.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer again to this question of the fees being paid under this Act. I could be mistaken—I must confess I have not checked the Act that is being replaced—but it is my impression that these are the same fees as were previously in the Act, and I would suggest to the hon. Minister that it might be worth considering revising them in the light of—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Why, if the hon. member had run before and had been elected, he would have been here when we changed the Act, because we raised those just a matter of two years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: What were they before?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: $4.

Mr. Bryden: I am here now in any case, Mr. Speaker, and I am suggesting that the hon. Minister might very appropriately consider these fees again. I do not think his explanation is very satisfactory, that this may only amount to a loss of an hour or two or three for a man who is called in.

I myself had only one experience with being called as a witness, but on that occasion I sat around most of the day and then was told that they did not need me anyway and I could go home. I never did appear.

Mr. Sopha: They did not take him to press.

Mr. Bryden: Well, they probably thought I would be a very poor witness, but I did sit around all day long doing nothing, in most uncomfortable quarters. In my particular case, it was not a serious matter. I did not collect a fee because I did not lose any pay. But it could be a pretty serious matter to a man, living pretty close to the line, who loses his day's pay and gets certainly not average compensation, Mr. Speaker, but minimum compensation at the very best. I would suggest that these fees might be reconsidered.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, this is a golden opportunity. Why does the hon. Minister not tell us what Mr. Hepburn paid witnesses back in 1934?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have revised all that.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MARRIAGE ACT

Hon. M. Phillips moves second reading of Bill No. 14, "An Act to amend The Marriage Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I explained this pretty well on first reading, but I would like to say further that we have 3 types of statistical records; one for births, one for deaths, one for marriages.

Now, we are leaving the words "racial origin" in two of these Acts for the present. But, on the form that has to do with The Marriage Act, we are deleting the words "racial origin" because we feel they do not serve any useful purpose, and the word "citizenship" is there which I gave the definition for the last day. I do not think I need to do any more explaining at this time.

Mr. Singer: I commend the hon. Minister for bringing forward the amendment to this Act. But he has pointed out something to me that I was not aware of, that there are two other Acts where these words are kept. What is the purpose of keeping them for the time being in the two other Acts?

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): That has absolutely nothing to do with this bill whatever. As a matter of fact, if the hon. member brings it up in committee, that is the time to do it.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DIVISION COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 15, "An Act to amend The Division Courts Act."

He said: This bill has been prepared on the recommendation of our officer in charge of division courts supervision in the department, and is complementary to the amendment Act reading in 1957, to provide for the transfer of superior court judgments to a division court for the purpose of garnisheeing the wages of judgment debtors, thus providing a cheap, fast procedure.

This really just brings supreme court judgments into the same line as county and district court judgments, where they can be brought into division court for processing, the same as other claims in division courts.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 16, "An Act to amend The Evidence Act."

He said: This amending Act has a number of sections which I think are self-explanatory. Section 4 provides for the use of examinations for discovery of an officer or servant of the corporation at trial according to the rules.

Then it also provides for a form of declaration to be used in matters coming under provincial jurisdiction. Up to now we have been using a Canada Evidence Act form and it was felt better to have our own.

Also, provision is made for the judge at a trial to permit more than 3 expert witnesses being called, and he can do that at any time under the amendment, whereas previously the application had to be made before any expert witness was called.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 17, "An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act."

He said: The amendments in part in this amending Act bring the Acts coming under the fire marshal's department in line with present day practice for the purpose of the 1960 revision of the statutes. Amendments have been suggested and approved by the committee of the fire marshal, and I do not think it is necessary to add any more than that by way of comment at this time. This, of course, will go before the committee on legal bills.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 18, "An Act to amend The Judicature Act."

He said: The amendment to this bill will permit a sitting of a high court in a county court-house where the county court-house may be located outside the county town.

Now, at the moment I do not think we have any situations of that sort, but with the great growth that is going on in our city areas and county seats, it could easily become a matter of considerable importance. Actually, at the present time, in the planning in Lincoln county, it might be highly desirable to pick a site just outside the city of St. Catharines.

This, along with certain other amending Acts in relation to county courts and surrogate courts, makes that sort of thing possible for the future.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 19, "An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act."

He said: I might say the same thing, for that amending Act, as I said a moment ago in relation to county courts, holding courts in county court-houses.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE JUVENILE AND FAMILY COURTS ACTS, 1959

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 20, "An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act, 1959."

He said: The effect of this amending Act will be to give, to our juvenile county court judges, province-wide jurisdiction, to enable the judge of one county to move into another as required, without having to obtain, as he does now, a special order from myself, in order to get the necessary authority to do so.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 21, "An Act to amend The Land Titles Act."

He said: Basically these changes are simply to get the Act in tidier form for revision of the 1960 statutes. Changes clarify the intent and improve the nomenclature of the existing Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LOAN AND TRUST CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 22, "An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act."

He said: The amendments to this Act are based on the recommendations of the institute of chartered accountants of Ontario. The effect of the amendments is to provide for bringing accounting practices, in connection with auditing of this type of companies coming under this Act, in line with the general practice of loan and trust companies under The Loan and Trust Companies Act, and I think with also The Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE NEGLIGENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 23, "An Act to amend The Negligence Act."

He said: The amendments here have the effect of permitting application to be made ex parte for adding a third party in an action, without in any way interfering with the rights of any of the parties to take such steps as they may see fit afterwards, if that is not the proper procedure.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Attorney-General if it is his intention that this bill will also go to the legal bills committee?

Hon. Mr. Frost: All these bills go to the legal bills committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 24, "An Act to amend The Public Trustee Act."

He said: These amendments bring The Public Trustee Act in line with present day practice, and certain practices which are to be found in other Acts, such as The Bank Act and so on, in regard particularly to investment powers of money into court.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 25, "An Act to amend The Registry Act."

He said: Section 9 of The Registry Act deals with the amount of security to be furnished by a registrar. The figure was previously not less than $4,000 and not more than $10,000 but, with the great increase in the business of some of the registry offices, it is felt that a $10,000 bond might not be sufficient, so this amendment makes it possible to bond from anywhere from $4,000 up to $50,000, depending on conditions.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is due to the general prosperity of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest to the hon. Attorney-General that the fees in such registry offices in the city of Toronto, and some of the other places, are far in excess of 5 times what they used to be? Perhaps he should consider extending this principle to make the top limit higher, even as high as $100,000.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I would be pleased if the hon. member would attend the legal bills committee at the time.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, in regard to that, I wonder—if we are going to get in the subject of fees under The Registry Act—if the hon. Attorney-General, in future years, could look to the provision of consolidating these fees under The Registry Act into a little bit more sensible amounts than they are at the present, as far as the registration is concerned?

Now that most registry offices have photostatic machines, and there is not the copying work to be done, some of the fees that are charged under The Registry Act for registering instruments are pretty nonsensical. They bear no relation at all to the work done, and it would simplify matters, to the practitioner in any event, if there was a standard amount for the registration of any instrument in a registry office.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will be very glad to keep that in mind.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member think they are too high or too low?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SHORT FORMS OF CONVEYANCES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 26, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Conveyances Act."

He said: This is a very simple amendment, merely inserting the word "successors" so that corporations, as well as trustees and so forth, are assured of successors. The same thing applies to two others that I will be mentioning in a moment.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SHORT FORMS OF LEASES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 27, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Leases Act."

He said: I would say that the same remarks as I made a moment ago apply here.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SHORT FORMS OF MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 28, "An Act to amend The Short Forms of Mortgages Act."

He said: I again say that the same wording that I mentioned under order No. 33 would apply here.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this time I think, in accordance with the usual arrangements, I should move the adjournment of the House.

On Monday I would like to go ahead with the bills on the order paper and more notably, orders 41 and 42 on this order paper relating to the energy board and the Act respecting energy. Those two bills no doubt would provoke a good deal of comment. They will, of course, go to the committee on energy, but, nevertheless, there would be I think very general discussion in this House relative to those matters.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): May I point out to the hon. Prime Minister that Bill No. 42 is not printed, as yet.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It, of course, will be—it will be definitely printed at that time. On the other hand, if there are any requests that we should not send it on to the committee on Monday, it will be all right with me. It could be debated by those who are familiar with it, and the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) could give the explanation of the bill—which he would give on second reading in any event.

There are the other two orders, item No. 6 and item No. 7, on the order paper today—the Throne debate, and the debate on the committee on organization of government. I would say that my own preference would be to go ahead with order No. 7, the debate on the committee on the organization of government, while the matter is reasonably familiar in the minds of the hon. members.

I move the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 3.40 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, pupils from Ryerson public school, St. Michael's school, St. Bernard separate school, and Holy Rosary separate school, all of Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, and received:

Of the corporation of the town of Arnprior praying that an Act may pass authorizing certain public works, and the issue of debentures therefor.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could again bring before the House a resolution which stands in my name in relation to certain matters that are to be referred to certain committees.

I want to give this undertaking, that this motion is no way designed to, nor does it, restrict the committees. As a matter of fact, the background is this:

In past years, for example, the committee on agriculture has had a pretty wide commission. However, that has never actually been reduced to writing at all. Now, I am not in favour of restricting that, nor do I want to restrict any of the committees.

This resolution in no way precludes us from enlarging the work or the ambit of the authority of these committees. As a matter of fact, I would be very glad to discuss, from time to time—with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—the matter of any enlargements that are necessary.

But again, the mere creation of a committee really does not give it any authority. As the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) has said, actually in practice in some committees, a very great deal of authority has been taken which actually does exist according to the rules of the House. In embarking on such a wide committee activity as we have, I would like to get that regularized. This is the proper step in the way of regularizing what the committees do. I can assure my hon. friends opposite that in no way is it intended to restrict the work of the committees but to regularize and enlarge it.

For instance, in the fish and game committee, we have over the years adopted a pretty loose and wide system. But if we were to adopt that method for instance, in the committee on energy, I think myself it would be immediately challenged as being without authority.

So the purpose of this resolution is to give breadth to the power of inquiry that is in this. In no way is it intended to restrict the powers of the House. I give my hon. friend that undertaking.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate what the hon. Prime Minister has said, that heretofore maybe these committees had no authority and were acting without authority, and that there is now a desire to correct things if you will, and to give the necessary authority.

If that be the case, then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there are certain committees that need the authority over and above the committees that have been listed. For example, there is the committee on municipal law which is not included in the list that is set forth in the resolution. This committee obviously needs the type of assistance that is purported to be given.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would be very glad to include that. I think my hon. friend is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Then I would refer to the committee on commissions, Mr. Speaker, which met last week. I believe it is the intent of that particular committee to ask several boards and commissions to appear before it to give an explanation of their administrative set-up.

Now, it would seem to me that if we are going to formulize and legalize committee work, if you will, then surely we should not delete or exclude, from the various committees to which we are going to delegate authority, any committee that might be prejudiced. So I suggest the second one should be the committee on commissions.

The third one that I am concerned about is the committee on public accounts. That committee, under its chairman, gave the membership a specific undertaking that several boards and commissions would be called before that very committee, at its first meeting. If that be the case, if the premise is correct that a committee has no authority except as delegated by this Legislature, then certainly we must regularize the authority of that committee at this time.

Therefore, if it be that these committees did not have authority, and we are now intending to give them authority, then I would recommend that the motion be amended to assure that all the committees that have been set up are properly authorized to do the business that they envisage they should do.

For that reason, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), that the resolution, government notice of motion No. 1, be amended by adding after travel and publicity in the sixth line, the words, municipal law, public accounts, boards and commissions.

Now, it seems to me that my motion is perfectly in order, in view of what the hon. Prime Minister has said. It may be that, in years gone by, we did things erroneously. It may be that we did them without authority.

If that be the correct premise, then surely my argument is valid when I say that we must regularize all the committees that we instituted last week. Municipal law—it should be government commissions. I am sorry. Mr. Speaker, I would amend that. I said municipal law, public accounts, boards and commissions. The last 3 words should be struck out and government commissions substituted.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Has the hon. leader of the Opposition a copy of his amendment? I do not think that I have any objection to that. As a matter of fact may I please have a copy? Just give me a moment.

This resolution would now read this way—I will try to put this together:

That in order to promote economy, efficiency and improved service in the transaction of public business it is deemed advisable to invite the observations of the committees on agriculture, conservation, education, energy, game and fish, health and welfare, highways and highway safety, labour, lands and forests, mining, travel and publicity, municipal law, public accounts and government commissions, on the present organization and method of procedures of their respective departments, with a view to determining whether the procedures, methods, and organization generally, are well adapted for the most economical operation as is possible consistent with the efficient and comprehensive conduct of the affairs of the respective departments.

I would be prepared to accept that amendment. That is reasonable.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Wintermeyer moves, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that the resolution, government notice of motion No. 1, be amended by adding, after travel and publicity in the sixth line, municipal law, public accounts and government commissions. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion for the amendment carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Frost, seconded by Mr. Goodfellow, that government notice of motion No. 1 be so amended. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, just in relation to this matter, might I say that we have a very large number of commissions of various kinds as described in the Gordon report. Now I would say there is nothing to be gained by having one commission called before two or three committees. I think it would be very advisable if I could arrange with the hon. leader of the Opposition to discuss with him the matter of assigning certain of these boards to specific committees, where they could there be dealt with at one time.

I will give an instance. There is nothing to be gained in calling Hydro before the committee on government commissions, also public accounts, and also energy. I am perfectly satisfied that it go to one committee, and that committee deal with the subject matter.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I can appreciate what the hon. Prime Minister has in mind. I think it is very reasonable in its basic purpose. But, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that, in conjunction with public accounts, I do think there we are dealing with something entirely different. When we are calling Hydro before government commissions or energy, we are concerned about their administrative format and facilities.

With respect to public accounts, we are concerned about something entirely different. So it would seem to me that public accounts should not be prejudiced, in its current undertaking, to examine into certain alleged irregularities in Hydro, or alleged irregularities into Hydro, and the Niagara parks commission be precluded from appearing before the committee on energy where it can serve another very valuable purpose.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, may I point out to my hon. friend that this is a matter that we have to consider. The public accounts, as such, are referred to the public accounts committee and it is within the four corners of the public accounts committee that any inquiry is made. Actually speaking, that has nothing whatever to do with Hydro, and has nothing whatever to do with the Niagara parks commission. I think there has to be some specific reference even to that committee, or to some other committee. It is on that point that I should like to discuss the matter with my hon. friend. He can see the point.

I do not know if they have been referred at this moment to the public accounts committee, but by ordinary procedures they would be referred to the public accounts committee. Then the committee, in its wisdom, can direct inquiries into certain matters in the public accounts.

There is not anything in the public accounts concerning the Hydro matters at all, and I think that one purpose of the creation of the committee on government commissions is to deal with some of those things.

In past years we have had some pretty wide inquiries into things, but without any actual authority from this House. But the resolution which has been adopted is, I think, the beginning of getting the things reasonably on the rails.

Now, I would suggest to my hon. friend that perhaps he could take a little time out with myself, and we would look at the matter of government commissions, perhaps with the provincial auditor, and we would determine perhaps that we could make a recommendation to this House as to what committees these commissions would be referred to, in order to avoid the duplication I have mentioned.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): May I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that public accounts does record the monies—the loans—that the government has advanced to the Hydro. It also records the monies that have been advanced to the Hydro for rural extensions, power lines and so on.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is true. But nevertheless it is a narrow view. I am not suggesting that the committees should be restricted, but that the committees should be facilitated, in this.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Well, Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word on this point? It seems to me that the hon. Prime Minister would agree that any matter dealing with Hydro, having to do with policies or administration, would come before the committee on commissions. But whether it is the hydro commission, or the Niagara parks commission, or the liquor control board, or any other board or commission—anything to do with alleged irregularities in the accounts of those commissions or boards—these would, I suggest, most properly come before the public accounts committee. That is what the committee is set up for.

Now, I imagine that the public accounts committee was organized and restricted, in the manner that my hon. friend has said, long before there were very many boards and commissions. I think the time has come when the reference to the public accounts committee should extend beyond the public accounts to those other boards and commissions in which the public have a very great interest.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think that is the point of what I was saying. I do not think it does at the moment, but I think we have to look at it.

Mr. Oliver: Yes, but what worries me about my hon. friend's statement was that he seemed to suggest that perhaps it would be adequate for Hydro to go before the energy committee, for instance, and apparently that was to be the end of it as far as Hydro was concerned.

I am saying that, if there are alleged irregularities in Hydro accounts, that matter should properly be placed before the public accounts committee and no other committee.

It may be that, in certain years, there would be no questions asked about accounts. Then, properly, Hydro activities could be surveyed before another committee. But when it comes to accounts, it seems to me that the proper place is the accounts committee.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, we have the hon. Prime Minister's assurance that what the hon. member for Grey South said will be instituted.

I might add that, at the meeting of the public accounts committee last week, the chairman specifically advised the committee that Hydro and Niagara parks would be called before that committee.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say, not necessarily in the way my hon. friend has suggested. I would say perhaps in substance but not necessarily. As a matter of fact, I find it difficult to follow some of his reasoning, but nevertheless there is nothing before the House at this moment, and I shall certainly be glad to take this all into consideration and I will, in the meantime, have a chat with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE ANDREW MERCER REFORMATORY ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE INDUSTRIAL FARMS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Industrial Farms Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister explain the purpose of this Act and the previous one?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to give an exhaustive explanation on the second reading. I appreciate the thirst for knowledge of my hon. friends in the Opposition. But if they will bow to that, I will give them an exhaustive explanation on second reading, and they can have a regular field day.

The Andrew Mercer Act goes back some 35 years to the days when the department was under the Provincial Secretary, and all the business of reform institutions was handled under what was known as an inspector. We are now taking out the word inspector and replacing that with the Deputy Minister.

Other things in the Act include the removing of prisoners from one institution to another. Formerly that was done by the superintendent. That is now changed and only 3 officials in the department can authorize that on the signature of the Minister. Another part is in connection with inmates who, during their incarceration, have become mentally unsound. Years ago the institution was allowed to put them out of the doors of the institution and on to the street. This Act now gives us the authority to detain them and put them in a mental institution.

The other thing in this Act concerns the manner of handling of funds. Before, superintendents and so on were allowed to handle funds, both departures and to bank. Of course, that is now all handled by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and our superintendents have nothing to do with it. But it has never been changed in the Act.

Those are 3 important things in the Act, and I will give full explanations on second reading, I can assure my hon. friends.

The other Act is one that takes away from the superintendent the former right as explained regarding the Andrew Mercer institution, and also takes away his right to move prisoners from one institution to the other. That authority is now put in the hands of the Deputy Minister, his assistants, and myself.

Those are the basic things, but I will explain them fully on second reading of the bill if that is satisfactory to my hon. friends.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I desire to make a statement to the House on a matter of personal privilege. I refer the House to an article in the Toronto Daily Star under date of December 22, 1959, entitled: "Patronage at Niagara Parks, CCF". Also I refer to one in the Daily Star of January 23, 1960, "Niagara Park Abuses Hit". Also there is an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail, December 22, 1959, headed: "MacDonald Wants Inquiry Into Niagara Parks Affairs". I shall not read all of these articles, but from the first-named article in the Daily Star, I shall read the first two paragraphs:

Premier Frost was called upon last night to order a full public inquiry into the Niagara parks commission by Donald C. MacDonald, Ontario CCF leader, who charged commission operations were riddled with patronage and even on occasions with nepotism.

Mr. MacDonald criticized letting of contracts without public tender and purchase by Labour Minister Daley, commission chairman, of a 40-acre farm adjoining commission property, and formerly owned by the Niagara parks commission.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on the question—

Hon. Mr. Daley: From the Toronto Globe and Mail article I read only this one item referring to myself personally.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister is giving a defensive policy, not a statement of personal privilege. May I ask him, therefore, whether—after he has made his statement of policy—it will be debatable?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to you that what the hon. Minister is doing is giving a speech that the hon. gentleman intimated last week was going to be given in this House, and it is now being given under the guise of a statement of personal privilege.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, this is not a statement. I intend to make a statement about the parks commission. This is not it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask you whether it will be possible for the Opposition to comment on this when the hon. Minister has finished?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): How about waiting to see what it is? Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I think we can prejudge what the statement is.

Hon. Mr. Daley: From the Globe and Mail article I read only this one item referring to myself personally:

Specifically Mr. MacDonald charged the commission chairman, Charles Daley, had bought a farm, once owned by the commission, although the group's general policy was not to sell property.

At the first opportunity, probably within a day or two, I shall be giving a full explanation of the methods followed and the work accomplished by the Niagara parks commission which, I think, is not only a credit to the commission, but also to the province. I shall not refer to this matter, however, at this moment.

I desire to refer, however, specifically, to the matter of the purchase by me of the land referred to in the article.

The facts are as follows: By deed registered as No. 10434 for the township of Niagara, dated May 25, 1943, and registered May 27, 1943, Warren Bentley Brodrick sold to the Niagara parks commission two parcels of land, both in lot 23, township of Niagara, the first parcel consisting of approximately 40 acres, part of which was divided by the River Road, and the other of approximately 15.75 acres. The purchase price was $17,500.

Subsequently there was found to be some error or ambiguity in the descriptions, for which Mr. Brodrick gave the necessary quit claim deeds to rectify, but in any event the total consideration was $17,500.

The purpose of purchasing the above land was in order that the commission might acquire: (a) all of the land between the River Road and the Niagara River; (b) A 100-foot strip across the whole property on the other side of the River Road; (c) In order to get this it was necessary to purchase the whole property, as Mr. Brodrick would not sell it in separate parcels.

The land over and above (a) and (b) was surplus land which the commission did not require. The policy of the commission is, of course, not to sell land which it requires. Under no circumstances would it sell the lands described in (a) and (b), but it has, and does, sell surplus lands which it does not require over and above the specific requirements of the commission.

In 1945, the commission received two offers to buy the surplus lands in the above farm, one being from one Ussher for $7,500 and the other from Arthur Albert Schmon for $10,420.23. Attached, and which I will read, is Mr. Schmon's offer to purchase. This is of April 9, 1945:

NIAGARA PARKS COMMISSION,
NIAGARA FALLS, ONTARIO.

GENTLEMEN:

I have been advised that what is known as the Brodrick farm, consisting of approximately 42 acres, is on the market for sale, and I shall be very glad to make an offer of $200 an acre which will include the house and the farm, and the privilege of using the lands facing the River Road for lawn purposes.

I also am advised that you have 17.5 acres across the side road and facing the River Road. This has no buildings on it and is not farmed and I shall be glad to make an offer of $125 an acre for this property.

I am agreeable to buying the property subject to the lease held with the farmer which I understand expires in October or November.

This, of course, will be a cash transaction.

Yours very truly,

(signed)

ARTHUR A. SCHMON

Now, in reply to that letter, the commission wrote on April 17, 1945:

DEAR MR. SCHMON:

Kindly be advised that your tender for the Brodrick farm, and for the acreage on the north side of the east-west line, was accepted at the commission meeting, on Friday, April 13.

We understand that the price for the Brodrick farm is $8,400, and the acreage does not include a strip, 100 feet in depth, along the River Road, extending westerly along our west boundary.

With regard to the acreage across the road, this works out at 15.75 acres, after deducting a 100-foot strip along the west side of the River Road. This 100-foot strip will be part of the parks system and will be maintained by us. However, we would have no objection if you wish to use it for lawn purposes.

I am having Mr. Douglas Ure, of St. Catharines, prepare descriptions of these properties to be transferred to you.

In the case of the Brodrick farm, it is understood that you will take possession on September 2 this year. That is the earliest date after which we would not have to pay any compensation to the tenant.

Will you kindly acknowledge?

Very truly yours,

(signed)

M. T. GRAY

General manager

By deed No. 11306 for the township of Niagara, dated June 30, 1945, registered November 17, 1945, the Niagara parks commission conveyed to Arthur Albert Schmon the balance of the Brodrick farm described for $10,366.25. It should be pointed out that the tenant was paying $25 per month rent for the premises, and the adjustment from the amount of $10,420.23 is accounted for by this and other adjustments.

Arthur Albert Schmon is a very well-known citizen of the Niagara peninsula, being president and general manager of the Ontario Paper Company Limited, also Quebec North Shore Paper Company Limited. He is also a well-known industrialist and a director of a number of concerns, and among other things chairman of the board of governors of the St. Catharines general hospital.

About 3 years later, I became interested in purchasing an area for fruit farming and residential purposes, and I learned that Mr. Schmon had purchased a property in Niagara-on-the-Lake where he had been a tenant for a number of years, and which, up to that time, he could not purchase.

I approached him relative to selling a portion of lot 23, of which I understood he was desirous of disposing.

It should be noted that in Niagara township the lots are numbered consecutively without reference to concession lines.

I did not desire the 15.75-acre portion, and in the meantime Mr. Schmon had set out to do some very extensive tile drainage works on the property, which I did not want to continue with in event of purchase by myself.

Accordingly, it was agreed that I should purchase what might be termed the 40-acre parcel for $12,000, also paying an additional $3,000 for farm equipment which was on the premises, making a total purchase price of $15,000.

The agreement also provided that Mr. Schmon should remove from the property the tile drains which were valued at several thousand dollars, which were on the property and which were not installed. For an additional consideration I was offered all of the tile and the engineer's plans for installing the same, but I did not take this offer. Therefore, Mr. Schmon removed the tile from the property.

Accordingly, by deed No. 12649 for the township of Niagara, dated April 27, 1948, and registered on May 1, 1948, Arthur Albert Schmon conveyed to Charles and Leola Daley the balance of the 40 acres on the west side of the road, being on the side of the road away from the Niagara River, the consideration for the land being $12,000.

There is some doubt in my mind as to the actual acreage of the land for which I received a conveyance, but this probably arises from the descriptions. The original Brodrick conveyance refers to 40 acres in this parcel.

On the other hand, the commission retained approximately 8 acres between the River Road and the river, and including a 100-foot strip on the west side of the road, all of which would come off the Brodrick conveyance.

However, these acreage descriptions are on a metes and bounds basis, and I have felt, as apparently did Mr. Schmon before me, that there was approximately 40 acres in the parcel.

Since the purchase of the land, I have erected a residence on the same, and I live there for a good part of every year.

I had not the slightest idea, when the land was purchased by Mr. Schmon in April, 1945, that either he would want to sell or I would ever want to buy the same, in whole or in part. All the figures as to the purchase price of the various transactions which I have already mentioned can be judged on their merits.

Mr. Schmon still owns the 15.75 acres on the north side of the east-west line, and west of the River Road, which land is immediately adjoining my property but is divided by the east-west line.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I refer back to March 17, of last year. On that date I announced to the Legislature the appointment of a committee to conduct a full investigation into the whole matter of fluoridation.

The committee was composed of the hon. Mr. Justice Kenneth G. Morden, Dr. G. E. Hall, and Mrs. Frankel who has suffered a long and serious illness which makes it impossible for her to continue her work with the committee. On the advice of her doctors, Mrs. Frankel has resigned.

Mrs. Frankel performed very valuable duties in the early stages of the committee's work, and it is with great regret that the government accepts her resignation.

To replace Mrs. Frankel, the government has appointed Mrs. Cameron MacKenzie of Beaverton.

Mrs. MacKenzie brings a very great amount of service and municipal experience to this task. She is a registered nurse and worked for many years as a volunteer for the Red Cross and for the Children's Aid Society. She was vice-president of the Ontario division of the Canadian Red Cross and for many years was a director of the Children's Aid Society for Ontario county. She has also served as extension chairman for Ontario county for the Ontario Cancer Society and, for some years, was chairman of the building committee for Fairview Lodge, home for the aged at Whitby.

Her municipal experience has also been noteworthy. Between 1946 and 1952, she served on the town council of the town of Beaverton, and for the last two years of this period she held the position as the head of the municipality. She is, at present, a member of the reform institutions advisory committee or council for the treatment of its members.

Mrs. MacKenzie's wide experience and integrity, as well as her knowledge of municipal and service activities, thoroughly fits her, I think, for her new and important post.

Mr. Speaker, I got in touch with her in Florida and she will be back here tomorrow I think, or the next day, and she advises me that she assumes her task with no predetermined opinion which would prevent her from giving a most impartial inquiry into this matter.

Before the orders of the day, I might also announce to the House the intention to have a night session tomorrow night. I think, in view of the fact that we are not sitting on Wednesdays, that it would make it desirable that we should have night sessions perhaps on Tuesdays and on Thursdays. In any event, I would like to give that notice at this time.

ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD

Hon. R. Macaulay moves second reading of Bill No. 38, "An Act to establish the Ontario energy board."

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to have an opportunity of indicating, to the House, some of the principles which promote Bill No. 38, "An Act to establish the Ontario energy board."

I am sure that the hon. members accept the understanding of the rules of the House that it is not possible to deal with specific provisions of the Act. On the other hand, this is the occasion upon which the mover makes reference to the general provisions of the Act which is being proposed.

Mr. Speaker, The Ontario Energy Board Act, which I present to the Legislature for second reading, comes about as a result of the creation of The Department of Energy Resources and it follows very generally, and in some specific details, a number of the provisions recommended by the Gordon committee on organization of government in Ontario.

If I may I would like to refer the hon. members to page 72 of that document wherein the Gordon committee set forth the 5 general functions of the Ontario fuel board. It states the 5 specific obligations of the fuel board in this way, that:

First, the board has general powers to control and regulate the location, drilling and abandonment of oil and gas wells and, in the words of The Fuel Board Act, "the production, storage, transmission, distribution, sales, disposal, supply and use of natural gas" in the province. In the exercise of these powers, the board carries out a wide range of inspection and licencing functions.

The second responsibility of the fuel board, the Gordon committee points out, is that the board is responsible for the fixing of rates, meter rentals, and other charges "to be paid by ultimate consumers of natural gas."

The third responsibility is that, under the provisions of The Municipal Franchises Act, the board may issue certificates of public convenience and necessity to gas companies seeking to establish distribution facilities to serve a given market area.

Fourthly, also under this Act the board must approve municipal by-laws granting or renewing gas franchises.

Fifthly, under The Pipe Lines Act, 1958, leave to construct oil or gas transmission lines must be obtained from the board. Where leave has been granted, the recipient corporation may apply to the board for authority to expropriate land for the purposes of the pipe line.

The Gordon committee then went on to state that the various functions of the board are of two types: administrative and quasi-judicial.

Its administrative functions stem from the provisions of The Fuel Board Act. In delegating the broad powers of control and regulation, the Legislature has indicated that the board should have certain responsibilities, namely, to insure the orderly development of the natural gas industry and to safeguard public safety in regard to the production, transmission, distribution, or consumption of natural gas—and in some instances—coal and oil.

Now, these were the recommendations of the Gordon committee. The Gordon committee recommended that these supervisory inspection and licencing functions be transferred to the new Department of Energy Resources. Thus the department would take over the present powers of the board to regulate and control the construction, installation, removal or acquisition of works, pipe lines or machinery for the production, storage, transmission, distribution or measurement of natural gas.

It would also take over the sale, installation or use of coal-burning equipment and gas or fuel oil appliances—that is, the regulation and control of the same. Also, it would take over the installation or use of high-pressure vessels for liquefied petroleum gases which are connected with gas appliances, the designation of natural gas storage areas, and the conservation of natural gas and oil—particularly with reference to drilling or production practices or the abandonment or plugging of wells.

In addition, the committee recommended that the department should become responsible for the issuance of licences or permits to or for contractors and dealers in oil and gas appliances, persons acquiring oil and gas leases, space heating appliances, industrial use of gas and drilling rigs.

Now, I would say to hon. members of this House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that is the effect of the eighteenth and nineteenth orders on the order paper, namely Bill No. 38 and Bill No. 39. The Gordon committee, on page 75, also made in concluding, in relation to the fuel board, this statement:

In summary, our recommendations are that the administrative functions of the board—those that involve supervision, inspection and licencing—should be transferred to the new Department of Energy Resources. The board would retain its quasi-judicial functions, reporting to a designated Minister, logically the Minister of the new Department. The board would thus be accountable to the Minister, to the government and the Legislature.

We further recommend, with particular reference to the determination of retail rates for natural gas, that the basic standards of policy, to be applied by the board, be established either by statute or by order-in-council.

Now those, Mr. Speaker, are the general observations of the Gordon committee in relation to the Ontario fuel board and the control and regulation of gas and its distribution—frankly of hydro-carbons more accurately—in the province of Ontario, and the two Acts which I am presenting to this House this afternoon are designed to accomplish that.

It can be said that the basic purpose of the two Acts is to separate the quasi-judicial functions of the fuel board from the purely administrative functions, so that the fuel board will retain control over matters dealing with quasi- or semi-judicial functions, and The Department of Energy Resources will assume the responsibilities dealing with purely administrative functions.

One would ask, as a matter of principle perhaps, why this is so.

The simplest answer, I think, can be found in the fact that at the moment the fuel board has been both judge and prosecutor. It has established the terms of reference, the codes, the offences, the penalties, and has then supervised these codes and has sat in judgment of any offence. At the same time, it has determined what franchises should be granted to what municipalities and what companies, as well as what rates should prevail. Consequently, one day it has been setting standards, and the next day it has been hearing infractions and dealing with licences.

So the fuel board, in fact, has been policeman, prosecutor, and judge and jury.

This is an unfortunate mixture of responsibilities. But it is my respectful submission that until this time it has not been either to the detriment of the industry or to the consumer of the goods supplied by the industry. We have now reached the stage where gas has become an extremely important energy resource. A number of years ago, as I recall, and I will speak more specifically on this when the estimates of the department are presented—the gas consumed in this province, I think in 1954, was in the neighbourhood of 14 billion cubic feet. Last year it was in the neighbourhood of 85 billion cubic feet.

We estimate in The Department of Energy Resources that we will need, in the next 25 years, approximately 12 to 15 trillion cubic feet, and that by 1980 we will be consuming about 600 or 700 billion cubic feet a year.

This is a tremendous development, when one thinks of it increasing from 14 billion cubic feet in 1954 to 600 or 700 billion cubic feet in 1980. That is a fabulous increase, and it gives some indication of the important place of gas in the energy market in this country.

I want, if I may, Mr. Speaker, to give some indication to my fellow hon. members of this Legislature, the general outline of the two pieces of legislation which I respectfully submit to this House as very important legislation for the days ahead.

First, in relation to the Act to which I am now addressing hon. members' attention, the Ontario energy board will replace the Ontario fuel board, and it will consist of 5 members to whom I will make reference in a moment. Its basic purposes will be these:

1. To grant and extend new and existing franchises to the municipalities.

2. To hear complaints in relation to service and delivery.

3. To hear applications for the withdrawal of service to a community or part of a community.

4. To fix rates which shall prevail in the various areas from time to time.

5. To hear applications which are referred to it with reference to the cancellation of various licences which may be issued by The Department of Energy Resources.

My hon. friend, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) being, as I am, a lawyer, is extremely sensitive to the withdrawal, as well as the granting, of licences to persons whose livelihood depends on the existence of the licence. Like myself, he is very anxious that, if a licence is to be withdrawn from someone to whom it has been issued, there should be ample opportunity to be heard by persons other than the Minister of Energy Resources. So that is the method by which this matter will be dealt.

6. The board will hear expropriation applications for new transmission lines.

I would want to say to the House that there are other obligations imposed by the Act upon the new Ontario energy board. But, generally speaking, those are the basic functions of the board.

It will be composed of the chairman, Mr. Crozier, who has had a great many years of experience in the field of manufactured and natural gas in this country. In fact, as I travelled to the western provinces I found that Mr. Crozier is accepted—certainly in the west, and I should think also by much of the industry in the east—as an outstanding authority in these matters.

The second member of the fuel board is Mr. Wingfelder who has been with the board as vice-chairman for some time.

The third member is Professor Allcut, an engineer who has many high qualifications in respect to the combustion, the transmission of gas, and other associated engineering problems. Professor Allcut was recently appointed to the Ontario energy board.

The search for an engineer was begun by my hon. predecessor (Mr. Spooner), but I would say to the House that it is a difficult thing to find a man who suits and fits all the qualifications that one would desire in this position.

An actively practicing engineer is usually associated in one way or another with the gas distribution system in this country. He has a number of retainers and clients whom he is loath to give up in return for a position on a board of this nature.

However, Professor Allcut, who had a very senior position in the University of Toronto and who is now professor emeritus, has been prepared to give up a number of connections, which he might otherwise have made to his advantage, to enter the board. He is already fully occupied with his duties, and I think will make a very worthy contribution to this board in Ontario.

The fourth member is Mr. Treadgold, who is a lawyer of considerable experience in municipal matters. It is highly desirable to have someone on the fuel board with experience in relation to the distribution of energy resources through the legislation which deals with the municipalities.

The fifth member is also a lawyer, Mr. L. R. MacTavish, who is the registrar of regulations for the province of Ontario. I am greatly indebted to him for his assistance in drafting these two Acts which I am presenting to the House this afternoon, and which have gone through something like 19 drafts.

The Ontario energy board also has, on retainer as advisers in relation to accounting and rate matters, the firm of Ormsby and

Ormsby, who have been of great assistance in preparing this legislation, and whose basic responsibility in the future will be to help sort out, and to equate and collate, much of the evidence which will be presented for rate hearings.

I might say to the hon. members of the House, Mr. Speaker, at this time, that I would think that there will be, within the next few months, a large number of rate hearings, some of which are extremely complex and involved.

I would also say to the House that the board itself will be responsible to this Legislature through the Minister of Energy Resources.

I would like, if I might, to speak very generally on a number of principles which are affected by this bill, including rates, rate basis, rate hearings, and some matters which I think are of great concern to this House, and particularly to a number of the hon. members who have made frequent reference to them in the last few years.

Indeed, I am indebted to a number of the hon. members of this House who have been kind enough to assist me in preparing this legislation—hon. members of the Opposition of both parties and of the government side. I wrote a letter to all of the hon. members of this House, and asked them if they would assist me in its preparation on any point which they felt should be dealt with. A number responded, and very generously so, and I am indebted to them.

I am particularly indebted to the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Janes) who has been very helpful to me in a number of matters, as well as to a number of other hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, so far there are very few permanent rate decisions in this province. It is necessary to obtain a number of permanent rate hearings.

I have not been anxious to discuss permanent rate hearings until the present legislation was presented to this House. The reason for that, I think, will be more evident when the bill is read in committee. The committee of the whole House will see that the Ontario energy board, as well as the department itself, is given much wider powers in relation to the calling of evidence and material to be presented in relation to these matters.

I felt that the Acts, which these Acts supersede, have served the purposes which existed, and were in mind of this House, when the bills were presented to this House. But conditions in 1959 and 1960 have sufficiently changed to warrant new Acts. In 1958 there was distributed in this province about 51 billion cubic feet of gas. In 1959, that figure rose to 85 billion cubic feet—nearly double in one year.

It became apparent to the government that it was necessary to augment the legislation in relation to the distribution of natural gas, and I felt that, as the Minister responsible to the hon. members of this House, Mr. Speaker, it would be unwise to bring on applications for permanent fixing of rates until the legislation—which is somewhat different in this case to the legislation earlier prevailing—was passed, or in any event submitted to this House for its consideration.

I want to say also, in connection with this particular bill, that this is no take-it or leave-it bill, and I would like to refer it to the committee on energy. I will be happy indeed, as will the government, to have the committee's recommendations, and any changes that the committee feels are desirable will, of course, be implemented. I would say the same in relation to the committee of the whole House.

I do not for a moment pretend that this bill is perfection. We have done our best, with about 19 drafts, to present the best bill we could to this Legislature. So if this Legislature feels, in its wisdom, that there are a number of improvements which can be made, they will be accepted and implemented, I assure hon. members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the—I think one could say—salient characteristics of The Ontario Energy Board Act is the creation of something which, to date, does not exist in this field of legislation in Canada. That is the creation of what we call in the Act an energy returns officer.

One of the problems in relation to rates, before I come to them, Mr. Speaker, is this: That when a company comes before a fuel board or the national energy board, or what will be the Ontario energy board, to fix a rate, it is, of course, well and fully familiar with its own facts, with its own statistics. But the municipalities which either contest the rate, or oppose it in some way, have very little knowledge as to the details upon which the battle, if one can call it that, should be fought.

We do not desire that the government should take sides in these issues. After all, in an economy which is based upon freedom of movement and enterprise, it is desirable that one has as little regulation consistent with reasonable and just security for the consumer as possible. At the same time, it was apparent that, if the companies had to supply specific details as to their earnings and their rate base and other facts with the board, the board could logically be argued to be seized of facts which it was using prior to a hearing and thus prejudging a case.

This is something which is strongly argued against in the concepts of the Gordon committee report, as well as by the legal profession itself. Therefore, we tried to find a means by which it could be said that all of the evidence, regardless of how insignificant or important, was made available to the board.

We concluded that the best way of doing it was to create what we have called an energy returns officer in The Department of Energy Resources. This officer will be a party to every application for a rate hearing. His duty will be to bring before the board all the pertinent facts of that application without either fear or favour, without desiring to assist one side or another, but simply with a sense of responsibility that all of the facts—both favourable and unfavourable—to the applicant as well as the defendant, should be made available.

We felt that this would aid both sides in a dispute as well as the board.

It is to be noted that this energy returns officer is not a member of the board nor is he associated with it, but is a member of The Department of Energy Resources.

This is an adaptation of what is called, under the federal power commission, a "special examiner." I am hopeful that it will work to the advantage of orderly development in these matters.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the orders of the board itself, I would like to say that, in response both to the dictates of my own heart as well as the recommendations of the Gordon committee, all the hearings of the Ontario energy board will be public hearings. Notice will be given of the hearing, all of their orders will be written decisions, and these decisions will be available to the public, upon request.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some reference to the philosophy of this government in connection with rates for the distribution of natural gas.

First, why are there rate controls? There are rate controls because, in effect, the distribution of natural gas is a monopoly, a public utility. Secondly, because people become tied to a system and have a very great investment in their own equipment, and it is only fair that whatever rate is charged should be one designed, not only in the interests of the consumer, but also in the interests of the distributor.

Therefore, when one fixes a rate in relation to the distribution of natural gas, one really should have in mind 3 basic objectives: First, the rate should be low enough to secure to the user a fair and just rate.

Second, the rate should be adequate to pay for good service and replacement and retirement of the used portions of the assets.

Third, it should be high enough to attract a sufficient return on capital, and to attract capital for the orderly expansion and development of the industry.

I respectfully submit to this House that that is the basic purpose of any rate control in relation to the distribution of any energy resource—such as gas.

It is one thing to discuss what one's purposes are in life; it is quite another thing, however, to discuss ways and means of obtaining it. There are a number of standards which are used in this country and in the United States in relation to rates. I would like to make, if I might, some mention of them to this House, because last year there was considerable discussion as to rate base and rate of return, and I would be surprised if that did not form a part of the discussions of the present sittings of this House.

One of the basic conceptions of rate base is this: That the rate base should be the historical cost of the assets in use, less depreciation. There are in effect 4 or 5 means, or methods, by which one can determine a rate base. There are 4 or 5 different architectural concepts, let us say, of a rate base.

One of these is, what did it cost, how much depreciation has there been, and the difference between the two is the amount upon which earnings should be allowed, or what is called in terms of gas distribution the rate base. This is called historical cost less depreciation.

Now, the difficulty with this method of a rate base is pointed out by the Borden commission, which I respectfully submit the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has completely misunderstood.

In the Borden commission report it pointed out that one of the objections that the Borden commission had, to the historical cost less depreciation concept, was that it amounted almost to an expropriation of capital during periods of inflation or depreciation of the dollar. It is explained in this way, that if we have—let us say—a fixed number of dollars in our assets, each year the difference between your original value and your depreciation gets to be less and less and less, and so your rate base becomes smaller and smaller each year. So the return to the company becomes smaller and smaller each year, simply by the mere fact of inflation, and as the assets are depreciated the difference between the original cost—in short, the depreciated value—becomes much smaller, therefore, the rate base obviously has to be reduced.

And so the Borden commission pointed out, in effect, that it was opposed to such a type of a rate base, and it substituted one quite different from that which is suggested by the historical system less depreciation.

I would like, if I might, to make reference to the Borden commission's report, which I am respectfully submitting to the hon. member for York South that he misunderstood.

The Borden commission said that, normally, the allowed rate of return on assets employed exceeds the interest rate on borrowed money, and in such event the greater the proportion of the total investment represented by borrowed money, the greater is the advantage to the equity owner in terms of the rate of return on his investment. Such an advantage is commonly referred to as leverage.

Incidentally there was an interesting article on leverage in the morning paper in Toronto this morning, on the mining and financial page, which I would commend to the hon. members of this House.

But the commission went on to say:

We are of the view that a method of regulation which permits such leverage will, in the case of oil and gas pipe lines, tend to produce an undesirable disparity between the several companies in the rate of return upon equity.

It may also make possible realization of inordinate profits which, in the last analysis, will be paid by the consuming public.

In this respect we have in mind, particularly, situations where shares in the equity have been issued to shareholders at prices varying from a few cents to substantially higher amounts.

The commission is, therefore, of the view that the best basis of regulation to be followed, with respect to pipe line companies—subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada—is that method of regulation which insures a fair rate of return on the shareholders' equity—not paid-up capital, my hon. friend—on the shareholders' equity. Hon. members are under the impression they are the same thing, but they are not—

—and does not permit the leverage to which we have above referred.

We have concluded that it is preferable to allow the board to exercise its discretion in this regard—that is, as to the rates—recognizing that, in so doing, it will strive to exercise its powers in a fair manner and authorize rates and thus a level of earnings, having regard to the circumstances in each case sufficient to attract the necessary capital. The flexibility which will obtain under such a plan, in our view, is particularly desirable.

Then they go on to say this—and this is the essence of the formula which was endowed with the approval of the hon. member for York South last year.

In order to insure the fair treatment of equity capital—not paid-out capital, but equity capital—

—on a long-term basis, we consider that, from the outset of regulation, there should be a candid recognition by the board of transport commissioners of the principle of evaluating the assets at their fair value, in arriving at the value of the equity to be remunerated, the valuation of the assets, and hence of the equity on the principle that historical costs in dollars will inevitably result in the confiscation of capital so long as the purchasing power of the dollar continues to decline.

I want to point out to my hon. friend that he spoke of leverage in an interesting aspect, but he looked at only one side of it.

This is an interesting point, I say to my hon. friend, because this is a fact that I do not think has been introduced in the House before, and I would respectfully submit it for hon. members' consideration.

While leverage, on the one hand, gives the shareholder a little more income—or even a great deal more income—than he would have if there were no leverage, factually it can be shown that the higher the leverage, the lower the rate to the consumer.

Now, let me give hon. members an example. Where there is 80 per cent. of the company in debt and 20 per cent. in equity, there will be a higher leverage to the shareholder, but there will be a lower rate to the consumer.

The reason for that is this: The interest on borrowed money is deducted before taxation, and need not be doubled again in taxation, as it is when it is interest or revenue on the shares.

Turn that the other way around. Where we have 20 per cent. of debt and 80 per cent. of equity, there will be far less leverage, but there will be a much higher rate of return required to satisfy that condition.

I worked this out, and I would ask if the hon. member for York South would care to take his pencil and a piece of paper, and I will give him these figures.

Assuming that the rate base is $700,000 and assuming that the equity and debt ratio are 70-30, the interest costs at 6 per cent. on the $700,000 debt is approximately $420,000. If he deducts that from the return allowed on the rate base of $700,000—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How many is he talking about, $7 million?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, we will start again. If we have—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I know the hon. member for York South is all mixed up.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If we have a debt equity ratio of 70-30 on a $1 million company, we have $300,000 in equity and $700,000 in debt.

Now then, assuming that the rate of return allowed on the rate basis is $700,000—7 per cent. on the historical cost effect—if we have, let me go back, $1 million of assets, and we are allowed to have 7 per cent. return on a $1 million asset, we will have $700,000 allowable rate base.

From that, we deduct the percentage of the debt, say 6 per cent. on $700,000 at $420,000. The difference is $280,000 available for the equity people.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon Prime Minister will forgive us for being confused.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I am no mathematician. Let me put it this way, if I can.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): It might change the conclusion.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, it does not affect the conclusion because this is a recognized fact, that when we have a higher percentage of equity and a lower percentage of debt, we will have to have a higher rate. I say this because we have to permit, in the rate return, enough to pay the income tax, the corporation income taxes. That is why, if we have 20 per cent. equity and 80 per cent. debt, we will have a higher proportion of leverage. But the company will have to earn less in order to give the return necessary to the equity, and thus the rate of that company will be lower than a company that has 80 per cent. of equity and 20 per cent. of debt.

The only reason I raise this for the benefit of the hon. member for York South is that he looked at this question of leverage, as has the Borden commission, as something that is quite undesirable. But I want to point out that the higher the leverage, the lower the rate of the company.

Mr. MacDonald: That leaves the corporation with 100 per cent. of borrowed money. They should have no equity at all.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On that basis, my hon. friend, the rate could be lower under our present corporation tax system.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: So the higher the debt, the greater the leverage there may be for the equity shareholders, but at the same time the lower the amount that the company has to take in on its return in order to finance itself.

Now my hon. friend has said, in relation to the Borden commission last year, that the Borden commission decided that there should be a rate base based on equity of the shareholders. But then he did not take the equity of the shareholders, he took the paid-up capital of the shareholders. Let me give my hon. friend an example of the difference.

If a person buys a $10,000 house—and on these simple mathematics I hope not to stray too far—and he assumes a first mortgage of $7,000 and pays $3,000 cash, his $3,000 cash is coincidentally his paid-up capital. It is also his equity.

Next year, somebody comes along and offers to buy the house for $12,000. In the meantime the person has paid $1,000 off the mortgage. Let us say, for argument's sake, that the person put up $3,000, and has paid $1,000 off the mortgage, so his paid-up capital in that house is $4,000. But his equity is the difference between what it will sell for and the debt, which is $6,000.

Now, what the Boarden commission was referring to, when they talked about a return on equity, was the difference between what they say is fair value for the asset less the debt.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Minister suggesting that we should then make it possible to pay rates on the basis of capital gain?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I am just simply trying to point out, to my hon. friend, 5 of the standards. The first is the historical cost, less depreciation; the second, on the Borden commission formula; the third, trended cost; and the fourth and the fifth, and so on. I will come to them in a second.

I am not advocating anything at this stage. I am simply pointing out to my hon. friend the philosophical approaches which can be taken to the question of determining a rate base, that is all.

So the first basis upon which a rate base may be calculated can be said to be the historical cost less depreciation.

The second one could be said to be the Borden commission formula, namely, arriving at a fair value of the assets in use to deliver the energy, less the debt and the difference is the equity.

Now my hon. friend—and I think he will agree with me—at page 1497, last year, took out the Union Gas Company financial statement. He took the amount of paid-up capital, and the amount of profit before taxes or after taxes—I do not know which he did—and he came out to a figure of what he said, applying the Borden formula, were various percentages which, incidentally, were not correct when one worked them out mathematically. But nevertheless, he represented to this House that he was applying the Borden formula to the financial statement of Union Gas Company, and gave certain percentages.

But that is not what my hon. friend really did. My hon. friend represented to this House that he was taking the Borden formula when he was not. He was taking paid-up capital, and he was telling this House that was what the Borden formula called equity capital, and it is not that at all. There is quite a difference between equity and paid-up capital.

Now, this is not the only point my hon. friend tried to make, to which I would like to refer. But I would like to draw to his attention that these references can be found—if he has any doubts that he made them—on pages 832 and 833 of Hansard.

He said that Mr. Borden now recommends that we should calculate consumers' rates on the shareholders' equity, and exclude borrowed capital from the rate base. And then he goes right along and does his calculation on paid-up capital and not on equity.

Mr. MacDonald: It may be a much better formula.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, it may very well be a better formula. But my hon. friend was representing that he was applying the Borden commission formula to a set of facts, and he was not. That is the only point I wish to make.

Now, I would say to my hon. friend, in relation to the Borden formula, that I find some difficulty with it for a number of reasons. I think the basic one is that libraries are full—as my hon. friends opposite who are lawyers will agree—of books dedicated to the definition of what is fair value. I do not submit to any hon. member of this House that the Borden formula is any better than any other formula. Indeed, I think it just as vague as other formulae for two reasons. One, it says there should be a rate base that should be a fair value; and, secondly, it says there should be a fair rate of return on the fair value.

One can hardly call that a firm formula. But last year the hon. member for York South though it was really quite terrific, and he kept referring to it, speech after speech.

But my hon. friend will have an opportunity to speak about this, and to explain to the House his apparent confusion.

In any event, my objection to the Borden commission formula is that if we are going to avoid what the Borden commission referred to—namely, the expropriation of capital each year because of inflation or the depreciating value of the dollar—it would be necessary, I would respectfully submit, each year to re-value the assets in issue. Otherwise, how can one say that a company is getting a fair return on a fair rate base, and the rate base is the fair value of the assets in service?

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. Minister permit a write-up each year?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I say to my hon. friend that, in effect, if that is what the Borden commission is submitting, that there would be a write-up each year, that seems to me to get awfully close to trended costs. However, I will come to that in a moment.

Now I, therefore, submit to my hon. friends in this House that by no means does this government discard the formula, at this stage, promulgated by the Borden commission. But we certainly do want to look at it and study it very carefully.

I want to point out to my hon. friends that the Borden commission formula is not the formula that was submitted to this House by the hon. member for York South. It is not a return on paid-up capital. It is what they call a fair return on a fair rate base, and the fair rate base should be determined in relation to what is a fair value for the assets in use.

Further, they submit that, from time to time—and obviously from place to place—the rate of return on this fair rate base should differ. They are not married to any 7 per cent. or any other fixed amount.

If my hon. friend will refer himself again to the Borden commission report, he will see that they suggest that, from time to time—depending on the conditions—the rate of return should differ. So it is not a question of my hon. friend simply applying 7 per cent. to the paid-up capital and representing to this House that is the Borden commission's formula, because it errs in two separate directions.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I was taking the 7 per cent. which is the accepted rule of thumb in Ontario at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: But my hon. friend also took the paid-up capital, and that is not what the Borden commission holds as the rate base.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I shall have to examine this—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I should say that my hon. friend will. He has been caught very far out in left field on this one.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Minister was so confused in left field for a while there that he did not know whether the ball was coming or not.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Just because I cannot add, my hon. friend, does not mean that I do not understand general principles.

Now, I would say to my hon. friend that there is a third method of obtaining a rate base, and that is what might be called the replacement value of the assets in use.

Mr. MacDonald: Trend in costs.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. My hon. friend said, on page 831, that trended costs and replacement value were the same thing, and that is not so. Trended costs and replacement value are quite different.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us get this defined now.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, let us. I mean I am happy to be of assistance to my hon. friend in this connection.

Now, replacement value is quite obviously what it says, namely, the cost of replacing the assets at today's prices. Trended costs, on the other hand, are the original costs of the assets, trended upwards or downwards with the depreciation or inflation of the dollar. That is all it means. It is quite a different thing from the question of replacement costs. Let me give hon. members an example.

If a person—say 10 years ago—bought an asset for $1 million, let us say, and the valuation of the dollar has dropped by so many dollars or so many per cents., then we would arrive at what was a trended cost after we had deducted the one from the other. But that might be quite different from the cost to replace the asset at today's rate.

So I would say to my hon. friend, trended costs and replacement costs are not the same thing, although he said so on page 831 last year.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not seriously different.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They are not the same thing, and if they are not the same thing it does not matter if they are seriously different. They cannot be the same thing.

Mr. MacDonald: I think—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, I would call to my hon. friend's attention that, although there was some criticism last year of this government in relation to rate base, outside of Saskatchewan there is not a single province that distributes natural gas in Canada that does not have a rate base which is based on original cost or historical cost less depreciation.

And for the United States, I have the list here in front of me which I would like to, for the purposes of the record, have read into it.

In Alabama, it is original cost less depreciation; in Arizona, all elements considered—that sounds very much like the Borden commission; Arkansas, prudent investment—that is another method I did not mention; California, original cost less depreciation; Colorado, original cost less depreciation; Connecticut, original cost less depreciation; Delaware, all elements considered; District of Columbia, original cost less depreciation; Florida, original cost less depreciation;

Georgia, prudent investment; Idaho, original cost less depreciation; Illinois, fair value; Indiana, fair value.

Iowa is not reported—maybe they have no socialist party and do not need to deal with gas.

In Kansas, it is original cost less depreciation; Kentucky, fair value; Louisiana, prudent investment; Maine, reasonable value; Maryland, fair value; Massachusetts, prudent investment; Michigan, original cost less depreciation; Minnesota, original cost less depreciation; Mississippi, original cost less depreciation.

In Missouri, it is original cost less depreciation; Montana, fair value; Nebraska, no method described; Nevada, fair value; New Hampshire, all elements considered; New Jersey, prudent investment; New Mexico, original cost less depreciation.

In New York, it is original cost less depreciation; North Carolina, all elements considered; North Dakota, prudent investment; Ohio, reproduction cost—now I think that is the first one that has appeared on that list; Oklahoma, original cost less depreciation; Oregon, original cost less depreciation, and—

Mr. Bryden: What about Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We will come to that in a minute.

Oregon, original cost less depreciation; and incidentally, since 1919, the rule in this province has been original cost less depreciation as it is, I might say, in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba and Quebec. Now I will come to the rates in Saskatchewan in a few moments.

Mr. MacDonald: They are the lowest.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They are not the lowest, there are a number of companies—I was just waiting for the hon. member to fall into that one—and I have the rate schedules right here. We will come to it in just a moment.

In Pennsylvania, it is fair value; Rhode Island, original cost less depreciation; South Carolina, original cost less depreciation; South Dakota, prudent investment; Tennessee, original cost less depreciation—

Mr. MacDonald: He missed Hawaii.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, that was not in my list.

Mr. MacDonald: I know, the hon. Minister is not up to date.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I know, the hon. member and I have that in common.

In Texas, it is book cost; Utah, original cost less depreciation; Vermont, original cost less depreciation; Virginia, original cost less depreciation; Washington, original cost less depreciation; West Virginia, original cost less depreciation; Wisconsin, original cost less depreciation; Wyoming, original cost less depreciation; Alaska, original cost less depreciation; Hawaii, original cost less depreciation; Puerto Rico, original cost less depreciation.

In any event, I just wanted to show the hon. member for York South that we, in this province, do a great deal of pioneering, but in this respect we have followed what appears to be a very broadly accepted precedent.

Now, in the province of Ontario there has been, since, I think, the first rate hearing in 1919, the concept of original cost less depreciation. That can be verified in a judgment, as I recall: Mr. Coulter in 1948, original cost less depreciation and by Mr. Whitehead in 1952, I believe, original cost less depreciation.

Now what will be the policy in the future? This is the question the hon. member for York South asked on a number of occasions.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a pertinent one, too.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is a very pertinent one, as I am happy to be able to tell the hon. member. He need not take off his glasses in order to hear this. The rate policy of this government in the future is going to be this:

First of all, we are going to look very closely at the Borden formula and study it. Secondly, we are going to continue to look closely at historical cost less depreciation, because of the dignity that it is given by the traditional acceptance in so many other jurisdictions.

I would like to see—and I think the hon. member would like to see—a comparison of how these two systems work out. After all, he advocated the one last year, and the other one has been—

Mr. MacDonald: I did not advocate it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, I understood the hon. member to say that if he did not advocate it he felt he was dignifying it by talking about it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the straw man the hon. Minister set up and then beat into a pulp.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the hon. member will find that he spoke at least 6 hours last year on the Borden commission, and on a number of occasions when it was referred to.

Mr. MacDonald: It is obvious the hon. Minister has not made up his mind on what we are going to do. He is going to study it some more.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are doing so, in this province, for the reasons which I suggested to the hon. member earlier, and which I will return to:

We do not believe, or it does not seem in any event, that trended costs or replacement costs or these other costs can offer a formula which is satisfactory in determining a rate base.

But I should think that somewhere, in the field of looking at the Borden formula and the historical cost less depreciation, will be found the policy of the new Ontario energy board. That will be determined as the facts of the cases which are presented to us unfold.

It would be unwise at this stage, until one sees actually how these various formulae work out, to determine which one would be acceptable to the government as providing, as I indicated, the very purposes for which rates are set in the first place.

I think it is desirable, as the Borden commission suggested, that some discretion should be allowed. Otherwise, what happens is that we have—in trying to determine rates—something as complex, complicated, and expensive as The Income Tax Act of this country, something that runs to hundreds and hundreds of pages in order to determine all kinds of small loopholes. That is one of the dangers of trying to become too specific in dealing with terms and conditions to prevail under unknown circumstances. After all, it has taken the income tax experts some 30 years of experience to produce an Act which people are still able to ride through with a horse and buggy.

Now, I come to the rate of return. I have spoken to the House only in relation to the rate base up to this stage. Now I would like to make some reference, if I might, to the rate of return. This is the hardest problem. The rate base is not the hardest problem, the rate of return is.

Traditionally, the rate of return in this province has been in the neighbourhood of 7 per cent., and it originally was arrived at because it was about 1.5 per cent. above the borrowing market demand—that is to say, traditionally, interest rates over the period of time that gas rates have been determined in North America. The borrowing rate average has been about 5.5 per cent., and the rate of return to gas companies has been permitted at 7 per cent. because it has been, on the average, about 1.5 per cent. greater than the average interest rate on borrowed money.

Now, the Borden commission, interestingly enough, says that, in its opinion, the rate should be flexible, and that it should depend upon the circumstances at the time borrowings are made and rates are determined. I do not know whether the hon. member for York South feels that is a satisfactory aspect of the matter, but we, no doubt, will have an opportunity of hearing from him in this connection.

However, I would say to the hon. member that the policy of the government in this matter, that of rate return, is to maintain a rate of return in the order of 7 per cent., and that will depend upon the conditions which prevail from time to time.

This is one of the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, in the second bill which I will present to this House this afternoon, we have established what we call an energy studies group. We feel it is essential that greater study be given to a number of the aspects—including rates, rate base, returns to be made, and so forth—and rather than just going off, in effect, half-cocked on the subject, we have established, in The Department of Energy Resources, a small group called the energy studies group which will study these matters.

So I would say to this House, in relation to rates, rate base, and rate of return, that the purpose of the policy of this government is, first, to protect the consumer, and to see that he pays a fair and just rate, not more and not less, and that it is competitive with other fuels.

Secondly, our policy is to make sure the rate is sufficient to provide adequate service, replacements and safety for the company providing the service.

Thirdly, it is that the company should be able to charge a rate which is sufficient to attract the necessary capital to expand, because it is quite evident that, if we are now distributing 85 billion cubic feet and within 20 years we are going to be distributing 600 billion cubic feet, it cannot be done unless money is attracted in the industry with which it can expand and provide these services.

Now, I said to the hon. member, in relation to rates—and I have the rate pages of the province of Saskatchewan in my hand—I have averaged the residential rate in the province of Saskatchewan. I find that, for the first 3,000 cubic feet, the average turns out to be $4.35. The Provincial Gas Company average turns out to $3.88. Lakeland is $4.72.

Now here is the gas distribution system of Saskatchewan, which is much closer to the source of supply and, in many cases, is located right in proximity to the gas well, charging higher average rates for residential consumption for the first 3,000 cubic feet than, for example, the Provincial Gas Company in the province of Ontario, and very nearly as high as Lakeland Gas, over 2,000 miles away.

Now, the hon. member might want to make reference to these and I would be quite happy to have him look at them.

I also want to draw to the attention of the hon. member that it depends on what size community one lives in, in Saskatchewan, as to what rates one pays. It is not a uniform rate. People who live in a small dwelling, a small inhabitation, or a small town, pay a much higher rate than do persons who live in a large city. I would think the hon. member would perhaps like to have a look at these matters when he is intending next to speak in this House on this subject.

In connection with these matters, I would like to say that there are a number of isolated references which I would like to make:

First of all, who is covered by the regulations of the Ontario fuel board?

My hon. friend, last year, made reference to a statement by hon. Dana Porter on March 7, 1956, as reported in Hansard, which he said was the basis upon which he was making the representation that the fuel board did not have control over large direct customers of Trans-Canada. The statement of hon. Mr. Porter to which he referred, was this:

The gas that is sold by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Ltd., is a commodity which is carried through a pipe line which is within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament. We have no control over the prices they charge for that gas. But we have control, through the fuel board, once that gas is sold to a utility here. It comes within the local jurisdiction from that point on. The fuel board is concerned as to the prices charged for gas to the ultimate customer by the utility.

It is my respectful submission that hon. Mr. Porter did not say that the fuel board did not have control over the customers, large customers, who take directly from Trans-Canada. It would be fair to say that my hon.

friend can put whatever interpretation on it he may wish. But I would say this to him—lest he have any question in his mind—that the present Ontario energy board has control over prices of gas delivered directly by Trans-Canada to any direct consumer. I want also to inform my hon. friend that there are no such customers.

Now, with reference to several other special matters, before I conclude, I would like to say that I would refer this bill—this Ontario Energy Board Act—to the committee on energy which was established this session to study, not only matters of The Department of Energy Resources, and to hear matters dealing with the fuel board, but also to study legislation dealing with Hydro, and to hear the representations dealing with Ontario Hydro.

So I would say to my hon. friends in this House, these generally are the principles behind the bill which I have put before them for their consideration. Subjects such as storage, gas export, well head prices, pollution, drilling practices, safety codes, inspection, and so forth, come under the energy bill which I will next have the pleasure of introducing to this House.

Mr. Bryden: May I ask a question arising out of the hon. Minister's statement, Mr. Speaker?

When the government ultimately decides on the principle that it wishes to apply in the fixing of rates for natural gas, what is the procedure provided in the bills that are now before us, whereby those principles—as laid down by the government—will be communicated to the board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would draw my hon. friend's attention to the rules and procedure of this House which preclude my hon. friend from considering that question, and preclude me from answering it. Special provisions of special sections are to be dealt with in this House when the House is in committee.

Mr. Bryden: Surely this relates to the general principles, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What my hon. friend is asking for is the specific phraseology, which I will be more than pleased to discuss when the matter comes before the House in committee.

Mr. Bryden: Is there a provision whereby the matters will be brought officially to the attention of the board? I ask because I have been looking for it in the limited time available and cannot find it. That is the point I am trying to get cleared up.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I am sorry. What specific matter is my hon. friend referring to?

Mr. Bryden: When the government decides on the principles that it wishes applied in the determination of rates, how is the direction of these principles to be communicated to the board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would think, to be perfectly fair, that the normal procedure in any jurisdiction is for the Minister, to whom a board is responsible, to communicate—either by letter or by verbal instruction—to the board what the policy of the government in that connection would be, and that is what I would intend to do.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in rising to discuss this particular bill, I must say that I have a lot of sympathy for the question that the hon. member for Woodbine just asked. I have examined this bill for some limited time since last Friday, and likewise the Gordon committee report.

I think one of the fundamental criticisms that can be directed against the bill is in the fact that we are delegating, at this particular stage, to an independent board or commission, powers to determine rates and otherwise control the distribution of gas—among other sources of energy in this province—without giving them any formula as to the means by which they should make the specific determination of rates.

I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that, in this particular respect, the hon. member for Woodbine is perfectly right and that, if we are to pursue the policy set out by the Gordon committee, it is imperative that we, in this Legislature, make the determination and determine the formula whereby rates will be established.

In effect, we are giving a carte blanche to the board to make a decision in policy which is essentially our responsibility.

Now, I think that this is a point that must be emphasized with the greatest amount of emphasis. It is the sort of thing that one can say—and it might sound theoretical—that this is in violation of the principles set out in the Gordon committee report. So, at the expense of repeating myself, I simply say that this particular bill, it does seem to me, was written in the same fashion that many bills have been written in this Legislature, or for this Legislature, heretofore. It makes no attempt to spell out policy, and it gives to the particular independent board the opportunity to determine, in its discretion, what public need and necessity really mean.

I have a lot of sympathy for the hon. Minister's predicament in this particular instance. I must say that I am not as schooled as he is with respect to all the various ways of determining rates. It is quite apparent that there are 4 or 5 or 6 different methods. But my limited knowledge certainly does suggest one or two things.

Firstly, I understand that, in terms of the total cost of an operating gas company, for example, 90 per cent. of the cost relates to the original installation of equipment, and that the company is basically dealing with administrative costs in the amount of approximately 10 per cent.

Therefore, it would seem to me, in good common sense, that the rate must essentially relate itself to the original cost of installation.

Now, I think the hon. Minister agrees basically with that because, as I heard his discussion this afternoon, it did seem to me that he showed a lot of sympathy for the so-called historical costs less depreciation.

However, I do think that, before this bill proceeds any further in this Legislature, we should have a specific and detailed discussion of the means by which we are going to instruct the board to establish and set rates. So, I for one, Mr. Speaker—and I am confident all hon. members in my party—will vigorously oppose permitting and delegating to this board authority and powers that we should exercise in this particular Legislature.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second point that I want to make is simply this: We have heard this afternoon that the personnel of the board has been determined—a group of gentlemen, 5 in number, I believe. I am not going to suggest that any one of these men is not qualified to act on a board, but there are two or three specific objections that I would have—not to the persons, but to their respective backgrounds.

It does seem to me that this board requires: One, an accountant; two, a geologist; three, an engineer. These are the types of people who have an intimate knowledge of the various factors and conditions that must be evaluated in determining a rate, even after the policy of the Legislature has been determined.

I do not think, in spite of the fact that I am a member of the profession that has been given considerable authority—that is, the legal profession—that the legal profession can add a whole lot to this particular board. I think it is a very specialized board. I think it is a board that requires knowledge, as I have said, particularly in 3 or 4 respects, including geology, accounting and engineering.

It must be remembered that this particular bill to establish an energy board conceivably may have thrust upon it at some future date the responsibility of determining rates for energy other than the rates which we are particularly interested in now—that is, gas. In that event, it does seem to me that somebody schooled in other forms of energy, or power—or energy that is generated from sources other than gas—should likewise be on this board.

Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that, here again, one cannot emphasize too strongly that the personnel of the board is all-important. I do not think that we should pass lightly over the suggestions that have been made. These men, I am sure, are pre-eminent and excellent personalities. But the simple fact is that, unless this board is manned by people who have knowledge in, and who are schooled and experienced in, this particular commercial industrial activity, I doubt the board can make a real contribution.

The third point that I would want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that, again in direct contradiction to the Gordon committee report, this particular bill—and I am referring now to Bill No. 38, that is, An Act to establish the Ontario energy board—does not seem to take into consideration the admonitions of the Gordon committee with respect to appeals.

Now, this particular board—that is, the old fuel board, now known as the energy board—is a classic illustration, as the hon. Minister of Energy Resources has said, of a board that does administrative work, as well as semi-judicial work.

As I understand it, this new board will be doing basically, in fact exclusively, semi-judicial work.

The administrative portion of the old fuel board's activity will, in the accordance with the report, be the responsibility of The Department of Energy, and I think that is as it should be.

But, likewise, the report suggested that—in those instances where a board is performing exclusively, or primarily, semi-judicial activity—there should be an appeal to an independent, impartial body, particularly a court.

So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that, in this instance, the bill—to the extent that it suggests that appeal will lie from the board to the cabinet—is in error. I do not think the hon. Minister can take any comfort whatsoever in that.

Let me, Mr. Speaker, specifically illustrate. My understanding is this: That the two sections—and if I may be permitted to violate the rules for a moment, I do not see how I can discuss this, Mr. Speaker, without reading the two sections that I think relate to appeal, that is, sections 25 and 26 of the Act—now, the first section provides:

An appeal lies to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council upon the petition of any party, all parties first having been given such notice as the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council deems appropriate. And he may vary or rescind any order of the board whether the order was made inter-party or otherwise, and any order that he makes with respect thereto is binding upon the board and all parties.

That particular section relates to an appeal to cabinet, Mr. Speaker. The second section—section 26—provides:

The board may—

Now the word “may”, Mr. Speaker, is all-important—not “shall” but “may”— —at the request of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, or of its own motion, or upon the application of any party to proceedings before the board, and upon such security being given as it directs, state a case in writing for the opinion of the court of appeal upon any question that in the opinion of the board is a question of law.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the board has discretion to permit a stated case to go to the court of appeal, or not; and, secondly, the board—well, that, Mr. Speaker, is the whole thing in a nutshell, the appeal to the court of appeal is on the basis of a stated case and in the discretion of the board. The next section:

The court of appeal shall herein determine the stated case. An appeal lies to the court of appeal from any order of the board upon a question of law or jurisdiction, but no such appeal lies unless leave to appeal is obtained from the court within one month of the making of the order sought to be appealed from, or within, such further time as the court, upon the special circumstances of the case, allows.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this particular section, section 27, seems to give a party an absolute right to appeal irrespective, and if the hon. Minister's interpretation be that that is the case, then I ask why in the world does he include sections 25 and 26?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, because he raises it seriously and quite rightly so, if the House is of the opinion that should be taken out, I shall be happy to remove it.

This is an additional avenue. With the Gordon committee's report in one hand and draft in the other, I wanted to put in as many opportunities, or avenues, as an appellant might feel he is entitled to have.

Therefore, if this House does not feel they want section 25 or section 26 in—I think section 26 should certainly stay. Section 25 is an appeal to the cabinet, which is something which is contained in many pieces of legislation passed by this Legislature.

But, section 27 is the real appeal section. If the hon. leader of the Opposition will note it has 6 subsections to it, and it is really the substantive section dealing with appeal.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter that should be clarified because, to substantiate the position I am trying to make, I think the hon. Minister, in making reference to the Gordon committee report and particularly to this Department of Energy Resources, will realize that, in conjunction with the old fuel board, the committee had this to say:

We are left with the question of appeals from the decisions of the board. Under section 23 of the Act, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may, upon petition of any party, all parties first having been given such notice as the council deems appropriate, vary or rescind any order.

And further, section 24 of the Act states:

That an appeal lies to the court of appeal from any order of the board made under section 16 upon any question whatsoever.

The committee then continues:

We suggest that this appeal provision seems to be consistent with the division of responsibility outlined above.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my suggestion simply is that, in conjunction with this serious point with respect to appeals, it does seem to me that herein we are not dealing with the problems we are dealing with in conjunction with the workmen's compensation board and the labour relations board and such. Herein we are dealing with a board that is responsible to grant or refuse a licence—or cancel a licence after it has been granted—and I submit, for the consideration of this House, that the particular method of appeal should be clarified.

The next point that I want to mention is with respect to the regulations. Herein again hon. members will recall that the Gordon committee report pointed out, very emphatically, that it is imperative that regulations be detailed sufficiently so that the policy, which should be determined by the Legislature, be defined in detail.

I suggest that when we look at the regulations again, we cannot ascertain accurately the method by which the rates will be established. We cannot, with consideration, have any assurance whatsoever that this particular board is going to control the rates for storage which I think is a fourth and very serious handicap in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is under the second Act, my hon. friend.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I must say this, Mr. Speaker, that, as I mentioned on Friday, Bill No. 39—the second Act—was not printed on Friday. It is now printed and, frankly, the only opportunity I have had to look at it is what I have had this afternoon.

Now, if we have an assurance that storage rates will be controlled by the energy board, to the end that an actual determination of the charges that can be made for gas that is stored is included in the jurisdiction of the board, then I am quite satisfied with respect to this particular observation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: To show that I have not, in any way, misled the hon. leader of the Opposition, I draw to his attention that the board, under section 28D, has power to designate a storage area. Actually, we are getting into a lot of detail that one should not on second reading. But my hon. friend has raised a genuine concern for these matters, so perhaps it will be best that we mention them now.

Under section 28D, I repeat, the board has power to designate a storage area. My recollection, from drawing this Act, is that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may make regulations in respect to rates for storage. But I will have to look into it, and I assure my hon. friend that I will.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I have read the Act. It seems to me that they do have the power to designate storage areas and such like.

But, Mr. Speaker, on examination of the bill, I found no authority to actually determine rates.

Now, in that respect I would suggest that this particular bill should be amended, if need be, to assure that the board itself, with the authority of the Legislature, will have control over storage rates. I say this because it is unnecessary, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, to remind hon. members that storage is an integral part of gas distribution in Ontario, and, in fact, probably the most important aspect in terms of great reduction. So it is absolutely imperative that this board be given implicit power to control the rates that are chargeable.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

I understand he made a generalization that it is imperative that the board have control over rates for storage. Would my hon. friend be kind enough to say exactly what this implies? I am sorry, I just missed his point.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, what I had in mind was a matter that, a few days ago, was raised in conjunction with the Throne debate. Unfortunately, I do not have the quotations before me immediately, but I think I can summarize the significance of them.

I tried to point out that, in conjunction with the Borden hearing, the Trans-Canada people point out that, but for storage facilities in southern Ontario—and in particular, southwestern Ontario—rates would be, I believe, 40 per cent. higher than they are today.

Now, that adds emphasis to only one thing, and that is the importance of storage facilities, with which I think all would agree.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The statement is correct, my hon. friend, and I do not mean to say that he is misrepresenting it. But if they have said the rates would be 40 per cent. less, I do not think it is accurate. The Consumers' Gas Company, for instance, which has very little in storage, has had 8 rate reductions.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the second point that I want to emphasize is that, likewise, it has been pointed out that Union Gas has a subsidiary company incorporated for the purpose of providing storage facilities. Now, the profit and the gain, with respect to that subsidiary company, are currently not under the jurisdiction of the fuel board.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is not correct, my hon. friend. They are under the jurisdiction of the fuel board, and they will be under the jurisdiction of the Ontario energy board. I do not think we can determine—if I may say with respect—a rate base and leave out part of the assets of a company.

Incidentally, this raises a very interesting question for my hon. friend from York South, who says that gas storage is such a tremendous asset. I wonder, when he speaks, if he will tell us whether the value of it should be included in the rate base.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, the point that I am trying to make is simply that, as I read the bill in its present status—and if I may be permitted at the moment to examine the bill, to determine the reference to storage facilities—the impression that I got on reading it was that the new board, the energy board, would be empowered to determine where storage facilities should be made available. In fact, it would be empowered to insist that they be used. But I could find no specific demonstration that such facilities would be taken into consideration in the determination of rates.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say, to my hon. friend, we will deal with it when we come to the next bill. I assure my hon. friend that I will look into this matter that he raises, but I had felt that we had covered it in sections of section 9, subsection 12, and the following subsection.

For example, section 9, subsection 12, says that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may make regulations regulating the repressuring, the maintenance of pressure in, or the injection of gas, oil, water, or any other substance into gas or oil horizons. That was the design of that section, in a general way, without limiting the generality of the foregoing to make it a rather broad section.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is referring to the bill that has yet to come before us, and I would ask your permission to study that and determine whether or not—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not think we will call it today, because I understand it was not printed until today. But I am grateful for my hon. friend's observations, and I want him to have an opportunity of making his comments on this.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, in summary, the suggestions that I have to make are simply these:

First, we should very carefully examine the personnel of the board, not in terms of the individual persons but in terms of their abilities and backgrounds, and give consideration to the fact that accounting, geology, engineering and other forms of energy experiences, other than gas, will be valuable assets to this particular board.

Secondly, I suggest that we give serious consideration to the question of appeals and regulations, to determine whether or not we are sufficiently defining the purpose of the legislation and sufficiently outlining the policy of this Legislature so that it can be implemented in regular fashion by the board.

That raises the question, Mr. Speaker, whether or not—before this Act is passed by the Legislature—we should determine the specific base and return for the determination of gas rates in Ontario. I personally think we should.

I am of the opinion that, judging by the experience we have had, and throughout all the continent, and the fact that—if I am correct in this, Mr. Speaker—about 90 per cent. of the total cost relates itself to the installation and physical installation of pipe line—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have never heard that figure.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —and that about 10 per cent. relates itself to administrative costs—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And what about the cost of buying the gas, which is very considerable?

The cost of buying the gas, for instance, could be about say, 50 some cents on a sale price of $1.14 for certain consumption. Could the hon. member very well say that 90 per cent. of the price is therefore capital?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course the cost of the gas is not included in the analysis that I am making. The simple point I want to make is with respect to the incorporation of a company, and the capital that is made available to it—either by equity, paid-up capital and by borrowed capital—that 90 per cent. of that money is used for the purpose of physically installing the pipe line.

Now, if that be the case, it certainly does demonstrate the close relationship between the cost of the line and the return that is required.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I point out to my hon. friend, however, the problems that are involved in trying to be too specific?

For instance, Consumers' Gas—let me take a couple of examples—Consumers' Gas had a large plant for the manufacture of gas. They do not use it anywhere because of natural gas coming into the province. Now, should that be in the rate base?

Also, they have other plants. Union Gas holds a piece of property right beside the Polymer Corporation. That is another problem, whether that should be in the rate base. It is not being used to produce revenue. It is not a part of the service.

There are so very many exceptions, and so many things that should be put in and put out, that the experience of the United States has been that the more one particularizes, the greater danger one tends to get into.

Now, if my hon. friend would like to suggest specific revisions, when the House comes into committee of the whole, I would certainly be happy to consider them.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the point that I am making is simply this. I realize that it is not easy. I am simply trying to follow, in this respect, the recommendations of the Gordon committee. They are not novel, but relate essentially to the whole question of the operation of this Legislature, and that is the simple determination of whether or not we should hand to a board or commission unlimited authority to do something that we, originally, should do.

Now, the thing that we are required to do, I acknowledge, is a difficult thing. I acknowledge that it is very difficult to state the rate of return, or the base rate, or that the basis on which we are determining gas rates will be A, B, C, D, E, F, or G. But I do think we should have a fundamental understanding that, basically, we are going to relate it to the original installation costs.

I think this is a fundamental concern. That is all I am asking for. I think it might be a mistake to say it must be related to that and that only.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would want to look and see how the application, for instance, of the Borden commission—if the formulae I have described here today accurately reflect it—I think my hon. friend would want to look and see how that works out. After all, the Borden commission does suggest that, in the historical cost theory less depreciation, in a devaluing dollar area and inflation it can be confiscatory of a person's capital. I think my hon. friend would want to have the board look at that, would he not?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, exactly. I do not think that we can, at this particular time, make an all-inclusive determination. I think that my hon. friend has advised us that he is prepared to let this bill go to the committee on energy, where it rightly should go, and where it rightly has to be studied. I am simply trying to point out some of the inherent and basic—and almost troublesome—principles that are related to this particular bill.

It is going to be a difficult thing to accomplish the prerequisites that I tried to outline, but I do think that this is our responsibility.

Our responsibility is to give the board, that will eventually be responsible for the administration of this Act, our concept of policy. That is all that I am asking for. I simply say that that, in itself, is of vital concern.

All I said with respect to the other matter is that, judging from what I can gather thus far, the rate base is related very closely, if you will, to the original cost less depreciation of the pipe line itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with those observations, I would recommend that this House do, particularly in the committee, give consideration to the several things that I have tried to outline—points of principle I would like to call them, rather than details. I think those details that we can talk about, and should talk about, can be rightly left to the committee on energy.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the general principles of this bill, I have one or two remarks that I should like to address to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources.

We have had from him, sir, a very able—and I say that in no sense of attempting to flatter him—and comprehensive analysis of the principles of this bill. May I say, parenthetically, that, since coming into the House, and in the short time that I have been here, I have heard very many nice things about the hon. Minister of Energy Resources. I have been told, sir—and these comments are sincere—that, at least in one aspect, he is a man with a sense of mission.

Now, it is very, very much appreciated by myself that his sense of mission seems to include a desire to widen the understanding of the hon. member for York South. I would commend to him that he continue on in that vein, and I hope he adopts that mission of widening his understanding with an evangelical fervour so that we will all benefit from it.

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member for York South will reserve his comments until he gets up to speak—I imagine we are going to hear from him at great length.

I want to draw, to the attention of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, section 29 of his bill, and to say to him that it seems to set out a novel principle.

At first glance, Mr. Speaker, in reading it, I am curious about the words that the annual report to the Minister, and I quote from it: "Containing such information as the Minister may require".

Now I wonder, Mr. Speaker, why the annual report should contain only such information as the Minister may require? This board is a creature of this assembly. It owes its life to this assembly, and boards normally report annually to the assembly.

I have looked at only one other board, and the requisite in the statute that I am going to refer to in a moment—the usual practice—is that the board shall report to the assembly on such matters that relate to its jurisdiction.

That, Mr. Speaker, I suggest with great respect, is how it should be. This assembly wants to know, at the end of the year, what the board has done, what matters it has dealt with, how it has carried out its functions, and to point out anything that is improper which they would want the assembly to become aware of.

Now, I see no reason—and I say this with all respect to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources—why that board should have to make a report containing such information as he may require. The hon. Minister does not constitute the board, and I do not feel that he should have the power that section seems to give him, to tell the board what they should put in their annual report—at least to lay down the subjects upon which they should report.

This board is going to become one of the most important boards that will function in this province, dealing as it does with the distribution, sale and franchising in the realm of hydro-carbons. So I would ask the hon. Minister of Energy Resources whether, before this goes to committee, this novel principle will be changed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know whether the hon. member for Sudbury is correct or not. If he says this is a novel principle, I obviously accept what he says, and I will look at it.

If my hon. friend feels, and the House feels, that when this comes into committee, this could be phrased in a better way, I certainly would be happy to entertain the suggestion.

I would point out to my hon. friend from Sudbury, however, that he says that there may be things that the House will want to inquire into. That is why the board reports to the committee on energy—or the government committee on commissions—which can go into every aspect that it may want. If my hon. friend is correct, it can also be brought before the public accounts committee. But this was just the formal tabling of a report of a commission's dealings during the year and what it has been doing.

Actually, if my hon. friend looks at the fuel board reports of recent years, they are pretty well confined to the number of mines or wells that have been discovered and their production, and so on. But I do assure the hon. member for Sudbury that I will look into the matter, and will be happy to consider it when it comes to the House.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, may I, therefore, then conclude just on this note that I much appreciate the graciousness with which the hon. Minister receives my suggestion?

He did say, though, that he did not know this was a novel principle.

Well, after I saw this, I did not have the opportunity to look up every statute which required a board to make a report. But I did get out the statute that gives life to a not unimportant board that carries on its functions in this province, and that is the liquor licence board. I was interested to note, Mr. Speaker, that in section 82, the Legislature, in its wisdom, has seen fit to spell out the things upon which that board shall report.

If I may—and I do so asking the indulgence of the House to belabour the hon. members with the things that must be included in its report—I will just read that section:

The board shall, from time to time, make reports to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council covering such matters in connection with the administration of this Act as he may require, and shall annually make to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, through the Minister, a report for the 12 months ending March 31 in each year in which the report is made, which shall contain (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g).

And, if I may—I do so with the greatest amount of respect—I will suggest that might be a good statute for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to copy.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am indebted to the hon. member, and I will look into it. If the House feels that they want that done, I will be more than happy to do it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Would that be because that board has the hon. Minister in charge of it—the liquor licence board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It does not matter. We will look into it, and, if the House wants it, we will put it in.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Our hon. Ministers do not tell people off, they are very kind.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when we were discussing this whole issue last year, and particularly the government establishment of a Department of Energy Resources, the comment of the hon. Prime Minister was that they had taken time by the forelock in establishing this department.

Well, I must say that, in watching the vigour and industry with which the hon. Minister tackles the job, I had hoped that this would be the case.

But when the hon. Prime Minister made the comment a year ago, my observation then—which I suggest still looks fairly valid—was that he did not have time by the forelock, that he was riding on the coattails of time. In fact, he has fallen off and is away behind.

The reason why I think it is still valid is this. There are two or three basic issues—for example, the spelling out of the principles upon which the rate base is going to be decided in this province—which cannot be left forever and a day.

There are other issues such as, for example, the question of capital write-ups, because if this is going to be left, then it means that the people—the consumers of the province of Ontario—are paying higher rates now, as a result of—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: As a result of what?

Mr. MacDonald: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister—who has had quite a field day so far—just lets me make my point, we have now reached the stage where it is necessary that we should be able to spell out exactly what the rules are within which this new energy board must operate.

Yet, after all of these years of procrastination, the government now comes before us with an hon. Minister, who has taken over the job and devoted fairly full time to it, saying that they still do not have these rules worked out.

Now, in the course of my remarks, I will show hon. members the consequences that flow from that. However, before I get into the details of the principle, there is one question I would appreciate the hon. Minister making a comment on. I say this because, it seems to me, it is of some general guidance in our assessing the powers of this new board.

Would it be accurate to state, Mr. Speaker—may I ask the hon. Minister through you—if the powers of the old fuel board, which have been handed to the energy board, are essentially the same, or have they been greatly strengthened, at least within that jurisdiction which is now being handed over to the new energy board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would say to the hon. member it is difficult to generalize greatly this or greatly that, but—generally speaking—firstly, the general powers of the board, in dealing with quasi-judicial matters, have been transferred. They have been, in my opinion—they may not be in the hon. member's, but there again I will be happy to have his advice—my opinion is that they have been very greatly strengthened, and they are specifically augmented by a number of provisions in the next bill, namely Bill No. 39, "An Act respecting energy."

Quite frankly, I say to the hon. member, for whom I do have a great deal of respect—we cross swords, but it is sort of fun—I say to the hon. member for York South that it is difficult to debate these bills separately, because one really augments the other.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I recognize the difficulty, and the reason why I am asking the question is with reference to the quasi-judicial functions which I assume are now with the new energy board.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, and very much strengthened.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister says they have been very much strengthened. But, quite frankly, this is the thing that worries me, because as I assess them in light of the very wide experience that has been built up over the years in the United States and, to a considerable extent, in Canada. Indeed, it seems to me that there is more writing available on the experience in the United States than there is in Canada. However, I think that this board is seriously deficient in terms of powers that are necessary to be able to protect the consumer.

One of the basic principles in the whole approach, for example, is the question as to whether or not the board is going to have really a detailed supervision, continuing investigation, and examination of the operations of these companies.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Under this Act, not under the energy—the hon. member will see the problem—

Mr. MacDonald: No, no. It will come under the energy board.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, if I may respectfully say this to the hon. member:

The federal power commission in the United States, and most jurisdictions, have not done it the way the hon. member suggests. The reason for that is this: If the board itself is always reviewing facts then it, in effect, is in the position of sifting evidence before a hearing is even had, and thus it is capable of being argued that it is prejudging a case. It is better to have somebody other than the board sifting the evidence, and laying the information before the board that he thinks it is time for a hearing. That is the very reason I suggested to this House an energy returns officer, and it is going to be his job to do that very thing.

Mr. MacDonald: I recognize that. As the hon. Minister says, it is a new development, and I think it certainly will be interesting to watch—namely, that the board should have this officer who, in effect, is doing the examination—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The department! It is the department that has the energy returns officer, not the board. Because if it is being done by the board, it looks like the board is sifting evidence and making up its mind before anybody has a chance to come before it to be heard.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the longer the hon. Minister speaks, the more he raises doubts in my mind as to whether or not this is going to achieve the objective that has been achieved in the United States.

If we have a man over in the department who is investigating—at whose instigation?—and may or may not be bringing back information to place before the board for examination, it seems to me we have a very serious possibility that the board is not going to be examining, as thoroughly as they should, the financial circumstances of the companies, to discover whether or not they are hiding profits, so that the consumer therefore is paying more.

For example, let me get down to this one basic point. There are only one or two that I want to try to cover today, but there are literally a dozen different points that, at one time or another—either in committee or in subsequent years—we have to examine in order to decide whether or not our board is doing the job adequately, in light of the experience of many other comparable boards.

If I may turn to it now, the one important point is this business of rate base. Now, the hon. Minister says that last year I argued in this House in favour of the Borden commission proposal, but I submit—if he wishes to read what I said again—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is enjoyable, I have read it so many times.

Mr. MacDonald: —that I was not so much espousing the Borden commission proposal. What I was pleading for was, for heaven's sake, this government to make up its mind! What is the basis upon which we are operating?

By way of illustrating why the government should make up its mind, I took the Borden formula, in a fashion that the hon. Minister says was misinterpreted to a small degree, and I applied it to one or two companies in this province. I pointed out, on the Borden formula basis, the profits they are making. But my basic point, Mr. Speaker—and I repeat it here because I do not want to thresh through all this old straw. It is—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Embarrassing. It is also embarrassing.

Mr. MacDonald: No, not because it is embarrassing, but simply that there is no point in going back over it all again. The point we have got to get around to very quickly—and it is obvious that this government has yet not come around to it—is the laying down clearly what the principles of the rate base are. Until we have laid them down clearly, the energy board does not know how to operate.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think they are perfectly clear at the moment. The basis upon which they are operating is historical cost less depreciation, and the rate of return is in the order of 7 per cent. Now, I do not know what could be clearer than that.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, in other words, the hon. Minister is saying that the board is going to continue to operate on the old basis while we pursue an examination of it in relation to the Borden commission, and conceivably we will come up with something new.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is why we established The Department of Energy Resources.

Mr. MacDonald: All right, then, Mr. Speaker, I just want to try to prove to this House, on the basis of the principles on which the fuel board has been operating, and which the hon. Minister has now indicated is going to be the continuing basis, at least for the time being, of the new energy board, that I think the evidence grows more conclusive, every day, that the consumers in the province of Ontario are paying far in excess of what they should be paying, even on the basis of the principles that we have laid down.

Let me take two or three instances to prove it, or at least what I think is proof of it.

One of them is the instance of Consumers' Gas. The hon. Minister himself gave this evidence to the public in the government's submission to the national energy board. He came up with these astounding figures, namely, that for 3,000 cubic feet of gas sold by Consumers' Gas, in the province of Ontario, the charge is $7.24, while the same quantity of gas, distributed by a subsidiary of Consumers' Gas operating in the United States, is sold for $4.71.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this raises what to me seems to be a truly astounding proposition: That Canadian gas, sold by a Canadian company, costs the consumers of the province of Ontario approximately 40 per cent. more than if this gas is sold by a subsidiary of Consumers' Gas to a subsidiary of Consumers' Gas in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: My hon. friend should not get too excited on those facts, because the facts are not correct.

Mr. MacDonald: What facts are not correct?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The facts that my hon. friend has just cited.

Mr. MacDonald: The facts that I have cited are correct. I do not know what picayune point the hon. Minister is now going to raise.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, now! Look! Let us be fair about this! The figures which were referred to in the submission of this province to the national energy board were for two months—not a year average—and therefore they showed a very great difference between the rates for the result in payment of the bill.

But, if they are averaged over an entire year, they turn out to be about 12 per cent. lower in the United States than they are here for this particular company. There are a number of reasons why. When it is the proper time to discuss it, namely, under the second bill, I will point out, to my hon. friend, the reasons which are presented to us, at least, for the difference in the rate in the United States.

One of these is that they can, in this area, sell at a much better rate to industrial consumers than Consumers' Gas does here in this area.

Secondly, it is pointed out regarding Consumers' Gas in this province—and hon. members may be interested in knowing this—the average consumption of the average consumer, Consumers' Gas residential, I think is about 80,000 cubic feet a year, or maybe it is 40,000—I am not sure whether it is 40,000, or 80,000, but it is quite low.

It is estimated that the average consumption for the residential user in this area will be 170,000 cubic feet and, for instance, the rates of Lakeland, NONG, Provincial, and Union are infinitely higher than Consumers' Gas because Consumers' Gas has, here in Ontario, people just using gas for cooking and nothing else. Obviously, as anyone appreciates, the more that a person buys, the cheaper per unit. I suggest that is a fair statement to make.

Mr. MacDonald: It is all very well for the hon. Minister to rise now and say that the figures that I am quoting, taken directly from his own document, are a misrepresentation of the situation. Has he learned something since he produced the document?

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has made his point, and he is not going to continue to interrupt me, because I did not interrupt him when he was making his presentation. The fact of the matter is that the appendix in the government's brief gave these figures without qualification—not for a two-month period, not averaged over the year.

Now the hon. Minister is arguing that his own figures misrepresented the facts.

Well, if he misled me he misled the rest of the province. He is a little late in correcting them. The fact of the matter is, on the basis of his own document, the residential consumer is using 3,000 cubic feet; there is no reference to two months, no reference to it not being a non-represented period—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Why argue about it, my hon. friend? I am telling him it is only for two months. Is he arguing against my word as a member of this House?

Mr. MacDonald: I took his word for it. All I am saying now, Mr. Speaker, is this: It is all very well for the hon. Minister to rise and say I am misrepresenting facts when I am only reproducing what he himself put in a brief to the national energy board in Ottawa. Now he confesses he misrepresented the facts.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not. I said these facts are actually correct, but they are not representative of the year's average rate. It is on that basis that he is making these wild generalizations.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, why did the hon. Minister not inform the national energy board in his brief?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We did. We informed the national energy board; and, secondly, the national energy board made a ruling last Thursday that the retail rates out of this country were of no concern to it, and that it would not receive any evidence in that connection. But I advised the chairman of the board and so did the Deputy Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am making a general point concerning the problem of Canadian gas being exported to the United States and being sold for less than it is being sold to the Canadian consumer. It is not a new point. When the Borden commission on energy was holding hearings all across this country, they received evidence in Vancouver of companies who were exporting Canadian gas for sale across the border to American consumers at less than Canadian prices.

Despite the qualifications that the hon. Minister has made in correcting the situation which he misrepresented by his incomplete brief—in spite of that—the fact still remains, by his own admission, that the cost to the American consumer is 12 per cent. less; instead of the 40 per cent. Even with the correction, it is still 12 per cent. less. This is my point.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: This is on what I am advised, and this board is going to go into this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: It is too bad they did not advise him before he made his brief.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I do not think my hon. friend's rudeness has added very much to the situation originally.

Mr. MacDonald: The second bit of evidence to which I wanted to draw attention is with regard to Union Gas. Let us leave Consumers' and go to Union.

I have here in my hands the report of a natural gas referee in Union's rate hearing held back about the year 1948. I notice that the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) is not in his seat, but I am sure hon. members will remember the circumstances of this because it had particular reference to a situation in the city of Windsor.

Union Gas Company had been arguing that they were not making money, that they should be able to increase their rates. But, in addition, a situation had developed in the city of Windsor where—because as a result of a shortage of gas—many of the industries were actually shut down for a number of weeks.

So Union Gas, with all the other related companies in southwestern Ontario, came before the natural gas referee, pleading for an increase in rates, which was granted on an interim basis, and then subsequently was granted on a permanent basis.

I am not going into the details of the whole rate schedule, which is to be found on page 5 of this manuscript. It points out that the general increase to the consumer was, from a figure of roughly 75 cents to 80 cents, to a figure of about $1.10 to $1.13. In other words, there was an increase of some 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to the consumer.

Another of the reasons advanced by Union, at that time, as to why this rate increase was necessary was because of the shortage created by the emergency situation in Windsor. They would need auxiliary plants with manufactured gas to be able to supplement their systems, once they ran into this kind of shortage. So they were given a rate increase of approximately 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

By the end of the year 1952, however, Union had developed its system. It had increased its production of gas in southwestern Ontario, so it had more gas from Ontario. Whether or not it had actually increased its contracts with American companies I am not certain, but they had developed them to the point where they did not have to continue to use the more expensive manufactured gas, so it was cut off altogether at the end of 1952.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the significant thing is that, having achieved a rate increase of approximately 25 cents as a result of these circumstances of 1948—circumstances which were removed by 1952—Union Gas has continued to enjoy that higher rate right through to the present time.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, as I have done before in this House, that Union Gas, on a basis of an analysis of their financial structure—on the basis of the kind of advantage they have in using the storage areas in Lambton county, buying their gas at an off-peak price—has been charging the consumer at least 25 cents more than is required per 1,000 cubic feet.

The fuel board, during these years, has tolerated this because the government has not stepped in and laid down the rules.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is absolutely untrue.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the members to adjourn the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I move we adjourn the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The second reading will be deferred until the debate is concluded, and I would ask the members for one moment if they would revert to the order of petitions to consider 3 petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions were brought up, laid on the table, and received:

Of the University of Sudbury praying that an Act may pass to extend its powers;

To incorporate Wilmont College;

To incorporate Laurentian University of Sudbury.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, it is intended to proceed with the Throne debate tomorrow, and I would remind the hon. members of the night session tomorrow night.

I move the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the hon. Prime Minister to have a night session on Thursday night?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say yes, and if there is any change in that, I will let the hon. members know.

Mr. Thomas: As long as he gives us a little more time—

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, all right, definitely yes.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE FAIR ACCOMMODATION PRACTICES ACT, 1954

Mr. R. Gibson moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fair Accommodation Practices Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, might I say that at noon today, with my wife, I attended a luncheon given by the mayor and council of the city of Toronto commemorating the 200th anniversary of Canadian Jewry in Canada. Tonight there is another great gathering, and it appeared to me to be fitting that, on this occasion, we might pay tribute in this House to the people of Jewish faith and origin who have increased, over that period of time, from a handful of people to something of the order of 250,000 people in Canada. They are making a very great contribution to our country.

In mentioning this, may I say that we have 3 hon. gentlemen of this House who are of that origin.

The hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), over the years, has been a very great adviser of mine, which no doubt accounts for some of the successes of government.

On the other side we have the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer), who I believe had a relative in this House at one time. Now, I may be wrong about that, but in any event we did have a Mr. Singer, although my recollection is that he was perhaps of wider political faith than is represented by my hon. friend.

Then we have the hon. member for Bracondale (Mr. Gould).

We have had other members of Jewish origin in this House in my time and all of them have made a very honourable and a very significant contribution to the proceedings of this House, and to all of those things which go to make up the traditions of a great House of a great Parliament. I state this because this is a Parliament of the things that go to make up the honourable traditions which have been associated with the government of this province since its beginning.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that some time ago I had the very great pleasure of visiting an old friend of many of us here, Dr. Sigmund Samuel. He is a very distinguished Canadian whose contributions to this province are very great indeed. Dr. Samuel told me of his father coming to this province, in very, very humble circumstances, something over a century ago. At that time, if I can remember rightly, the Jewish population in the whole of Canada probably could be counted in something less than a very few hundred.

Dr. Samuel told me of his feelings for this country, and what he had wanted to do and what he had done for this country in so very many ways. The beginning of Jewish immigration here is associated with some doubt, because no one really knows for sure when the first one of that faith came to Canada. But it is associated by tradition with the year 1759. Over these 200 years very great things have happened.

The first of the Jewish faith—as I say on that tradition—came to this country with the army men of those days, and they were later joined by the tides from the United States. I should not say tides because perhaps they were small in numbers, those people whom we call United Empire Loyalists, and who really laid the foundation for the Canada of today in very many ways.

Perhaps I should say they added to the foundations that were already laid by those of our countrymen in the great province of Quebec, then Lower Canada.

Now, sir, it is a very great pleasure to pay tribute to the Jewish people, to their contribution to Ontario and to Canada, and to say that we are very proud of them and their achievements. At this time, as I say, we pay tribute to them and congratulate them on this anniversary. We wish them every success.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Speaker, may I at this time take this opportunity, on behalf of my fellow citizens throughout this province of Ontario, to thank the hon. Prime Minister for his very fine words.

In keeping with the statement before the orders of the day, if Mr. Speaker will permit, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Toronto Beaches (Mr. Collings), who is chairman of the liquor control board.

On a public newscast presumably from Queen's Park on Saturday last, it was reported that this government is contemplating changing its liquor laws. Will the hon. chairman give some indication whether one of the changes will be removal of the ever-annoying and purposeless $1 liquor purchase permit?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Beaches would like to take this for notice of the question. So, if that is his wish, we can take it as notice, which is the custom.

Mr. W. H. Collings (Beaches): I will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may revert to the tribute paid to those among us who are of the Jewish faith, I would like, on this occasion, to add my support to the words the hon. Prime Minister spoke to this House, and with which we are all in agreement.

The members of this particular faith, I hope, have found in Canada and in this province a home wherein they can pursue their spiritual and material life in a free society, as is the wish and hope of all of us.

I think the hon. Prime Minister made reference to the fact that the first Jewish community in Canada was in the vicinity of Three Rivers, as I recall, and since that time the community has expanded throughout all of Canada in a very commendable fashion.

I think that all of us have, among our friends, those of the Jewish faith whom we hold very dear and whom we respect, and I express the wishes, I am sure, of all the House that we join in this tribute on this particular occasion of the celebration of the 200th anniversary of their entry into Canada and participation in Canadian life.

I hope that they will continue, as I know they will, to play their part in the development of our country and of our province in the free fashion that we all expect of our citizens.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join briefly with the hon. Prime Minister in this tribute on the occasion of the bicentenary of the coming to Canada of the Jewish people. I do so, not only because I think it can be said without any fear of contradiction that among the so-called minority groups that make up the Canadian population, none, certainly for its number, has made a more outstanding contribution to the life of this nation. I do so also because I have the honour to be the MPP in this House for a constituency that is a quarter at least—and conceivably as much as a third—of people of the Jewish faith.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the interesting point, that this commemoration reminds us of, is that the Jewish people were one of the genuine pioneers in this country, for it was 200 years ago that they first came.

During that period they have made an outstanding contribution not only to Canada's cultural and business life, but to every facet. In the party with which I have the pleasure to be associated, we have had, from the outset of our movement, distinguished members of the Jewish faith, notably David Lewis, among the leaders.

I would like to join with the hon. Prime Minister and others in expressing our best wishes to the Jewish people on this occasion.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like—perhaps I am taking something onto myself—but I would like nevertheless to warmly commend the hon. Prime Minister, my own hon. leader, and the hon. member for York South, for the very kind remarks they have addressed to the Jewish community. I had the privilege of listening to the hon. Prime Minister's remarks at lunchtime today. His warmth at the time, and his warmth here in the House, indeed speak well of the dignity in which he holds his position. On behalf of all the members of my religion in the province of Ontario, I would like to thank these 3 hon. gentlemen.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The 33rd report of the liquor control board of Ontario for the 12-month fiscal period ending March 31, 1959.

2. The annual report of the Ontario securities commission for the year ending December 31, 1959.

3. The 53rd annual report of the Ontario municipal board for the year ending December 31, 1958.

4. The 54th annual report of the Ontario municipal board for the year ending December 31, 1959.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a few remarks in connection with the tabling of the report of the Ontario securities commission, which has for some years been issuing a monthly bulletin which gives a fairly full running account of the work of the commission from month to month. The latest bulletin is for December, 1959.

In the report of the committee on the organization of government in Ontario, recently tabled in the Legislature by the hon. Prime Minister, reference is made to reports of boards and commissions. At page 20 particularly, the Ontario securities commission is one of the boards which this report says does not table any annual report. On page 21 it recommends that in the future the report should be made annually and tabled.

I requested the Ontario securities commissioner to let me have a report for the calendar year 1959, and he promptly complied with this, and this is the report tabled today by the hon. Provincial Secretary and referred to by me 8 days ago in this House.

Although this report is not long, it contains a good deal of information and gives in some respects a bird's-eye view of the type and volume of work which is the daily dose of the commission. It stresses certain major prosecutions completed or progressing during 1959, and shows the status of the incomplete ones as of the end of 1959.

The first paragraph might be viewed by some as being critical of the procedures in the criminal case now pending before the supreme court, and it is perhaps refreshing. I have always regarded the commissioner as a man doing his job in an independent manner.

I asked the Deputy Attorney-General (Mr. Common) to give me his views on the comments in the first paragraph of the report. In effect, this is what the Deputy Attorney-General states:

With reference to the first paragraph of the report, where the chairman suggests that the administration of justice might be subject to some criticism for the delay in the Oland case, the Deputy Attorney-General advises me that Samuel J. Oland and one Peter Crosbie, arrested in the state of New York, are charged with offences involving theft and fraud in connection with their association with various companies.

It was thought that the better tactical position for the Crown to follow would be to endeavour to have the trial of Peter Crosbie held before that of Oland.

Crosbie was arrested in the city of Toronto in 1957, and was released on substantial bail. Upon returning to the United States, he was arrested in the state of New York on a number of similar charges and admitted to substantial bail there. His bail on the Ontario charges had been forfeited.

It might be pointed out that Crosbie has not been avoiding extradition. The fact is that, under The Extradition Act, a person cannot be extradited when he is facing a charge in the country from which his extradition is sought.

Where extradition proceedings are involved in a criminal prosecution, and there are attempts to prevent it, delays are inevitable. As considerable time may elapse before Crosbie's extradition is concluded, one way or another, I am informed that the trial of Mr. Oland will be proceeded with within a month.

The comments of the chairman of the Ontario securities commission in this opening paragraph of his report, in the view of my Deputy, demonstrates his close interest in this particular case.

The report shows that a new form of distribution for investment in the nature of periodic savings plans presented some problems, particularly with regard to the percentages of the sales cost deducted during the first year of a 10- or 15-year savings plan. On the initiative of the provincial conference of securities commissioners, held last October in Calgary, discussions took place with a considerably improved end result throughout Canada.

In passing, I might say that the reference in the report is to The Investment Companies Act of 1940, the United States federal Act, a rather extensive Act in force in the United States requiring registration of investment companies and offerings. This Act looks carefully into affiliation of directors, offerings, exchange in securities, change in policy of investment, reserves, annual reports, results of litigation, representations, and so forth.

In effect, it would appear to be a very comprehensive control Act over activities in the field of investment.

Section 41 of The Ontario Securities Act exempts, from the filing provisions with the securities commission, securities of mining, industrial and investment companies listed on a recognized stock exchange. The practice for some years here has been that, once a company has had its prospectus accepted for filing by the Ontario securities commission, and then its securities have been listed on a recognized stock exchange—that is to say, recognized by the commission—any further distribution of shares is governed by the exchange and it is not necessary to further qualify with the securities commission.

The Toronto stock exchange, for example, here in Ontario, requires filing of statements where there have been any material changes by listed companies and, in that sense, is expected to carry on supervision similar to what the commission would carry on, in relation to original issue qualifications.

Late in 1959, the commission—and I refer to page 4 of the report of the commission—issued a directive preventing primary distribution in Ontario of securities of a company listed on a stock exchange outside of Ontario unless that stock exchange had, under the jurisdiction in which it was operating, an exemption from its local securities commission.

The reason for this was that, in a case where the securities of a company, listed on the stock exchange of another province, were underwritten and offered to the public in Ontario by an Ontario broker-dealer and they were actually shares of a company listed on what was then a recognized stock exchange but—and here was the catch—had they been sold through the facilities of that foreign or provincial stock exchange, there would have been a breach of the local provincial securities Act.

And in the particular case, the stock has since been delisted from the foreign exchange. This was one of the reasons for the recent ruling. There were certain international reactions also which made this clause advisable as it appears in the report.

During the year, it appears that 10 appeals to the full commission have been made from decisions, 6 of them allowed. This shows that this 3-man commission is certainly far from a rubber stamp for the commissioner. No appeals were taken to the supreme court of Ontario.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Attorney-General when this annual report will become available to the hon. members in the normal fashion?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is tabled in the House. It has all the privileges and all the rights of a document tabled in the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the question in my mind, Mr. Speaker, is whether it will be printed as are annual reports of most other agencies of the government?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I suppose it will be put into some form of readable material.

Mr. MacDonald: The other question, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the hon. Attorney-General is this:

In view of the concern among people in the business world, as evidenced in that article in Saturday Night that I referred to some time ago, about the operations of our commission and this whole field of stocks and shares, would it be possible for the regular reports—I understood the hon. Minister to say they were monthly—to become available to hon. members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This report can be had for the asking. I would say to the hon. member. All he has to do is ask to have it mailed to him, and I am sure he can have a copy.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Well, Mr. Speaker, further to that question, I have never received one of those reports. Does not the hon. Attorney-General think that the hon. members of the Legislature are entitled to one?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not know if it is a question of being entitled at all. If any hon. member of the Legislature wants to come and ask for it, he can have one.

Mr. Thomas: Well, I think they should have been sent out automatically like other reports.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, might I respectfully inquire as to when we might expect your ruling on the point of order that you took under consideration a week ago today, relating to my request directed to the hon. member for Oshawa for him to explain his bill relating to health insurance? I have been waiting with bated breath to find out what is in that bill.

Mr. Speaker: I shall have the orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I depart a little bit from the programme I outlined yesterday? There are 5 bills here in the name of the hon. Attorney-General, all of which go to committees. Perhaps we might consider them on second reading; if there are any that the hon. members want held over, I would be very glad to do it.

THE SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 29, "An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act."

He said: This bill, as I said in response to a request for information on first reading, simply provides for the repeal of a section of The Summary Convictions Act, the effect of which is to permit the copy of the transcript taken on a summary conviction proceeding to be obtained by anyone who wishes to obtain a copy upon payment of the required fee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 30, "An Act to amend The Wages Act."

He said: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill provides for an ex-parte application by a judgment debtor where he has a garnishee proceeding against him for an order for the payment of the judgment by instalments. So long as the order is not in default, no further garnisheeing of the debtor's wages may be had.

The bill does provide for the creditor to apply, on 48 hours' notice, to vary the order which would be granted ex parte on the debtor's application.

Hon. members of this House will perhaps be surprised to know that there were, in the county of York alone, some 35,000 directives to garnishee. There were that many in the year 1959 and, in other parts of the province and larger centres throughout the province, there would be comparable figures.

As a matter of fact, there were no less than 1,700 applications in a 10-month period to judges in this area for variations or orders in connection with wages. The procedure is so worked out that this can be handled simply, and with a minimum of loss of time, and it is felt that this bill is a forward moving one.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LORD'S DAY (ONTARIO) ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 41, "An Act to amend The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act."

He said: In moving this bill I would say that the federal Lord's Day Act was enacted in its original form before Confederation, and has been on the statute books of Canada since Confederation. It will now be found on the latest revision of the federal statutes—1952 revised statutes, volume 3, chapter 171, page 3709.

It contains the general prohibition that there will be no sales made or work done on the Lord's day, and prohibition as to games and performances and many other prohibitions that were considered matters of concern 100 years or more ago. Acts of necessity and mercy are excepted.

There is a general provision in that Act, section 16, that no action or prosecution for a violation of the Act is to be commenced without the leave of the Attorney-General or the Deputy Attorney-General of the province in which the offence has been committed, nor after 60 days after the commission of the offence.

The penalties are not high, I think they range from $1 to $40 if a conviction takes place.

The Act also contemplated that there would be provincial Lord's day Acts—some were in effect at the time of Confederation—and, in the definition of the provincial Act, it is specifically stated, any provincial Act that may be passed either before or after Confederation.

Now, back in 1950, I think it was, there was an Ontario provincial Act. It had to do with certain sports, and this Act is the next one in sequence. Here we have an Act that deals with music, artistic and cultural in its nature, and I am glad indeed, Mr. Speaker, to rise and to have the honour of introducing this Act to this Legislature at this time or rather, to move second reading as it happens.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few general remarks to the hon. Attorney-General in relation to this bill.

The 1950 Act to which he referred is, as I recall it, the Act whereby, after a local vote has indicated approval, councils can pass certain by-laws. Is it the intention of this Act that the local option privilege be retained or not be required at all?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): This Act is province-wide in effect, as soon as it receives Royal assent.

Mr. Singer: So the local councils have nothing to say about this at all?

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in relation to this Act that the hon. Attorney-General has introduced, it seems to me that in his use—or the use by the framer of the statute—of the words, “an artistic and cultural nature” will impose an exceedingly heavy burden upon the courts to determine, in a definitive way, just what are performances of an artistic and cultural nature.

I would ask the hon. Attorney-General whether that would, for example, include a rock and roll concert? Would it include, for example, a recital by a player of the mouth organ or other musical performances of that nature? How about interpretive dances?

I would think that the hon. Attorney-General would give more service to the courts if he would, in some way, define what are works of an artistic and cultural nature.

I remind him, Mr. Speaker, through you, of the difficulty that the courts have got into over the obscenity provisions in the criminal code. I can see that this section is going to lead to, I would think, a great deal of expensive litigation, and it may well be that various courts throughout the provinces—various magistrates—will have varying ideas on what are works of an artistic and cultural nature.

What might be of an artistic and cultural nature to the hon. Attorney-General will not be so to a magistrate, say, in the riding of the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren), at Sioux Lookout, where they might have an Indian dance, for example, which might be a work of an artistic and cultural nature.

Some hon. members take those remarks to be of a light nature, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am speaking in a most serious vein. I have had occasion, in the last two or three days, to speak on bills presented by the hon. Attorney-General. I can only say—and I say it with the deepest respect—that I wish the people who work for him in his department would exercise just a little more care in the use of the language that they put in these statutes before they ask the hon. members of this House to accept some of the verbiage that they seem to use, and what seems to me to pose outstanding difficulties.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would think that my hon. friend, as a defence counsel, would have some interest in being able to poke holes into sections from time to time when he is attacking them. But I would like to say this, that this bill, of course, will go to the legal bills committee. That will be the time to talk about the language. That will be the time to cross swords with legislative counsel and other people who will take responsibility for the wording, or who will change the wording as hon. members of the Legislature may direct.

But at this time, I think I have said all that is necessary on the principle of the bill, and I will not add anything more or answer any more questions at the moment on that bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I just comment in connection with that point?

The hon. Attorney-General makes a very good and important point regarding the procedures in this House, on second reading. Second reading is the time to discuss the principles of the bill, or the legislation, that is before the House.

Subsequently there is the opportunity, in the period of consideration during committee of the whole House, to ask question in relation to technical and other matters, and matters relating to specific sections.

That opportunity is also given, as the hon. Attorney-General has said, in the discussions which will be possible in the committees of the House—in this case—the legal bills committee.

But I point out this, Mr. Speaker, it is not the time on second reading to ask questions relating to the legislation. Those matters should be reserved.

Now I point out, if that rule is not followed, then it means that the period of second reading actually gets into another committee proceedings, and there is no end or no order in relation to the House.

I think, if we follow the proceedings, we will make better time, and we will give better consideration to these things.

As a matter of fact, if there are points in relation to the principle of this legislation, then the proper time to discuss it is at this time. The questions that would be directed to the hon. Ministers or to the draftsmen, the legal draftsmen or others, should be reserved for the other occasion.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, what I have to say, I think, relates purely to the principle of this bill. I support the principle of the bill; I believe it is a step in the right direction. But I believe also that it does not go far enough.

I personally see no valid reason why concerts of the type described in the bill—and I will not get involved in the argument over the interpretation of the words—but I see no reason why it should be possible to put on concerts of this type and charge a fee for admission only when they are sponsored by non-profit organizations. Sporting events in, for example, the city of Toronto, can be held on a Sunday afternoon by either non-profit or profit-making organizations.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, for myself, that on a nice Sunday afternoon in the summertime, if the Toronto ball team happens to be down at Fleet Street, hon. members will very likely find me down there. I do not see any reason why I should have that privilege when other people who may want to go to a concert—whether or not it is sponsored by a non-profit organization—do not have the same privilege.

I realize there is a somewhat different point involved here, with regard to sporting events. It is necessary that a local vote be held before they can be made legal on Sunday afternoons. Perhaps the same procedure would be appropriate for concerts sponsored by profit-making organizations.

But, as I understand the law as it now stands, it is not even possible to hold such a vote, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it would be desirable to at least provide the possibility that a profit-making organization can sponsor concerts, that is, to allow a municipality to take steps to permit a profit-making organization, as well as a non-profit-making organization, to sponsor concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 42, "An Act to amend The Police Act."

He said: I would say that this bill simply makes it possible for villages and townships and communities under 5,000, if they wish to do so, to apply to have a police commission cover their area, rather than a committee of council or something of that sort. If that is considered advisable by my department, then it can be done. At the present time it is not possible to have a police commission for such a municipality under 5,000 population.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Attorney-General advise us of the reason back of this particular bill? Why was this bill proposed to the Legislature? What are the problems involved?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, it came before my department in the first instance because Crystal Beach was in a position where they could not, by virtue of the law, have a police commission. That particular municipality, of course, was less than 5,000 in wintertime, but it probably goes up to considerably more than that almost every day during the summertime.

In the view of the people there in control—the council—it was considered advisable, in the interest of law enforcement, to have a police commission.

In looking at that, it seemed to my advisers and myself that there was no real reason why that right should not be available to other municipalities of a similar size if they really wanted to have it.

I do not anticipate for a moment that there is going to be any great rush of applications. There are, at present, some 75 police commissions in Ontario, and all cities must have police commissions and, as against that 75, there are some 217 committees of council that deal with police matters and form boards of police villages.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned in the course of this debate last Thursday, I was in the process of discussing the efforts of farmers, through their marketing schemes, and workers, through their trade unions, to achieve more effective collective bargaining. I had covered the farm aspect of the picture indicating how, when the chips are down in rather serious battles between a marketing plan and the industry involved, this government tended to vacillate instead of giving strong support. I had begun to discuss the similar kind of situation that we find on the trade union front.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the whole approach toward labour relations today is characterized by two fundamentally conflicting philosophies.

On the one hand, we have the philosophy that I might dub, for the moment, as the philosophy of the Canadian Manufacturers Association or the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which assume in fact, whether or not they will put this in words, that unions are not a good thing, that unions should be restricted. Therefore, their proposals seek to hamstring the unions that are now in existence, and to place difficulties in the way of those who might be interested in organizing the unorganized.

In contrast to that kind of philosophy, we have others who believe that unions are an integral and necessary part of our free society and that, therefore, the organization of unions should be encouraged.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in as emphatic terms as is possible for me to utter, that the CCF is unalterably opposed to this first approach, and that it is strongly in support of the second.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): The hon. member is not alone in that.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will see, perhaps, before the session is over—when we come to the details that implement these philosophies—where divergencies will arise.

But the point I am making, at the moment, is the general proposition that democracy does not end with putting an "X" on a ballot every 4 or 5 years. In fact, the most meaningful implementation of democracy is the actions of people in organizations, in which they themselves band together, as a means of self-help to cope with the day-to-day problems that they have to deal with.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that, for the wage earner, there is nothing more important in his life than his income, and the working conditions that he has to live under, as he is earning that income for the security of his family.

Unions are the organizations that will safeguard these basic rights, and it is our firm conviction in this party that the responsibility of government is to create the conditions which are conducive and encouraging to people who want to organize unions, and not to create conditions which are going to frustrate them or discourage them.

Now, when we move from what might be described as a philosophic discussion into the practical application of it today, this is where we begin to separate out the sheep from the goats, so to speak.

For example, this government today pays great lip service to trade unions. When we listen to the speeches on Labour Day, and other occasions, we will find that they are unqualifiedly in support of trade unions. Yet the interesting thing is this, Mr. Speaker—and I draw it to the attention of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) for his consideration—that every time there is a circumstance in which this government can deny a group of workers the right to band together into a union of their choice, they will do so. Let us take a look at a few of them.

For example, the acid test—and this is something that I have raised in this House before—the acid test of a government's attitude towards unions, and the right of workers to band together in a union of their choice, is their attitude toward their own employees. This government is not even willing to give the civil servants of this province collective bargaining rights.

They have come in with cap-in-hand, time and time again, and this government stubbornly refuses to concede this to them—to say nothing of the wider right of being able to join a union of their choice in the real sense of the word, instead of the limitations that are placed by the statutes on the civil service association.

Another example is one that we have considered with in this House many, many times, namely, section 78.

This government for years has said to a group of workers—and it is a widening group of workers, civic workers of one kind and another—that while they have, under The Labour Relations Act, certain rights and certain obligations, the government appends, in the final section of the Act, the right of the employers of these people to deny them all these rights. So they give rights with one hand and they take them away with another.

To indicate conclusively the weak approach that the government takes to this issue, we have come to the stage where the hon. Minister will rise in his place in this House, time and time again, and say that he advises municipalities not to implement section 78, not to take away the basic rights of these particular workers—yet the government has refused to remove section 78, though apparently even it is losing some faith in the validity and the justice of section 78.

But let us get up to date, Mr. Speaker, because, during the past year, we have had an even more illuminating case.

Last year the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) introduced a bill called The Crown Agencies Act. Now, the explanation to the House by the hon. Attorney-General at that time was briefly this: that because of a court decision—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I was doing it for the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan).

Mr. MacDonald: For the hon. Provincial Treasurer? Well, if the hon. Attorney-General is correct, I have a point I would like to make in a moment.

But just let me review what happened. The hon. Attorney-General's comment was that a decision of the court had indicated that an emanation of the Crown was not necessarily a Crown agency, and therefore that many Crown agencies in the province of Ontario might be subject to federal taxes. The Crown Agencies Act was passed, clearly designating all these agencies as Crown agencies, so that the possibility of any federal taxing was removed altogether.

This sounded very fine. As a matter of fact, it sounded like one of these "tidying up" bits of legislation—the kind of thing with which any Legislature has to deal every session.

But, Mr. Speaker, consider what has happened in the past year. A group of workers in one of the Crown agencies, namely, the workmen's compensation board, banded together and sought certification before the Ontario labour relations board in the union of their choice.

Then the counsel for the workmen's compensation board came before the Ontario labour relations board and argued: "Oh no, these people are not now eligible to join a union. They are civil servants, in effect, as employees of a Crown agency." So now they are denied the right to join a union of their choice.

This government, which is allegedly so enthusiastic about the rights of workers to join a union, or remain in existing unions, even took the initiative to destroy the collective bargaining agency of workers who had been certified for years in one of these Crown agencies, namely, the operating engineers.

When the operating engineers applied in the normal course of events, as was their right as a certified union, for the conciliation services of The Department of Labour, we discover that The Department of Labour sought a legal opinion from The Department of the Attorney-General. The Department of the Attorney-General gave a legal opinion to the effect that, because of The Crown Agencies Act, these people now are not eligible to come under The Labour Relations Act—

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): That is all true.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course it is true.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. member expect an opinion to be given that was not true?

Mr. MacDonald: Well now, there is an irrelevant kind of question. Just let me go ahead and make my point. Do not draw all these red herrings across the trail.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Let the hon. member be careful of his own red herrings.

Hon. Mr. Daley: He is trying to recoup the loss.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): If he lost a lot of ground, it would take him several years to recover.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, at least the hon. Ministers have wakened up anyway.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I am not sleeping, I heard every word.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister has finally crawled out of the afternoon paper and little confabs, he is with me for a moment. Well, now that he is with me, let him just examine this situation.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, he always has been.

Hon. Mr. Frost: When I get the same vote as the hon. member, that will be the day.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the hon. Attorney-General that, while one obviously will have respect for a legal opinion of the law officers of the Crown in his department, the legal opinion of the law officers has no weight in law at all. It has no more weight in law than my opinion might have, or anybody's opinion—Joe Doakes out on the street.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: May I ask my hon. friend: Is that wrong? If it is wrong, the hon. member can have it righted in the courts.

Mr. MacDonald: It has no effect in law and yet, in spite of that, The Department of Labour moved immediately, without taking the matter to court to discover whether it is now beyond the jurisdiction of the Ontario labour relations board, without even taking the matter back to the Ontario labour relations board, for them to re-examine their decision in light of The Crown Agencies Act.

In other words, The Department of Labour moved immediately to take away the rights of a certified, legal union. Mr. Speaker, the significant point is that this all flowed from an Act that was introduced in the House by the hon. Attorney-General.

Now, the hon. Attorney-General a moment ago said that it was introduced only to satisfy the hon. Provincial Treasurer—or something of that nature.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I thought the hon. member was the watchdog of the rights of labour but he sat there very silently and said nothing.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the point that I want the hon. Attorney-General to consider at the moment—that if this Act was introduced solely for the purpose of meeting some of the needs of the treasury, then the onus was on this government to have brought in an amendment by now, to have excluded labour relations from The Crown Agencies Act. Because this government has not brought in an amendment, to restore the rights under The Labour Relations Act to the employees of these Crown agencies, then the only conclusion one can come to is that the Act passed last year was a sly attempt to deprive these workers of their basic rights.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say to my hon. friend that this matter is all being given consideration at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald: It takes the government an awful long time to give consideration to somebody who is being deprived of his basic rights. This government has had a full year to do it, and the point that I am making is that—in fact, there are two points:

One point is that if this government, and its agencies, really believe that workers are entitled to a union of their choice, why did the workmen's compensation board have to contest this? Why did they have to?

If this government believes that they should have this union, why did the counsel of the workmen's compensation board, quick as a bunny, get in there and say: "Oh no, now we have an Act that was slipped in last year under false pretences, and now we do not have to concede these people the right to organize"?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The way the hon. member is talking, he is advocating lawlessness. He ought to know better than to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not advocating lawlessness.

The fact of the matter is this: That by the action of the hon. Attorney-General last year, he created lawlessness, because in the workmen's compensation board there were unions that have been certified for years, so presumably they are now illegally certified. It was the hon. Attorney-General who created the lawlessness.

In other words, the only difference between the hon. Attorney-General and Joey Smallwood is that at least Joey Smallwood was blatant in his anti-unionism. He brings it in the front door. It is open; it is above board. The hon. Attorney-General sneaks it in the back door. That is exactly what he did last year.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How is the split coming along? Is that party united again?

Mr. MacDonald: It was never disunited.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I have now given you some documentation of the fact that this government is anti-union every time the circumstances will permit it to get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We seem to get all the votes over here. The hon. member's party does not get very many.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister did not even get half of them. In fact, I have some comments I would like to make on the election in a moment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to a couple of points in the field of health. The first one is with regard to the Orillia hospital.

I do not propose, at the moment, to go into the detail of the situation in the older wings of the Orillia hospital, beyond this point: I find it extremely disturbing to watch the evidence growing that the Scrooges of the treasury board over on those front benches are not going to yield. They are not going to provide the necessary appropriations for replacing this building with all possible haste.

Mr. Speaker, this is an absolutely shameful proposition. I can quite understand that, when the government is faced with the problem of deciding the estimates for another year, there is going to be sharp competition for the limited monies, as between one department and another, or within various divisions in a single department. And there is room for legitimate differences of opinion as to what should get top priority.

But, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to this House—and I suggest more pointedly to this government—that, on this issue, there is no room for a difference of opinion. There is no room for argument. In fact, it is intolerable that this government should not be moving without delay to demolish those older wings of the Orillia hospital. I will just interject here for my hon. friend from Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) who may have something to say—I am not talking generally about the institution. There are portions of this institution which are certainly better than many others, though they are all overcrowded and understaffed.

But I am talking now about the physical conditions, and what flows from the physical conditions, in the older wings of this hospital.

I can only believe that hon. members of the treasury board are not personally aware of just how shocking are the conditions in those older wings. However, there is no room even for ignorance on this score now, on the part of the treasury board officials, after the amount of public concern that has been focused on it.

Just picture, Mr. Speaker—and I ask hon. members of this House to consider this—just picture for a moment 60 retarded people —and I use the term for the moment “people,” because while we normally refer to them as children, some of them are older than most of the hon. members of this House—just picture 60 retarded people living on a single floor of one of these buildings with facilities for washing so limited as to be unbelievable.

Just picture 120 people living on two floors in one of these wings with a single bathtub for the whole 120 of them. Why, I sometimes wonder if, in contrast, they are not going to put in a bathtub for each hon. Minister, with some of the renovations that go on in this building at Queen's Park. But at Orillia, there is one bathtub for 120 people.

Just picture lavatory conditions that give off an absolutely indescribable, sickening stench, despite—and I emphasize this too—despite the heroic efforts of the staff to do something about it.

Just picture 90 retarded people sleeping in a single dormitory, more crowded than one of Europe's postwar refugee camps, in fact a veritable sea of beds so close together that a person can hardly walk between them.

Mr. Speaker, if a fire were to break out, particularly at night, in that institution, the result would be a tragedy which would rest on the collective conscience of the hon. Ministers of this cabinet for the rest of their days, and they alone would be to blame.

I just cannot believe, Mr. Speaker—even of a Tory government—that this condition will be permitted to continue another year.

For the moment, I propose to leave this in the hope that my fears are false, and that when the estimates do come down, we are going to find that this government is moving without a further moment of delay to get rid of these older wings of the hospital which are a blot on the fair name of the province of Ontario.

Now, the second point that I wanted to touch upon in the health field is this question of health insurance. Let me begin by a quotation which intrigued me.

Last January 27 the hon. Prime Minister said this:

Hon. members will recall that this matter was considered as something which was first shaky and difficult—

he is talking about hospital insurance——and was to cause all sorts of problems. But, as a matter of fact, it has gone off in a way which has been unbelievably easy, that is from the standpoint of those who have no knowledge of the work that was put into the legislation.

Well, what intrigues me about that statement, Mr. Speaker, is this: Certainly, there were people who made these earth-shaking comments about the problems involved in putting in hospital insurance. There were people who said we did not have enough beds; there were people who said we did not have enough nurses.

There were also people who argued that we already had sufficient coverage by various private schemes, and these people asked why we needed that overall hospital insurance. There were people who dreamed of every conceivable excuse for postponing the implementation of hospital insurance.

And who were those people, Mr. Speaker? The Tories, from start to finish.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the Tories brought it in.

Mr. MacDonald: No party in this country made excuses for a longer period, to postpone hospital insurance, than did the Tories. Now that they have it in force, this viper in their bosom, this bit of socialism, now they have embraced it, they consider it a fine thing. But the significant thing, Mr. Speaker, is this—

An hon. member: Hon. Paul Martin—

Mr. MacDonald: What does the hon. member mean, hon. Paul Martin? Hon. Paul Martin sat up in Ottawa for 15 or 20 years with the possibility of putting in hospital insurance, complete health insurance, and he did nothing about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Hon. Mr. Martin tried to block it.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it my turn again, Mr. Speaker? My turn again? Thank you.

I raise this not only because this government, having postponed the implementation of hospital insurance for as long as it could get away with it, is now advancing precisely the same set of arguments for the postponement of health insurance.

In fact, the hon. Whip of the Tory party (Mr. Cowling), who is one of the most faithful spokesmen of the views of the insurance world, even when the hospital legislation was in the House, was repeating the arguments of the insurance world against it. What has intrigued me is that we no sooner get hospital insurance than, like the barrages in World War I, it has been lifted and is now being laid down a few miles in advance, against health insurance—by him, and all his hon. colleagues, including the hon. Prime Minister.

Now, we, in this group, submit that this is not necessary. With pride, we watch the government of Saskatchewan which, having finally been able to get some co-operation financially from the federal government to share in hospital insurance, is now moving forward to full health insurance.

Saskatchewan has not, Mr. Speaker, the feeble proposition of this government, studying the implications of extending hospital insurance to out-patient coverage, nibbling at the corner of the problem, but it is moving to provide the people with what the people of this province are entitled to, as the people of the province of Saskatchewan will get, and that is full health insurance.

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) perhaps had better watch carefully his comments on Saskatchewan. Two years ago he sounded off about Saskatchewan's educational scheme. The interesting thing is that, back over the wires within 24 hours, came a counterblast saying that he had a perfect score, he was wrong on every count. What was even more interesting about that was that the comment came from the secretary of the teachers' federation in Saskatchewan who, one year later, was one of the aspirants to the leadership of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): The point I made was that there was a tax on education. Does the hon. member deny it? The tax is still on. It is a perfect score, no matter what he says.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): The hon. Minister made an awful blunder there.

Mr. MacDonald: Just give me a little time to look at those figures—which he has not sent over yet—on Saskatchewan gas rates, and we will have another set to prove that, if the hon. Minister is not wrong on every score, it is a poor batting average.

Now, so much for the government's procrastination on health insurance. I am interested now in what is emerging from the Liberal party. Hon. Paul Martin, who was Minister of Health for how many years—they were painfully long years, during which we got nothing—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I think the hon. member must be—Mr. Speaker, no, I am going to force the hon. member to retract that statement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask you to ask the hon. member for York South to retract the statement he has just made.

Mr. MacDonald: For what purpose? On what grounds?

Mr. Wintermeyer: It is absolutely untrue.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh go on, half the things the hon. leader of the Opposition says is untrue.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition just repeat the statement, so that I can identify it?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South has said that hon. Mr. Martin did nothing during all the years that he was in Ottawa, with respect to health insurance.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will qualify and change it. He did something, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I say I do not think, if I may respectfully say so, that this is a matter upon which the chair should rule. But I say this to the hon. leader of the Opposition, this is an opinion expressed by the hon. member for York South, and I would say that all we need to do is to give judicial or legislative notice of the fact that he is almost invariably wrong in his opinions, and let it go that way.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister made his speech last week. It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to see how the Conservatives on both sides of the House get palsy-walsy on some issues.

The hon. Minister of Transport rose the other day and assured the hon. leader of the Opposition that, when he supports something that he is after, that this is 50 per cent. of the battle. Sure, it is 50 per cent. of the battle because this—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): And how much of the proportion did I say that the hon member amounted to? Will he recall that for me?

Mr. MacDonald: It was a poor joke to begin with.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, it was 50.005, now I remember.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And the hon. member is the zero zero five.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to go back to hon. Paul Martin. I was unfair to him, he did do something.

Mr. Reaume: Well, write him a letter.

Mr. MacDonald: In 1945 he, and his colleagues, promised the people of Canada that if they were re-elected, they would implement immediately a full health insurance plan. And what did they do? They welched on their scheme just as soon as they were elected. For 10 years they dribbled out hospital grants as an alternative to doing something, and finally fate caught up with them in 1957, and they were turned out, not having implemented what they had promised.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, for goodness sake, he has done more for Canada than the hon. member ever thought of doing.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. leader of the Opposition, who has become so exercised, referred to this the other day, he made some comment to the effect that there were 3 very private things in life. Namely, a toothbrush, your wife and your doctor.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What is wrong with that?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the implication of it, of course, was if we could not have a full health insurance scheme, of the kind that will be established in the province of Saskatchewan, years ahead of the rest of the country—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Why is everybody leaving Saskatchewan?

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): They do not want him out there either.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when the government in Saskatchewan—which makes promises and then fulfills them—outlined their proposal for full health insurance, hon. Premier Douglas, in a radio broadcast, enunciated the 5 or 6 principles upon which this plan would be built. I would like to read one of them, for the edification of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Grossman: Let us stick to what is in Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: This is what hon. Mr. Douglas says: "The government believes—"

I am just hoping that Ontario will do the same. It is a vain hope, but I am just hoping they will do the same.

Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member represent Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacDonald: I continue:

The government believes that we must retain the principle of free choice of doctors so that the doctor-patient relationship will be maintained to the fullest possible extent. We recognize that no plan will operate successfully unless those who give the service and those receiving it are fully satisfied with it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if I may raise another point, and contrast it for the moment, then perhaps I can move on.

What intrigues me about our Conservatives, who parade under Liberal banners—

Mr. Reaume: Oh, come on, get out of the woods.

Mr. MacDonald: —is that two years ago, when we were discussing the proposition of public ownership for natural gas, they were opposed to it. They got into some difficulties with their own friends in St. Thomas, Kingston and elsewhere, so they resorted to a little gimmick that got themselves off the hook, saying they would help the municipalities that wanted public ownership. But basically, they were opposed to a province-wide publicly owned distribution system for natural gas.

Now gas distribution is a bonanza. It is so much of a bonanza that the competition for the franchises has been intensive in almost every instance. Here is something which offers great profits, and if there are great profits, then these good Conservatives hand it over to private enterprise.

But if the people of the province of Ontario have a desperate need such as, for example, the shortage of water—what do these Conservatives say then? “Oh, we ourselves will have to do something about it because there is no profit in this. You cannot expect the capitalists to come and do a job for us here.”

So the Liberals now call for public ownership of the Ontario water resources commission.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Jealousy will get him nowhere.

Mr. MacDonald: This, Mr. Speaker, is an abuse of public ownership.

Mr. Wintermeyer: This is an abuse of this House. Balderdash, there is not a bit of truth in it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: We will discover, Mr. Speaker, to what extent I am distorting the truth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to move on to another subject, and that is a brief comment on the election we had last June.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, let us hear about that.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister read us a little lecture the other day. He spelled out how many people had been elected to this House by a clear majority and most of them, for example, had been on the Conservative side of the House. That is why he chose that set of figures. I want, just by way of another approach to analyze the results of this election, to submit to the hon. Prime Minister, and to this House, something for their consideration.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about the big pie.

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of the total vote cast in this province for the various parties, each CCF member in this House speaks for 62,000 voters; each Liberal speaks for 31,000 voters; each Tory speaks for 12,000 voters—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The same thing in reverse is true in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister of Energy Resources's mathematics are better than they were yesterday, if he takes the total votes and divides them by the number of people who were elected, he will discover that each CCF'er in this House is backed by twice as many votes as the Liberals and 5 times as many votes as the Tories.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member ever figure the condition in Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacDonald: I am giving this for hon. members' consideration, free and gratis.

Mr. Speaker, I will also give the hon. Prime Minister a little nugget for him to consider—that the CCF vote in the province of Ontario, in the last election, exceeded by more than 100,000 the total vote collected by the 21 hon. members of the cabinet. The total vote collected by the hon. cabinet Ministers was 206,000—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No, no.

Mr. MacDonald: —and the CCF vote was 313,000.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The final point is this, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Prime Minister may be interested. This is an analysis from a different approach. As to whether it is any less valid than his, we will leave others to decide.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There was no majority at all. The hon member was elected by a minority of the votes cast in his riding.

Mr. MacDonald: This government was elected by a minority of the votes cast in this country, in the province.

The final point I want to make here, if the cackling would just subside for a moment, is that the CCF vote in the last election exceeded the votes of 43 of the 71 Conservatives sitting on that side of the House.

Mr. Grossman: That is the other shot in the arm.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words if hon. members will take the 43 Conservatives, starting from the little pocket boroughs—

Mr. Grossman: What does the hon. member mean, pocket boroughs?

Mr. MacDonald: —like Rainy River and Glengarry and the riding of my hon. friend, the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and add up those votes they will find that the votes for 43 of the hon. members must be totalled before they exceed the CCF vote. I submit this as something for the hon. Prime Minister's consideration.

Mr. Grossman: We had better have that election all over again.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: No matter how he twists it, the people have spoken.

Mr. Grossman: Shall we have it all over again?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the other point that the hon. Prime Minister made while reminiscing on the election was to deliver one of his regular lectures to myself.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The hon. member should take his advice, too.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My words would not count for anything with the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: One of his reasons was, Mr. Speaker, that I had been cruel to people by naming them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is absolutely right. He never misses an opportunity.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw something to the attention of the House. I trust they will take it seriously.

After the election was over last June, I was free, for the first time, to go up and sit in on an investigation attracting a great deal of interest in my own township—the township of York. It was on June 15 or June 16, and I arrived just at the point when there was a serious dispute between the rival counsels as to whether or not this whole investigation was not getting beyond its jurisdiction and violating rules of evidence. This was the argument of Mr. Robinette. In reply, Mr. Creighton, counsel for the commission, was presenting his counter-argument.

I was very interested to listen to a judgment which Mr. Creighton quoted to the commissioner, and apparently this judgment was sufficiently convincing that, along with other arguments, the point of issue dissolved immediately and the commission proceeded with its work.

This is a judgment in a case re Huston reported in 52 Ontario Law Reports at page 444. It was a judgment of a court of appeal given by Chief Justice Mulock, Mr. Justice Kelly and Mr. Justice Rose, all of whom concurred in the judgment.

I quote from the judgment of Chief Justice Mulock:

An inquiry under The Public Inquiries Act is not, I think, to be governed by the strict rules of evidence. It is not the trial of an individual but the inquiry into a matter affecting good government, and in such an inquiry as in the case of a coroner's inquest, hearsay evidence may lead to the discovery of matters of great public importance. If it does, the result justifies its admission. If it does not, no public injury has resulted.

Now I suggest that, before he delivers another lecture, the hon. Prime Minister read through that, and ponder it. What I want to submit for his consideration is this—the position that we face, in any legislative opposition, is that when we become convinced, on the basis of limited information, of the existence of bad government, of maladministration, our only course is to get all the evidence we possibly can, and then present it.

We must have the conviction, of course, that, while we have not got the complete evidence, that the case is right. We raise it on the basis of the available evidence, some of which inevitably is hearsay, in accordance with the judgment of Chief Justice Mulock, in the hope that the assistance of the press and others might be enlisted to complete the investigation.

But what normally has happened, of course, is that this government is not willing to complete the investigation. It sits on it, as it sat on many things in the last two or three years.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that that is just the point. I have no objection to points being raised in this House in relation to the government's actions or the actions of individuals. But I object to what I think is grossly unfair in the type of insinuation—

Mr. MacDonald: I have no intention of letting the hon. Prime Minister take my time to deliver a re-run of one of his speeches, to thresh over old straws. I remind the hon. Prime Minister that, when I raised an issue in this House, Mr. Speaker, such as the involvement of a cabinet Minister in a pipe line deal, what was the attitude of this government? Charges of smearing, insinuations, everything else.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right. Where did his candidates land up?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not interested for the moment where my candidates ran. Do not bring in this red herring. Just deal with the facts of the case instead of trying to indulge in this "might makes right" kind of approach. Because the hon. Prime Minister won the election, presumably everything has been cleared away.

We will come to some of these issues in just a moment, in fact I want to deal with them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to my hon. friend that he has—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He is incapable of seeing it any other way. He has a psychopathic failing.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, I think he has.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. Prime Minister going to abuse the rules?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If he can get away with it, he always does.

The first point I want to raise, Mr. Speaker, is the Sarnia land deal.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the hon. member will hear all about that.

Mr. MacDonald: That is fine, I hope we will hear all about it. This is the old line again you see—smear. Just let us deal with some facts.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I sent the hon. member a letter and asked him to ask me anything he wanted to know. He asked me from a public platform, and he did not give one whit whose reputations he smeared in the process.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not smear anybody's reputation. Nobody's reputation is being smeared here. These are the tactics of government once again. When it is touchy and has been caught out, then it immediately begins to accuse everybody of smearing.

Now, just let us take a look at it. What is the background?

Mr. G. Laverne (Russell): Little Lord Fauntleroy.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, there is that grunt from the bog of Eastview again. It is the first time in this session that it has revived. I thought it had died with the election, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laverne: There is not enough man in the hon. member to kill me, and there never will be. There never was, and never will be.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with this in an orderly fashion—

Mr. Laverne: That will be something new.

Mr. MacDonald: The background to this whole deal is simply this: That sometime in the year 1958—conceivably before the year 1958—Hydro started negotiations with regard to purchase of some land from the Indian reserve in Sarnia.

One of the interesting things about the negotiations throughout is that former Chief Williams, who had been head of the tribe at the time of negotiations, has made the statement that Hydro was not serious in its negotiations. It was his opinion that Hydro was not serious in negotiations, because it never offered—and this can be substantiated from the minutes of the meeting of the tribe—more than $2,200 for land, for which it was subsequently willing to spend $7,000.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is absolutely untrue.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting the chief of the tribe who happened to be involved in the negotiations. However, Mr. Speaker, after the band had agreed at one point to sell the land, they revoked their decision and the negotiations—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why does the hon. member not wait for an explanation? The explanation will be talked out in a day or two.

Mr. MacDonald: On Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Thursday.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine. We have had a lot of explanations. But what I want to do is get down to some of the points, instead of a repetition of the explanations we have had.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I say that is—

Mr. MacDonald: The band negotiated with Crown Trust, as an agent for Dimensional Investments, and they sold 3,100 acres of land for $6.5 million. Then, within a matter of weeks—perhaps it was a couple of months—Hydro purchased 180 acres of this for $1.25 million, paying $6,900-plus per acre for land which had been purchased by Dimensional Investments for approximately $2,200, for which Hydro itself had offered $2,200, which had been assessed by the federal Indian branch in Ottawa at approximately $2,200.

Now, there are some questions I would like the hon. Minister to deal with when he comes back to the House and gives the explanation which the hon. Prime Minister has promised. We have threshed through this considerably in the press, in editorials and so on, and I do not think there is any necessity in merely repeating the old explanations to no effect.

These are the questions I would like the hon. Minister to comment on. Why did not Hydro seek from the federal government the right to expropriation?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We did.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister will have a chance later. The hon. Minister says that he did and he has just reiterated it, but hon. Ellen Fairclough says no.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: She did not.

Mr. MacDonald: I have here, for example, an editorial of the Toronto Daily Star, June 5—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have here a statement of hers, in the Toronto Telegram, dated June 6.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I continue? The hon. Minister is going to speak on Thursday. Is it possible for me to make my speech now and for him to make his speech on Thursday?

Mr. Laverne: Is that a speech?

Mr. MacDonald: According to the editorial on June 5 in the Toronto Daily Star, it said:

Mr. Macaulay said federal authorities had been asked if they would permit expropriation but they were “not prepared to give it.” Yet hon. Ellen Fairclough, when asked directly in the Commons yesterday if Ontario had sought the federal government’s permission, replied “No.” Who is right, Mr. Macaulay or Mrs. Fairclough?

Another interesting point, Mr. Speaker, is that in the Toronto Telegram, whose only interest in this was belatedly to write stories to try to substantiate the hon. Minister’s position—because they published nothing on it for the first month or so of the whole discussion of it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Has he not got that wrong?

Mr. MacDonald: No, just listen to the facts now.

In the Toronto Telegram story, of June 5, it says:

In Ottawa, Colonel H. M. Jones, director of Indian affairs for the federal government, said that at no time had he rejected a move by Ontario Hydro to expropriate land in the Sarnia Indian reserve.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is not true.

Mr. MacDonald: He had been asked about permission to expropriate. “I have no authority to reject anything in the way of expropriation proceedings,” he said.

Mr. Laverne: Who said that?

Mr. MacDonald: Colonel H. M. Jones. In other words, here is the woman at the Ministerial level and the man at the administrative level, both saying, despite what the hon. Minister contends, that there was no request on the part of Hydro for expropriation.

Now, I think we would like to hear from the hon. Minister, when he speaks, what is his explanation why these people, in high and responsible positions, should flatly deny it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I will be filing affidavits and someone is going to go to jail if they are contradicted.

Mr. MacDonald: He will be filing affidavits on Thursday. The second question I would like to ask is this: Why did Hydro not expropriate after this land came into the possession of Dimensional?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Because they have no power.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the answer of the hon. Minister is that Hydro did not have the power and, therefore, they could not expropriate from Dimensional because all Dimensional had was options.

But, Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of this House that—under The Public Works Act, under The Power Commission Act—Ontario Hydro has the right to expropriate real property or any “interest” in land—that is a quote from the Act—any “interest” in land. And I am assured by lawyers that “any interest” would include the holding of options.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I will file Mr. Carson’s opinion that the hon. member is wrong. He is the treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada and one of the Commonwealth—

Mr. MacDonald: I thought Mr. Robinette was.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, he was the treasurer of the Law Society.

Mr. MacDonald: That is wrong, and if the hon. Minister would be quiet he would not reveal his ignorance.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: An outstanding lawyer.

Mr. MacDonald: The other point I would like to draw to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, is that when I first raised this issue, in a speech in Peterborough, on May 4, the Toronto Globe and Mail got in touch with some of the directors of Dimensional—the company involved—and this is what was said by one of them—Mr. Sam Rae.

He said they bought the land last summer and real estate agents approached them about two months ago to buy what became the Hydro parcel.

We were not approached directly by Hydro.

Now there is a question I would like to throw in here, Mr. Speaker.

When the hon. Minister is speaking, I wonder if he might inform the House what Tory real estate group had this intermediate job to do in collecting the land for Hydro. I assume that what the director has said is correct.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Everybody is wrong except the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, if there is going to be a lengthy statement made on this, why does the hon. member not wait until it is made? Everything he is saying is supposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Everybody is wrong. Everybody is out of step except our little Johnny.

Mr. Rae is further quoted as saying this:

I would be much happier if Hydro didn’t force us to close this sale. We actually stand to lose much more because of it, but Hydro has the right to expropriate this land.

Now, the thing that really intrigues me, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister perchance is right, is a how man who is director and promoter of this company would be living under the illusion that Hydro has the right to expropriate. Obviously, I think, there is another discrepancy that perhaps the hon. Minister would attempt to clear up when he speaks.

The hon. Minister also explains that the reason why this land cost $6,900 or $7,000 was that it was prime land, it was the best land in the whole area. By purchasing these 180 acres, they had cut up the rest of the property so that it became marginal, much less valuable land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I happen to have here a weighty tome that I invite any hon. member who is interested to read through. This happens to be the sessional papers covering this whole deal at the federal end, and I have read through them.

After having gone through them with a fine-tooth comb I found, Mr. Speaker, that the report of Ron Haggart, of the Star, was correct in every detail, so far as I could find out.

I would just like to read 3 paragraphs from his report that were carried in the Star on June 4.

There are 4 major discrepancies uncovered by the Star's inquiry, and I am quoting the first two of them.

The investigation uncovered for the first time the actual price which the company, Dimensional Investments Limited, was obligated to pay the Indian band for the precise land which it then sold to Ontario Hydro. In one case this price was $1,900 an acre. With another parcel it was $2,100 an acre. With a third parcel it was $2,300 an acre. Ontario Hydro then paid Dimensional Investments $7,000 an acre for this same land.

Now, the second point.

Several parcels of industrial land adjacent or near the Indian land had changed hands on the open market in recent years establishing a rough gauge of values. One parcel just across LaSalle Street from the Hydro land was sold, in March, 1958 to a private buyer for $300 an acre. The highest price recorded for land sales in the neighbourhood of the Hydro land in recent years was $2,750 an acre, and this was for valuable riverfront industrial land. In comparison, Ontario Hydro paid an average of $7,000 an acre to Dimensional Investments for land which did not touch the river.

And then, later on in this story, Mr. Haggart concludes as follows:

Land east of Tashmoo Avenue, for example, could be taken over by Dimensional for less than $900 an acre. By far the greater part of the land acquired by Hydro lies in this area east of Tashmoo Avenue and thus could have been acquired by Dimensional Investments for less than $1,900 in April.

It was resold to Ontario Hydro for an average of $7,000 an acre.

The Star's investigation revealed that, in fact, the greatest portion of the land Dimensional Investments resold to Hydro was land which the company was entitled to acquire for less than the average price paid for the entire 3,100 acres.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to know whether my hon.

friend is vouching for the information or, when I prove it to be wrong on Thursday, is he going to hide behind it—that it was written by somebody else?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, all I can say, after a study of this tangled issue in the sessional papers, is that I have no reason to believe that what Mr. Haggart published was incorrect.

Now, the final point I would like to raise for the hon. Minister's consideration, when he speaks in this House, is this. I understand that Hydro is set up with a transmission department, with a stations department, with a properties department. If the transmission department or the stations department—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is wrong to start with.

Mr. MacDonald: —wants property—everything is wrong except—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, that is quite wrong. Why say it is right, if it is wrong?

Mr. MacDonald: It is not wrong.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, it is wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I can assure the hon. Minister that it comes from people who are just as familiar as the hon. Minister, and conceivably a bit more than he, with regard to the set-up of Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Who? Name them.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to name them.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, the hon member never does.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, Mr. Speaker, here is another problem: if I do not name them I get belaboured, if I do name them, I am smearing. This government—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, point of order, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Actually, I think it is a point of privilege.

I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw his charge that I am not telling the truth. I say there is no transmission department.

Mr. MacDonald: Please sit down. This is the feeblest kind of interjection.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, is it not the same thing?

Mr. MacDonald: However, the point, Mr. Speaker, that I draw to the attention of the House is this: That when it got to the stage where the properties department was going to buy this land for $7,000 an acre, word got back to the transmission department. Upon hearing of it, they communicated with the properties department asking for a chance to review their property requirements, to cut them down, if possible.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a point of some significance because hon. members will recall that, originally, Hydro was seeking about 30 acres of land—and they ultimately bought about 180—so conceivably there was some possibility of cutting the acreage.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: He is absolutely wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: They communicated with the properties department and expressed their alarm at the estimated cost. My information is that the deal with Dimensional was concluded without further reference to the transmission department, in spite of this communication, and no discussion was held with the transmission department concerning the cutting down of the size of the right-of-way—suggesting, once again, that somebody was awfully anxious to conclude this deal.

Now, I do not expect ever to get an answer from this government on it. But I have one final question before I leave the Sarnia land deal. When this kind of a deal takes place on the eve of an election, what the people of this province are entitled to know is how much did the election chest of the Tory party benefit from this juicy deal?

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Not one nickel.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, I would like to turn to the Niagara parks commission.

The hon. Minister (Mr. Daley) yesterday rose and spoke about one aspect of this. The hon. Prime Minister has said, once again, that we will get the full story and we shall look forward to it.

But, once again, when we get the full story, I hope we will not have the kind of rehash of the government's official reaction as expressed publicly to the raising of this issue on two or three earlier occasions. I say this because I think we must get down to some of the basic points, and I want to deal with just 3 or 4 of these.

The first one is with regard to the so-called Daley farm. Now, Mr. Speaker, the land policy of the Niagara parks commission was set forth explicitly in its 1949 annual report. It reads as follows:

The general policy of the commission is not to sell any park property. Proposals come to the commission from time to time to purchase odd parcels of land owned by the commission, but the commission's attitude is that these properties were acquired originally for park purposes, that they are park areas and add to the spaciousness of the park system which, from the park standpoint, is sufficient justification for their retention.

Now, I understand—and if I am wrong I would like the hon. Minister to give us a list of examples—that only on very rare occasions has this policy ever been violated.

On one occasion, for example, they had what was so-called surplus land—a little pocket of land in connection with the Inter-colonial Railway. That property came to the parks commission, a portion of it was surplus and they disposed of it.

But I submit that, even if there are a few other instances of surplus land that was disposed of, the one really major violation of this basic rule, this basic policy of the government, was the disposal of this 50-odd acres of land—and I am not going to get into an argument over the exact acreage because—

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is not the policy of the government at all, it is the policy of the commission.

Mr. MacDonald: —to Mr. Schmon, who was the head of the Ontario Paper Company.

Now, the interesting thing is that, when I first made a statement on this back in December, a Mr. Schmon commented on it, as quoted in the Star on December 22. This is what he said:

The reason for the sale to Mr. Daley, he said, was that he decided not to have a farm. He put the land in the hands of a realtor who got two offers. Mr. Schmon said Mr. Daley's was more advantageous and he accepted it.

Now, the interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that he put it into the hands of a real estate operator. This is true—but the real estate operator happened to be another commissioner of the Niagara parks commission, William B. Rollason, who was a member of the Niagara parks commission until his death about a year ago.

If hon. members care to go and look at the record—the deed in the Lincoln county registry office—they will find a pencilled notation asking that a copy of this deed, and the charges, be sent to Mr. Rollason.

So, Mr. Speaker, before going any further into this deal, this is what I submit to the hon. Prime Minister for his serious consideration.

In the first instance, it was a major violation of the land policy of the Niagara parks commission. Secondly, that the purchaser of it, in the first instance, happened to be a good friend of most of the members of the Niagara parks commission, including the chairman. That two years later, by mere chance, he puts it in the hands of a real estate agent to dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Three years to be accurate.

Mr. MacDonald: He puts it into the hands of the real estate agent and, by mere chance, this happens to be another commissioner of the Niagara parks commission. The man who makes the best offer, by mere chance, happens to be the chairman of the commission and he buys the property.

Mr. Lavergne: The hon. member should come down to earth.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, the price was $200 to $300. It is not the value that is important. Whether land at that stage in this prime area with prices booming was bringing an adequate return at $200 to $300, I do not know. But, whether this was a fair one is not the really important question. The important point is that the hon. Minister at least was highly indiscreet.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I would not admit that for a second.

Mr. MacDonald: I know the hon. Minister would not.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I do not know how long we have to listen to this character assassin over here digging up dirt.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would remind this House, as I had to a couple of years ago, that we are dealing with a fundamental principle here, a fundamental principle in the administration of public life. That principle was enunciated by hon. George Drew when he was criticizing hon. Mr. McCann in Ottawa because he happened to be the director of some companies that came under the jurisdiction of the department of which he was Minister.

The principle is this—and I do not expect, after the years of experience I have had with the hon. Minister, that he will be able to see it, let alone accept it—that there must not even be the appearance of conflict, let alone the reality of conflict, between the private and the public business of a person who is holding a public office. And, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we will ever get this principle accepted by this House.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Not as long as the hon. member is promoting it, that is for sure.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, somebody else will promote it after I have finished, then.

Mr. Cowling: That is fine, that is fine.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let the hon. member, who is interjecting, face the fact that, if the principle is a valid principle, let him live up to this principle, no matter who is promoting it.

This foot-loose and fancy-free attitude is wrong, that a man who holds a public office can come so close to—but maybe it cannot be proved—the mixing of his private and his public business. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that at least the hon. Minister was highly indiscreet. At worst, he was violating a basic law of public administration.

If the hon. Prime Minister does not see this, then it is about time the people of the province of Ontario faced up to this, because we are heading for some serious trouble. It is going to go from bad to worse.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what the hon. member said a year ago, and the year before that, and just look where he is.

Mr. MacDonald: That is all right, Mr. Speaker, I will tell the hon. Prime Minister this: I will be saying it a year from now, if he does not change his policy. I will be saying it two years from now and he can squirm in his seat all he wants. But until he lives up to these basic principles, and quits being hypocritical about them in the presentation to the public, I will continue to reiterate.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, God.

Mr. MacDonald: Not "Oh, God," Mr. Speaker, though that might be a prayer that should be uttered over there.

Now, the second point that I would like to raise, Mr. Speaker, is with regard to tenders.

An hon. member: The third point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member cannot count. The first one was the Daley farm. The second one is with regard to tenders.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Brodrick farm, if he pleases.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it is now the Daley farm, and has been for the last 15 years. Let us get up to date. Well, 12 or 13 years.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Twelve years, to be accurate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on this matter of tenders, just let me quote two brief paragraphs from my public statement when we initiated the discussion of this back on January 22.

On the matter of awarding contracts without competitive public tender, following are examples:

Minutes of the commission meeting for August 9, 1957, indicate that a roofing job was proceeded with on the recommendation of the general manager, Maxim T. Gray, on the basis of a quotation from Newman Brothers for $25,882. No public tender was called.

The report and the accounts of the commission dated January 4, 1957, list $81,067.09 spent for resurfacing roads. A later report to the commissioner is dated January 8, 1958, in which $78,422.57 was for further resurfacing of roadways.

My information is that in neither of these cases were tenders considered by the commission itself.

Now, the interesting thing here, Mr. Speaker, is that when I made that statement, and the hon. Minister commented on it publicly, this is what he said—if hon. members of this House can believe it. The Minister said this—quoting from the Toronto Star of December 22:

He summarized works commission policy in this way:

If a job was cheaper by calling tenders, tenders would be called. If cheaper without tenders due to the complexity of some Niagara parks commission projects, the firms considered best capable would be called. We tender for most things.

Now, the thing I would like explained, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. Minister or anybody else—because he is going to need some help on this one—is how is he going to know the job is cheaper if he does not call for tenders? Since when is a tender system something that can be turned off and on like a light?

And what are the motives for turning it off and on? Who is the hon. Minister giving it to when he turns it off? And who is he giving it to when he turns it on? This is the most novel operation of a tender system that I ever heard.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The hon. member would be better back teaching school.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I do not know where the hon. Minister would be better back. I have not figured that one out yet.

Mr. Lavergne: The hon. member had better come down to Cumberland.

Mr. MacDonald: I might. Now, let me go to a third point. On the question of patronage—point 3, for the benefit of the hon. member for Russell—I am quoting again from my original public statement on this:

The commission does business with firms in which commissioners have a private interest. For example, abstracts of expenditures indicate that, in the months of July and September, 1958, and October and December, 1957, a total of $11,542.96 was paid to Niagara Trading Limited for "supplies".

Records of The Provincial Secretary's Department indicate F. M. Cairns was director and president of this company, from its incorporation in 1951 until 1955. Mr. Cairns has been vice-chairman of the Niagara parks commission since 1945.

Although Mr. Cairns' name does not appear in connection with the company since 1955, statements filed with The Provincial Secretary's Department give the company status, as of March 31, 1959, listing J. D. Cairns and W. F. Cairns as directors. J. D. Cairns is also listed as secretary-treasurer. Both of them are sons of commission vice-chairman F. M. Cairns.

Now, the interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that when this statement was made, once again the papers got in touch with Mr. Cairns, who made this comment. Again I ask the House to contemplate this:

Asked for comment, F. M. Cairns said, "I might have been connected with Niagara Trading when it did business with the commission. What's wrong with that?"

Well, what is wrong with that?

Mr. Reaume: Well, answer it.

Mr. MacDonald: Simply this, Mr. Speaker, that it is a violation of both the law, and the time-honoured tradition, that a man who is holding an elected or appointed office does not use public money to do business with himself. It is a basic principle.

Are we ever going to get this principle resurrected and enshrined again by this government, and live up to it? I do not know.

Now, I go to point 4, and that has to do with my description of some of the facilities of the Niagara parks commission as a private club, as far as the commissioners are concerned, and I quote what I said in my public statement of January 22.

Mr. Lavergne: What year?

Mr. MacDonald: This year. I would not expect the hon. member to be able to recall a full year ago.

Mr. Lavergne: No, no, but just to keep the record straight.

Mr. MacDonald: I am quoting from my statement:

The refectory overlooking Niagara Falls is ostensibly available to entertain distinguished visitors, but along with other commission facilities, it has, in fact, become a private club for commissioners. These privileges include free rooms in the posh refectory, free meals, use of the lounge and poolroom in the same building, and an 18-hole golf course.

At any time commissioners can take in their friends and families to the luxurious refectory quarters, treat them to drinks from the well-stocked liquor cabinets in each set of rooms, or take them down to free meals in the restaurant below. These benefits extend to the delivery of flowers from commission gardens to the homes of commissioners.

Mr. Lavergne: Who said that?

Mr. MacDonald: I said it, and I am repeating it here.

In connection with this, Mr. Speaker, there is another phase of the Niagara parks commission operations, not on the financial side, that I suggest we should look into before whatever be the appropriate committee, and that is the so-called police force of the Niagara parks commission.

One of its functions is to provide a 24-hour taxi service for the higher-ups of the commission. This is one of the responsibilities of the police force. There are some people who contend that the chief functions of the police force beyond that is, in the name of protecting the good name of the commission, to keep crime hidden rather than dig it out.

I think the whole operations of the police force of the Niagara parks commission should be reviewed.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The hon. member is scraping pretty low now.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, as a matter of fact, the commission scraped low enough, because, when some people disagreed with the commissioners and raised points like these, they were fired. Indeed the chairman fired one of the commissioners just a few months ago because he chose to challenge the propriety of some of the things that were being done.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to sum up my review of the Niagara parks commission in this way: Should these fundamental principles, on which the standard of our public life are built, be upheld? This is the point. Should they be upheld? And if the provincial government displays an unwillingness, to the point of an incapacity, of seeing these principles, or the danger of their violation, then who is to blame, if by setting this kind of example, we have not only more Bellevilles, yes, even more York townships?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: That was rather a meek protest for a change.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, everybody is so sick at the stomach.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The hon. member for York South did not say anything.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I said something.

However, Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing about this problem is that it is an old, old story, and it does not get any better the older it gets. I have here, Mr. Speaker, a comment in the December issue of the Canadian Commentator. I shall take refuge in the comments of one of the distinguished journalists of this country with regard to another episode since the last sitting of this Legislature—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Is that—

Mr. MacDonald: No, this happens to be Mr. J. A. Stephenson, in an article under the title of "Political Personalities".

Let me read what Mr. Stephenson has to say. It is in keeping with the facts I am trying to outline for the consideration of the House this afternoon.

The hon. A. Kelso Roberts, QC, Attorney-General of Ontario, is a native of Belleville, Ontario, but his recent deplorable performance in taking the American Admiral Stephen Decatur as his model, and adopting as his creed, "My Belleville, right or wrong" does not do credit either to himself or his high office.

His sentimental affection for his native city does not excuse his incredible folly when, to his intimation that no criminal charges would be laid against the civic authorities of Belleville on account of the scandalous misappropriation of the city's funds in order to finance the spuriously amateur hockey team, he appended the astonishing announcement that, "Long after this is all forgotten the people of Belleville will remember that they won a world hockey championship."

Now, it is crystal clear that the Belleville MacFarlanes won the ice hockey amateur championship of the world under false pretences. The team was composed of surreptitious professionals who were paid regularly with funds extracted from the city's treasury by their manager, Mr. Denyes, and their pose as amateurs was a gross deceit of their opponents and the Canadian public.

Mr. Roberts would have earned a general commendation if he advised the managers of the Belleville team to make some reparation of the damage made by it, and its backers, to the good name of Canada in the field of international sports by renouncing, with appropriate apologies, the trophy won under false colours—

Mr. Lewis: Oh heavens, how low can the hon. member get?

Mr. MacDonald: This aspect of it I am not particularly interested in, but it is the final point, with reference to the comment of the hon. Attorney-General:

Instead, the Attorney-General, who ought to be a vigilant custodian of decent standards of conduct, elected through misguided standards of conduct of sentimentality to use the authority of his high office for an implied condonation of a lamentable violation of them.

There is the comment of somebody who is not in this Legislature. I submit that it is—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We should have a custodian of decency around here, too.

Mr. MacDonald: I agree with the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What does the hon. member want to do, crucify the fellow down there in Belleville?

Mr. MacDonald: A year or so ago, Mr. Speaker, if I may continue—

The hon. Minister who wanted a custodian of decency has indicated where it should start.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Right with the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to recall—just to show hon. members how old this story is—that, after that shocking development of a year or so ago involving the resignation of Colonel Griesinger, the hon. Attorney-General went down a day or so later to a meeting in Windsor.

Mr. Reaume: Oh my, that is old stuff.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, it is old stuff, I said it was an old story.

The hon. Attorney-General is quoted in the Globe and Mail of May 9, 1958, as saying this:

Of Colonel Griesinger's action, Mr. Roberts said, to use a phrase, "he came clean." He informed everybody that he had bought 605 shares in Northern Ontario Natural Gas in November, 1956——and so forth.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Is this an attack on the hon. Attorney-General personally?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, what I read is a strange perversion of the facts. Anybody who studies them objectively can come to no other conclusion but that he did not come clean, he was caught by the newspaper revelations of it.

However, Mr. Speaker, I come to the comment of the hon. Attorney-General, so much in keeping with what I have been talking about.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where is the hon. member's candidate from down there?

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind where my candidate is. Just deal with the issue I am presenting for the hon. Prime Minister's consideration. He has evaded it long enough. Now, let us just deal with it. He drew the mantle of his respectability over it. Now, let us just lift the mantle, and take a look at it for a moment.

This is what the hon. Attorney-General said down in Windsor:

Let us not be content that a man who has taken 605 shares, a pittance in relation to the whole transaction, should have to pay the price he is paying.

Whether Colonel Griesinger had one share, or 605 shares, is not the point. He had 605 shares, and he conceded it. But here we have the hon. Attorney-General, a Minister of this Crown who cannot even see the principle involved, let alone going out and deliberately trying to blur it.

Mr. Grossman: This was fought out in the election.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it was not fought out in the election.

The hon. member reminds me, for the moment, of Durelle. He thought he had won the fight when he knocked Archie Moore down in the second round, but take a look at the final results.

Mr. Grossman: Does he mean we did not win that fight?

Mr. MacDonald: I want to turn finally, Mr. Speaker, to two items of unfinished business from the election. The hon. Prime Minister went taunting across this province and said that some people like to get up and make charges at election time, but that they are afraid to come into the House and repeat them. When he makes that charge against the Liberals I will leave them to defend themselves.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The first one I want to raise is this: This government has played politics with the liquor issue for years—in many ways. One of them—I would concede it is not the most important, but it is significant nevertheless—is the way this government, and particularly the hon. Prime Minister, has played politics with the issue of whether or not liquor is served at government functions.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is not purchased at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Just wait a minute now. Wait a minute. Every session that I have been in this House, entirely unprovoked—as though there was an inner compulsion—the hon. Prime Minister must somehow rise and repeat this again. The hon. Prime Minister has—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is the one who talks about it.

Mr. MacDonald: —risen in the House to state that liquor is not served at government functions. Mr. Speaker, let me make this very clear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The government buys no liquor.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Prime Minister going to make his speech in the middle of mine? All right. I am not objecting to the government serving liquor.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, would the hon. member not love to have it? Would he not? Would it not be a wonderful thing for him?

Mr. MacDonald: I repeat, I am not objecting, because, whatever may be any of our personal views on this position, this is part of the mores, not only of the North American continent, but of the world. So this is not the point of my objection.

What I am objecting to is the hon. Prime Minister getting up to play politics with this issue—trying to curry favour with the “dry” vote. For some reason or other we, in the Opposition, are supposed to sit quietly and go along with the game.

The hypocrisy is what I am objecting to. But, Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy does not end there. It was duplicated out on the hustings, because when I got sick and tired of the hon. Prime Minister's repeated claim, and raised it out on the hustings, of course, the hon. Prime Minister came back to it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not get excited, the hon. Liberal members are on my side and not the hon. Prime Minister's, I trust. Let them not get into the Tory bed so readily. Their haste is indecent.

Mr. Speaker, I have a story here from the Toronto Telegram on May 19, bylined David Carmichael, and datelined from Hanover, which reads as follows:

Not a single dollar has been spent on liquor by the Ontario government since he became Premier in 1949, Premier Frost said today. “As far as I am aware, not a dollar in liquor expenditure appears in the public accounts of Ontario,” Mr. Frost said.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is quite right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, here is a speciousness of the highest order.

It is the hon. Prime Minister's privilege, presumably, to tell little lies so that the people of Ontario will not know the facts.

For his political purposes it is all right to tell little lies.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is not there.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course, we do not find a specified number of dollars for so many cases of Crown Royal in the public accounts. But, of course, it is there, and the hon. Prime Minister knows it is there, in some other estimate. I hope, if the hon. Prime Minister has not learned anything else, that he will cut out this hypocrisy and if he does, I will not raise the issue again.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What is that Crown Royal?

Mr. MacDonald: But I will tell hon. members this, if the hon. Prime Minister gets up and repeats his little fib again, I will raise it again.

Mr. Lavergne: Oh, sit down. The hon. member won the championship.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most shocking aspect of the campaign that we went through last June was that the hon. Prime Minister went into the ridings of the former cabinet Ministers, who had been compelled to resign because of gas stock profiteering, and vigorously called for their re-election.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Certainly.

Mr. MacDonald: There are times when the upholding of the basic principles of public life, I suggest for the consideration of this House, supersede friendships. Since these men had defied his instructions not to hold stock in any gas company, and had thereby knowingly violated this fundamental principle of public life, even after he had reminded them of it, the least the hon. Prime Minister could have done is to have avoided campaigning in those ridings, and thereby have avoided the appearance of condoning the violation of that basic principle.

Mr. Lavergne: Who wrote that?

Mr. MacDonald: Everything I say was "wrote."

Mr. Lavergne: Wrote?

Mr. MacDonald: Was "wrote" by myself, if I may put it in language the hon. member will likely understand.

By his action, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister blurred the principle which he himself had sought to uphold, when he accepted the resignation of these Ministers, and by so doing he himself, unwittingly or otherwise, contributed to the lowering of the standards of public life in this province.

The irony of it is that the voters of these two ridings had a higher sense of public morality than the hon. Prime Minister and they did not heed his advice.

Mr. Grossman: Well, now the hon. member is saying the public knew what they were doing.

Mr. MacDonald: If those principles are treated, Mr. Speaker—and I am extremely serious on this. If hon. members think I am here just trying to smear, as the hon. Prime Minister likes to dismiss it, let them quit kidding themselves on it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where did the hon. member's candidate run?

Mr. MacDonald: Never mind where my candidates ran. That is not the issue we are dealing with at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What did the people of Ontario say?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, we lost with honour and that is more than can be said of the hon. Prime Minister's candidates.

Mr. Grossman: He is reading his speech.

Mr. MacDonald: If these principles, Mr. Speaker, are treated with such cavalier indifference by the provincial government, how can we expect to halt the kind of loose practices which have been revealed by investigations in certain municipalities? This is a point which we shall ignore at our peril—we, who are the guardians of the standard of public life in this province. Having added to this cavalier indifference, let us consider now that fantastic diatribe delivered by the hon. Prime Minister in his May 27 election speech in Galt.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where did the hon. member's candidate run in Galt?

Mr. MacDonald: That is a broken record.

It should be remembered that what the hon. Prime Minister said in this speech was not the product of a spontaneous outburst of anger and indignation, like that name-calling and unparliamentary episode that we had last March 18. Not like that. It was a coldly, calculated, carefully prepared speech. In fact it was so calculated that the original plans, to deliver the speech in the evening in Brantford, were changed and it was delivered in Galt in the afternoon in order to accommodate the Globe and Mail, which wanted to carry the story in its first edition, accompanied by editorial support.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It was a cold, calculated statement, and it was true, too. I will get it if the hon. member would like to read it again. It is a real good one.

Mr. MacDonald: What did the hon. Prime Minister say in Galt?

Here is one example, quoted from the Toronto Telegram, on May 28:

He said the CCF leader's statements were calculated to destroy the confidence of the people of Ontario in the political life of the province and its standards and honour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is the old trick of accusing me of precisely what he and his party were guilty of, for it was his own cabinet Ministers who dragged down the standards of public life and, by campaigning for these men, the hon. Prime Minister made a bad situation worse.

The Telegram's news account goes on:

The Premier said he regretted that such things were said, not because they were calculated to hurt him, but because they were injurious to public life and standards which we have held high in this country and in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in light of all the facts, what a brazen claim that this government had held high the standards of public life. Where are the facts? Government spokesmen, from the hon. Prime Minister down, denied the existence of cabinet involvement in stock profiteering when I first raised this. True, the hon. Prime Minister, for a time, did appear determined to restore these standards when the government launched its investigation, but then he ended up by condoning the whole business in his vigorous call for the re-election of the guilty men.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was wrong when I said 41—

Mr. MacDonald: The matter did not end there.

The Star's report on the same speech, in part, reads as follows and this, Mr. Speaker, if I may lapse into the vernacular, is a "lulu."

It is datelined Galt, May 28:

Premier Frost said here yesterday that there never was a 1954 highway scandal. He suggested scandal charges had simply been a ruse employed by CCF leader MacDonald to undermine public confidence in him and his party.

Well, what a perversion of history. That is a re-writing of history to suit party purposes that would be worthy of Moscow.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that was written by the Star. I did not write that. The hon. member for York South had better read what I did say. I will give it to him.

Mr. MacDonald: What happened in the highway scandal? A few of the minor departmental officials involved took the rap, with convictions and jail sentences. Some of the corporations involved were fined a few tens of thousands of dollars, which they undoubtedly wrote off in business expenses.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is the hon. member still reading from the Star?

Mr. MacDonald: No, this is my own.

But most important of all, the investigations in the court cases were never completed because the key witness, the former chief engineer for The Department of Highways died, so that the people of Ontario never did get the full truth.

Mr. Thomas: Dead men tell no tales. Dead men tell no tales.

Mr. MacDonald: And when the hon. Prime Minister claimed at Galt that, after the election, the Opposition wanted to forget the whole thing and would not raise it in the House, well, here is just proof that, in one instance, it is going to be raised in the House.

This is typical of the sort of idle braggadocio that we hear usually from the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. "Go repeat it outside of the House," he usually demands, and then when it is repeated, nothing happens, of course.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We will go into that later.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, so much for the highway scandal. Because the Tories won the election in 1955, there was no highway scandal. Withholding the full evidence from the public, so that they are not fully in a position to judge, is justified to serve the purposes of the Tory party.

On the basis of that pattern, sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, we are going to be hearing from the government that there was no gas scandal either. In fact, I suggest that if the two Ministers had not been defeated, we would have been told now that there was no gas scandal, which brings me to the final item of unfinished business.

Four days after the election, on June 15, the Toronto Telegram carried a lead editorial on the gas scandal.

Here are some quotations from the Telegram's observations:

THE CASE IS NOT YET CLOSED

The outcome of last week's Ontario election showed signs that the Northern Ontario Natural Gas scandal was a considerable factor in the minds of the voters. This is the Tory Telegram speaking.

CCF leader MacDonald, who campaigned noisily about Natural Gas and government morality, reached a greater vote in York South, and acquired two more CCF companions in the House—

Hon. Mr. Frost: If I had had more time there would have been different results.

Mr. MacDonald: I continue with the editorial:

Two cabinet Ministers, who resigned a year ago because of their involvement in profitable NONG stock transactions, were rejected by the voters. Both men have given distinguished service to the province, and Premier Frost regarded them as "two fine fellows in my books—I regret their loss."

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: He confirms it again. I continue:

However, the voters apparently were not yet willing to overlook their indiscretion in natural gas.

The editorial went on to argue that the answer lies in the publicly owned gas distribution system along the lines of the highly successful hydro commission.

So much for these very interesting, and I suggest pertinent, comments of the Telegram.

But I repeat what I said in the election campaign, that, with the gas scandal in 1959—as with the highway scandal in 1955—this government deliberately withheld the full story from the people by refusing to complete the investigation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of reviewing today what I dealt with in detail last March 18, in discussing the report of the government investigation. But there is one aspect of it which is a serious item of unfinished business.

When the investigation was launched in May, 1958, the hon. Attorney-General vigorously asserted that it would be full and complete.

In the Globe and Mail on May 8, for example, here is what he said under a front-page caption:

SPARE NONE IN GAS DEAL, IS PROMISE

A thorough and complete investigation of Northern Ontario Natural Gas Company operations, which may extend as far as Alberta, was promised yesterday by Attorney-General Roberts. The investigation to be made by his department and by the Ontario securities commission will spare no one.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Nobody was spared.

Mr. MacDonald: I continue again with the article:

"There will be no holds barred. We intend to get every bit of information on all the transactions of the company prior to the issue that was qualified for sale," the Attorney-General stated.

Furthermore, the hon. Prime Minister was equally explicit.

In the Telegram of May 8, the following appeared under the heading:

I WON'T SIT BACK, SAYS FROST

Premier Frost said today his personal investigations into the pipe line controversy would go much further than a mere check into possible involvement of other cabinet Ministers. "I don't intend to sit back and let the Attorney-General's Department and the Ontario securities commission do it all," he said.

He said he was also concerned as to whether stock in the company was issued to municipal officials and representatives of northern Ontario communities for the purpose of influencing them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Attorney-General meant it when he said that the investigation would spare no one, when he said that every stock transaction of the company would be investigated, and if the hon. Prime Minister meant it when he said he was concerned and wanted to assure himself that no stock was used to influence municipal officials in areas where NONG was seeking franchises, then I suggest that they should continue the investigation. And I will give them a lead as to one specific phase of it.

The key franchise sought by NONG was back in Sudbury. Ultimately, it will represent well over half of the sales of the company.

To begin with, the Sudbury council was considering the establishment of a local company along the lines of Twin Cities at the Lakehead. But, eventually, the tide turned. Under the leadership of a leading municipal official, a campaign was launched to deliver the franchise to NONG.

Significantly, the campaign dates from a visit which this leading official made to the United States where he was wined and dined by NONG interests. In return for his efforts, this leading municipal official was compensated, among other things, with a block of stock. He has told many people in the camaraderie of the golf club, and elsewhere, that he received such stock.

In fact, when the government investigates this matter, they will find that this person sold substantial blocks of NONG stock during the latter part of November in 1956 and again in February and March of 1957.

Because of changed circumstances, he sold the stock before it reached its peak price. Indeed, he has lamented the circumstances of the early sale and his remarkably free communication, to many people, is that he received stock and made a great deal of money out of it.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the fact that this leading municipal official was involved is so widely known that I have heard it discussed in every corner of this province.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Now, why does he not name him?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do I have the floor? Will the hon. Attorney-General please sit down while I complete it? May I suggest he sit down while I complete it. I do not concede the floor.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am asking a question.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I do not propose to answer a question.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: All right, the hon. member can answer it later.

Mr. MacDonald: If the government does not know of whom I speak, then I suggest it is another case of deliberate ignorance.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order here.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This hon. member has now, for probably 5 or 6 minutes, developed a certain type of oratory, characteristic of himself, insinuating in the extreme about somebody. Now, in relation to the fact that, as an hon. member of this House, he is charging somebody with doing something that he should not do, I ask that he name that person or withdraw the remarks that he is making.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: I have no intention of naming him. What I am doing is asking this government to go out and to complete the investigation. If this government really meant what its spokesmen claimed, then the hon. Attorney-General claimed—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On a point of order, I rise again.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you, sir, to rule that, in view of the 5 minutes now of lead-up that the hon. member for York South has had, and during most of which he has accused somebody else, unnamed, of doing something that is not only unlawful but apparently fraudulent and everything else, I say that you, sir, should ask him to name that person or withdraw the insinuations. I ask you, sir, to rule on that before the hon. member opens his mouth again.

Mr. MacDonald: I have on occasion stood up in this House, and when I name somebody, then the hon. Attorney-General says, "you are smearing"; and if I do not name them, then he says, "name them."

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, no.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no. I am just asking this government to go ahead and complete the investigation, to give the people of Ontario the full facts, and in doing so, the government will be upholding the principles of—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, am I going to get a ruling from you, sir, on this important matter?

Mr. MacDonald: We must set an example which will help prevent the recurrence of scandals at the municipal, as well as the provincial, level and, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in light of this, I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas), that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House, be further amended by adding the following words: "But this House further regrets that the government has failed to present any comprehensive plans for the economic and social development of the province, and in particular has failed to": as follows:

Provide a comprehensive plan for the co-ordinated development and use of our energy resources which are so vital to the whole economy.

Give consistent and strong support to effective collective bargaining for farmers through marketing plans, and for labour through trade unions.

Uphold the time-honoured principles of public administration and countenanced widespread political patronage, thereby helping to create an atmosphere of indifference and cynicism regarding the high standards of public morality necessary for the survival of democratic government.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Thomas, that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House be further amended by adding the following words: "But this House further regrets that the government has failed to present any comprehensive plan for the economic and social development of this province, and in particular has failed to": as follows:

Uphold time-honoured principles of public administration and countenanced widespread political patronage, thereby helping to create an atmosphere of indifference and cynicism regarding the high standards of public morality necessary for survival of democratic government.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as this is the first time I have had an opportunity, I would like to join with hon. members who have spoken before me in complimenting you on your appointment to the honoured post of Speaker of this House and I know, having known you a great number of years now, that you will indeed bring honour to that post.

Also, I want to compliment the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne. I think they did an admirable job and are certainly to be congratulated.

I am indeed happy, having sat here a goodly number of years now, that my hon. friends opposite have strengthened their position a little—got a little more weight. I do not know whether or not they will have more balance, but I know the hon. Prime Minister used to say to me—sitting here when that little few were there: "Is it not terrible how a party can go down?" As a matter of fact, one day I saw a tear in his eye, but—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I still cry a little over them.

Hon. Mr. Daley: —I think we can feel that we appreciate that they are making a little progress.

One thing I am very happy about is that the discussion group, composed of a number of the boys over here and some of my own hon. friends who used to meet last year, proved very educational, and they used to discuss the balancing of the budget and so forth. I hope we can reorganize those discussions. I found them very beneficial.

Regarding the party in the centre, I have no hopes for them at all, Mr. Speaker.

For a party with hopes and aspirations such as they have, there is one thing they must do first. I think that the hon. leader of this party (Mr. MacDonald) has really served out his period of usefulness and, if they want to get anywhere, they have to get a man with a little different attitude than he has because I have sat through this House with many of the hon. members here when the CCF party had 32 members, was it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: There used to be 33 members here.

Hon. Mr. Daley: They were real good hard-hitting fellows who had a purpose in mind—a seriousness of purpose—to accomplish what they felt was right. They are all gone. But I can meet any one of those fellows on the street and they are friends, and I think they are friends of everybody in this House.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): We are still doing the job.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The hon. member for York South has not a friend in this House, outside his own party.

Mr. Speaker, I have prepared some remarks which I want to make in connection with the Niagara parks commission, of which I have been chairman since 1944. I am going to change my speech a little because of some new charges that have been made here. The only one that I can think of that the hon. member has not mentioned is that, if anybody was to go down in front of my farm in the fall, when the mushrooms are on, they would find me out picking mushrooms on the park and that, in his opinion, must be a violation of some kind, so I thought I would tell him about that.

Mr. Davison: What does the hon. Minister do with them?

Hon. Mr. Daley: In that case, we eat all the evidence.

As I have not touched on a couple of these things in preparing the remarks I am going to make, I am going to deal with them now, because the hour is running out.

I want to say a few words in connection with the farm.

I believe I am considered to be a reasonably honourable man. When Mr. Schmon bought the farm I never dreamed of owning it or even wanting it. He purchased it for purposes of his own. He wanted to, in fact, build a home there. The Niagara parks commission felt, rather than leaving the big piece of land there unused, that it would be a fine thing if there could be a farm residence built there, so they sold it to him. When anyone who knows Arthur Schmon says what was insinuated this afternoon, I think that is a very terrible thing. I do not think there should be parliamentary immunity for people like the hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Deal with the principles of good governing.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I will deal with what I like.

It is too bad the hon. member says what he does about a man of the type of Arthur Schmon. I would presume that he is a very wealthy man, a man who has contributed very much to the benefit of the people—particularly of Ontario because his companies have been a tremendous source of strength to this province—and to hospital work. Because of the time and the money that man has given to develop and create things of benefit for the people of the province, I think it is a shame when his name can be dragged into a little $10,000 deal. If I wanted to put something over I would never go to a man like Mr. Schmon to try to do it.

Mr. MacDonald: Another pittance.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The hon. member reminds me of the old story of the mouse jumping on the elephant's back when it was going across the bridge, and when it got to the other side the mouse said to the elephant, "We sure shook that bridge, didn't we?"

Mr. MacDonald: That was a good story the first time I heard it.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Police on duty, acting as taxi drivers—that is the most nonsensical thing. We have police patrols going up the park system in cars regularly. I suppose, if some commissioner or somebody else were going that way, they would ask the policeman for a ride. That is about the amount of taxiing that is done. Every member there has his own car, and they come and go in their own cars.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Minister put in a claim for mileage then?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Now the hon. member brought in something about a roof. It is true we—

Mr. MacDonald: What did he claim for his own mileage, if he uses his own car?

Hon. Mr. Daley: We fixed a roof on what was the old well. It was one of the original power houses that had been there for years and years, and we decided to put it in shape so it would be usable.

The Newman Brothers were working on another building which they had tendered for on the commission—the main office building—and we asked them what they thought about the roof, because there were iron beams. Some had to be replaced—no one knew exactly how many until they got up there and chipped into them to see what the deterioration had been. They looked it all over and said, "Well, it looks to us like about a $25,000 job."

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe somebody else might have done it for less.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Maybe they would have.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the commission not find out?

Hon. Mr. Daly: I do not say that everything the commission did was perfect. The commission was appointed to run and develop that system over there and, true, they had to use some discretion.

Another one of the things we did down at Queenston Heights—to those who are familiar with the area—concerned a great stone wall which ran around the top of the escarpment, facing the monument to the right of it. I presume many hon. members have walked along there. We discovered one year that it had moved about an inch, and by the next year it had moved 6 inches. We considered it dangerous because it was right on the brow of the hill.

We could not get a tender for a job like that. We had to find somebody who was willing to dig down there to see what held it there in the first place, and to see what had to be done to repair it. We could not leave it, because the people go and lean on it and take photographs of the river from it.

We had to fix it, so we had to get a man whom we knew had the equipment and the mechanics to do that job, and we did it that way. I do not think there is a better way of doing it.

Just recently on the bridge commission, of which I happen to be the chairman, we had some work to do on the wall there, at the river bank. We decided—and there were 4 American businessmen there, big businessmen in the United States, and 4 Canadians—that the best thing to do was to get somebody who had the proper equipment for lowering and doing the job. We invited tenders. We got a tender from a fellow who wanted, I think, $20,000

Well, we considered that as extremely high, and we asked him what he would charge a day to do this work and he gave us a price. He finished the job for, I think, $8,000.

It is not always cheaper to call a tender, when one cannot establish exactly what has to be done. Any contractor is going to protect himself against things that he cannot see.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I am on the defensive here, I have nothing to defend. I am as proud as I can be of the part that I, assisted by the commissioners, have played in the development of the Niagara parks system.

I am not defending myself, I do not care, but I think that, as a tremendous character-smearing—he does not like the word “smearing,” so I think I will use it—

Mr. MacDonald: Deal with the issue.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The campaign has been carried on in the newspapers and by word of mouth, and I thought I would devote what time I have today to explain to the House some of the operations, and the way things are carried on by the Niagara parks commission, whose activities have been attacked in a manner that, in my opinion, comes close to being libellous.

As hon. members know, I have been in the political field for some considerable time, and I do not mind being criticized. I rather enjoy it. But I think that this is a bad situation that we are getting into, when men who give of their time, their talents, their energy, on these various commissions—private citizens who serve on these commissions gratis—can be smeared, dragged into the newspapers, and have their motives and their integrity maligned.

I am greatly concerned because, if this malicious practice is allowed to continue, how are we going to get good people to do these important jobs? Who is going to do a good job conscientiously for years, give of his time and much money, and then have his name dragged across the newspaper pages as though he were in it for some personal gain?

I think, as the hon. Prime Minister said the other day, the scheme of things calls for commissions. Indeed, he thinks they will even increase as time goes by, and yet how are we going to get good conscientious men to do a great deal of work? Take the service clubs, the men who serve on hospital boards, all the things that are done in the interest of the people of this province—gratis in most cases—who will do these things if they are going to be laid open to criticism by somebody without any facts or proof?

I know where the hon. member got all his information on the Niagara parks commission.

Mr. MacDonald: Where?

Hon. Mr. Daley: I know, he got it over there from a little vindictive fellow who was trying to get even with somebody, for what I do not know.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, then, perhaps the hon. Minister had better name this person.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh, sit down. The hon. member would not sit down even when the hon. Prime Minister wanted to speak.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): If the hon. member for York South would not name—

Mr. MacDonald: I am just pointing out that this is similar—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Now, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very serious thing when we are going to ask people for services, then we are going to find that these charitable—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Take the big sporting events. It is a wonder the hon. member cannot find something about Conn Smythe and these men who have done such a great work in connection with the crippled children. I bet that some day the hon. member will come in here with something that they have done. I would not be a bit surprised that he is cooking up something right now—

Mr. MacDonald: Deal with the issues, deal with the issues.

Hon. Mr. Daley: —because he has pretty nearly run out of people in this House.

Now, I want to tell hon. members a little bit about this system that is established in the operation of the Niagara parks commissioner.

When we took over in 1944, there had been a commission there, and at that particular time—I do not say it with any criticism—it had been all by appointments by the Liberal government. These people had set up certain ways of doing business and we just simply followed along with the scheme.

Now, there is what is known as a refectory building, and many people have been there. There are 10 rooms there, I think, in connection with the upper floor of that building, and each commissioner was, on appointment, allotted a room. I would think of the 10 rooms, if there are 3 of them used a few times a year that would about cover it.

There are many of the commissioners who never stay there. They have no reason to stay there. They do not want to stay there. They come down there to do their business and they go home. But the rooms are there.

The hon. member for York South speaks as though, because there are well-stocked liquor shelves in these rooms, that there are abuses.

I would like to say this to the hon. member—when he was over there he accepted the hospitality of the commission the same as any other person—

Mr. MacDonald: That was on the toll roads committee.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The only difference between the hon. member, and the other members of the toll roads committee who were there, was that they accepted the hospitality in good grace—courteously—and left after having a little refreshment and a little rest, after dealing with the toll roads committee in Welland and Niagara Falls, and I do not know how many other places. I knew they were a pretty tired group when they came in there; the hon. member accepted the hospitality and then snooped around, opening drawers and doors to see what he could find.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Did he look under the bed?

Hon. Mr. Daley: But he would always get back in time for the next drink.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, when I got back, the hon. Minister was always one ahead of me, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He even got into the pantry.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes. We would see him looking around—there must be something in there—and he opened the door and because there were a lot of glasses, he says that there must be a lot of drinking around here. I bet that is what he said.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Now, our commission in 1944—and I say most sincerely that we were very fortunate indeed to have men of this calibre available and willing to serve gratis—certain men were selected and requested to serve. They did not come seeking the job. They were requested to serve considering first, area representation—we tried to establish the area—and because of various qualifications of experience.

Now, each of these men, in his own way, has made a contribution to the parks development. I will indicate, as I go along, what has been accomplished over the years.

I would first like to give hon. members the list of the commissioners over the years. This list gives those who were appointed by order-in-council dated August 10, 1944:

The hon. Charles Daley, Mr. George Inglis, appointment re vote, order-in-council, July 23, 1959.

Mr. T. H. Lewis, deceased, September 11, 1949. Now, Mr. Lewis was a construction man and we thought that a construction man, as a member of the commission with all the building and things we have to do, would be an asset.

Mr. Cecil Secord. Mr. Secord is a farmer, a horticulturist, and greenhouse man. With all that kind of work we had there, we thought that Mr. Cecil Secord would be a valuable asset.

Mr. Toby Forestall, from Fort Erie—among his qualifications was the fact that he was a lawyer.

Dr. H. G. Fox, a lawyer, and a business man. Dr. Fox is one of the outstanding patent lawyers in the country—very famous—whose time, if one went to hire him for a day, would cost considerable money.

Mr. Fred M. Cairns, of whom the hon. member spoke. He was a businessman in the city.

Mr. Ralston was a real estate and insurance man.

Mr. Forestall was appointed Crown attorney, I think, in Welland, and he resigned, and Mr. Carl D. Hannawell was appointed in his stead.

Then, appointed by order-in-council on January 30, 1951, was Mr. Franklin J. Miller, Mr. Edward W. Tyrrell, to succeed Mr. Hannawell, and Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Lewis died and Mr. Hannawell resigned, and they were succeeded by Mr. Miller and Mr. Tyrrell, one from Niagara Falls and one from Fort Erie—a member of the board up in that area.

Then by order-in-council dated June 14, 1951—I want to point out that, at that time, the hon. Prime Minister introduced a new idea. He said that there should be more representation, regardless of politics, from Lincoln county, from Welland county and from the city of Niagara Falls.

Following that, there was appointed Mr. E. M. Hawkins, representing the city of Niagara Falls, and he served until January 1959, from 1951.

Mr. W. J. Hunter, from the county of Lincoln, served until 1956.

Mr. George Bukator served Welland until January, 1957, from 1951—that is approximately 6 years.

I am not trying to curry favour with the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator). I know he will criticize and he will criticize fairly. But he took an interest in the park, and he was one of the members who really watched things—how they were developed and how matters went. In spite of the fact we knew that the hon. member's political feelings were with the Liberals, we knew that he would do a good job, and he did. We were very sorry when the council of Welland decided to appoint someone else.

These positions are usually changed every year. But, as I say, Mr. Hawkins who, hon. members may know, moans about it, was a very strong Liberal and he was there for 8 years.

Mr. Keith Walker, representing the county of Lincoln.

Mr. Hans Burger, from Beamsville.

Mr. Arthur Bridge, from Welland.

Mr. James Roger, from Lincoln.

Mr. Horace P. Morningstar, from Welland.

Mr. George H. Mowers, from the city of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Bruce Finch, from Welland.

Mr. R. W. MacIntosh, from Lincoln.

Appointed July 9, 1959, Mr. Herman M. Rogers succeeded Mr. Rollason.

Now I say that all these men collectively have co-operated with me 100 per cent. in making decisions concerning the park. I did not make them. I was chairman, but everything that went on in the parks system was recorded and approved at a properly called commission meeting, where, 9 out of 10 times, everybody was there, and all the details were laid on the table.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, are we to continue on with the debate during the whole evening?

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, having been interrupted by the hour of 6 of the clock, I am not getting things in the proper order I anticipated. There is one thing I do want to say though, which I think I will say right now. It is in regard to the former commission—the commission that preceded the commission that I have mentioned. I think great credit was due those men.

Mr. T. B. McQuesten was the chairman who preceded me and I want to say for the records that evidence of his vision, his outlook into the future, his seeing things as they would be, both in the park commission's activities and in the highway department—roads leading to Niagara Falls, among others—indicate that this man did a terrific job. He will long be remembered by the works he accomplished in that particular area.

However, that commission did leave the present commission with a considerable debt, something like $3 million. Some $3 million was owing at the time that this commission took over.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): It was because of the privy council.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I wanted to say that. In mentioning that, I am not in any way criticizing the former committee. The debt was owing because of the development, the great things that they were doing, plus the decision, I believe, of the supreme court in regard to that railway that they were required to assume, privy council and many things. But, in any event, the facts were that there was a debt of $3 million.

Now, I was faced with the proposition as to how we were going to get away from that, because of the tremendous amount of interest. In fact, about all the money we were taking in was going out in interest to renew this note every year.

I know that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) will recall that I spoke to him about the debt. I said I hoped we would be able to do something about it. So we established a pay-as-you-go policy in regard to capital expenditure, and we made up our minds to pay every dollar that we could off that debt.

We realized that increasing the income was the only way we could accomplish anything in regard to that debt.

Our income as to water rentals was fixed, and our ability to earn in our concessions was limited with the accommodation we had at that time. The commission realized—and I am no more responsible for this than any other individual member—that we had to find ways and means of getting more money from the visitors who came there. The number of visitors, tabulated as nearly as we could, amounted to some 8 to 10 million a year.

We have a meter system which registers the cars coming into Queen Victoria Park, not out further, and we have had as many as 25,000 cars registered in a single day, and we estimate on the basis of 3 to 3.5 people per car.

Of course, that is not completely accurate, but that is the best estimate we can get.

When we assumed the responsibilities there, the tunnels were in poor shape. I point out again that this is said with no criticism of the former administration. Because of the war and various other conditions, part of that park was closed up for quite a considerable time during the war. Soldiers were stationed there. The tunnels were closed and they had deteriorated, and they are a great source of revenue.

We decided first that we had to rebuild those tunnels, which we did. We found one had to be completely abandoned and a new tunnel driven through because of the proximity to the edge of the rock formation. So we rebuilt those tunnels, and they have been a tremendous source of revenue.

I say to the hon. members that they do not really see the falls until they go down and go out on the plaza which permits them to look up at the falls. Until a person has been down there, he has not seen the falls.

One of the drawbacks of the falls is that sightseers are right level with the top of them. But from down below, one does get the tremendous impression of the power and the great volume of water that flows there.

At any rate, the tunnels proved to be of great financial assistance to us.

Then we constructed a building called the Princess Elizabeth building. We tendered for the tunnels, in case the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is interested, and then we built the Princess Elizabeth building, which has proven to be another great source of revenue. It, too, was built by tender. We enlarged the restaurant at Queenston which had, for many years, been operating in the red. With the enlargement and an enlarged pavilion, and other facilities we put there, that also became a revenue producer.

Then we come up to the refectory building. Now this refectory building already had a cafeteria in it. But it was very small, and could not seat more than 20 people. There was also a fairly good-sized dining room. We felt that, if we could remodel that place and have a big cafeteria, we would increase the attendance and the number of meals served in these places tremendously.

At any rate, in 1948 we served, in both the cafeteria and the dining room, approximately 230,000 meals. After we remodeled the refectory, enlarged the dining room, and enlarged the cafeteria, we sold up 500,000 meals a year, so that investment also proved to be a great money-maker.

But, in enlarging this cafeteria, it was absolutely impossible to get a firm tender. I presume some of the older hon. members in this House, like myself, know that it was a very old building. It had been added to over many years. There were huge rock walls there, no one seemed to know where the sewers were or about the water system. Indeed, nobody seemed to know very much about what was there, except that it was inadequate to do the amount of business we wanted to do.

Because the refectory was very old and in very poor condition, we had to start rebuilding. We knew it was going to be a costly operation, and that a policy of cash for capital improvements would not enable us to do it all at once. Therefore, we could not actually call for a fixed tender.

But we did get in touch with a man who had tendered successfully on some of our other buildings and had done a most satisfactory job, and we were very happy to engage him on a cost-plus basis. I think that it was a reasonable thing to do. He did a good job at what we thought was a reasonable cost, and we were in business really making money.

So, because of these things we did, and the way we did them, we were able to start paying off the loan which was $3 million at 2.5 per cent. guaranteed by the province of Ontario. Altogether, with the $3 million, plus the interest we paid on the loan as we cut it down, we paid during that period of time $3,662,709. We paid the note off in payments from 1944.

In 1950, we paid off 4 notes of $100,000 each, which left us a debt of $2.6 million. In 1951, we paid off $100,000. In 1952, we paid off two notes—one of $100,000 and one of $200,000.

The debt was thus reduced to $2.2 million, and in 1953 we paid off $500,000. We paid off notes of $100,000 and $400,000 when we finished up the season. In 1953, we paid off $400,000 and in 1954 we paid off two notes—one of $200,000 and one of $500,000. In 1955, we paid off $200,000 and $400,000—the $600,000 which completed the loan and got it entirely out of the way.

It was these men who are being smeared here who did this job.

There is one thing they have in their favour—that is, they are being smeared by a champion. I mean the hon. member is the champion of that particular activity. Hon. members have all seen Mr. Clean on the television. Well, the hon. member for York South is the Mr. Clean. He will clean anything in one's whole house, but he will also smear anything in one's whole house.

As I said, in regard to the alterations, we made them without tender, I make no bones about it. Because of changing the restaurant and the cafeteria, we increased the number of meals sold from approximately 230,000 in 1948 to 500,000 in 1957.

Our gross income, from all our activities in the park, amounts to $2.1 million. That does not include water rental, that is only from our commercial activities.

Of course, we have an employment of up to 600 people in summertime; about 300 are permanent employees. Our policy has been to keep as many people on permanently as possible. Sometimes I am inclined to think we probably go a little too far in that regard in the wintertime when business is down. But we have good experienced people, and we have all felt that it is a good thing to keep them on permanently if we can.

We have gone to the 40-hour week in all departments, with very few exceptions.

Pretty well all the commission is divided into committees. One committee looks after the golf course.

We built the big golf course down there and we have kept the rates for playing on that golf course as reasonable as possible, so that workers in industry would have a chance to play golf. We do not have clubs. Anybody who comes there plays on a pay-as-you-go basis. Last year, some 60,000 people played golf on that course so we feel that it is making a little money now—not very much after maintenance—but it is getting close to being a good revenue producer.

But I feel that, even if it never becomes a big revenue producer, it is a service to a great many people. It gives something for the tourists to do when they come, and a great many Americans use it.

The course is in good shape and it is being considered as a possibility for the Canadian Open.

We have 35 miles of roadway for which we are responsible, and it was mentioned here that we had surfaced these roads without tender. That is entirely erroneous. This is what we did. We decided on a 3-year plan to resurface the entire parkway, and we set aside so much money each year. We called for tenders the first year. The Law Construction Company—or the Law Paving, I just forget the name—located in the area, were the low tenderers, and they did the first stretch of the road.

The next year we were ready to do another section, but the prices of everything had gone up. This man was some $2 a ton below any other tenderer, so we asked him if he would continue another section at the same price that he had put in the section the year before.

There is no possibility of our being cheated on that because we have our own inspector. We weigh the amount of material that comes in at so much a ton, and if more is required to fill up some lower places—that is to say, a 2-inch or 3-inch surface—it is all measured and charged on that rate.

Mr. Law said yes, he would go ahead and do another section at the same cost. We felt, as I think hon. members would if they had been there, that it was a good contract. It was a year later, and prices and wages had gone up, and here was a man prepared to continue on with the same contract. We closed the deal and he did a good job.

Now, as I say, we work in committees. If a piece of property is to be bought or sold we have committees to go out and report on it, and bring back a report to the commission.

I think my hon. friend from Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) will corroborate that. Everything was done in a businesslike way, and these people are held responsible for bringing in the report which is either approved or turned down.

I have already explained the repairing of the stone wall at Queenston, which there was no possibility of doing any other way.

My own personal task, which the commission asked me to look after, was the matter of working conditions and wages. I think that, if hon. members will examine the wages paid over there, we have brought them gradually up till they are competitive with any wages in the area, from the police force down. I think they will find that we have a very satisfied number of employed people, and it is a very fine thing for that area, that such a number of people can find employment.

I know that remarks have been made about the auditor's reports. We employ a reliable firm of auditors. We have our own auditors in the organization, but we also have an outside firm that audits our books.

Somebody said—I think it was the hon. member for York South—that I had insisted that the auditor change the annual statement to show a surplus instead of a deficit. I can assure hon. members that is entirely erroneous. I am not an auditor—I do not know anything about auditing—and I would not think of advising an auditor to change a statement. But in any event—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I did not say the hon. Minister did, so let us not beat this straw horse down.

Hon. Mr. Daley: All right, but in any event, no matter what the figures said, people do not pay off $3,662,709 by changing figures. A loan can be paid only with cash. That is the only way one pays that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Daley: For a new hon. member, he is right on the bit, is he not?

The hon. member: Well, I came to learn.

I am with the hon. Minister against the hon. member for York South.

Another hon. member: I am against both of them.

Hon. Mr. Daley: But a statement like the one by the hon. member for York South just borders on the ridiculous.

Mr. MacDonald: Well then, what is the hon. Minister beating it to pieces for?

Hon. Mr. Daley: How is that?

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say the hon. Minister advised the auditor—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, if the hon. member did not say it, it is the only thing he has not said.

Anyway, the auditors report the business of each and every month and, at every meeting, the report is on the table around which we sit, and everybody can look at anything regarding the business of the commission.

Because of the nature of this commission, besides doing all the business—and there are countless things to look after—we have a solicitor on retainer, besides having a couple in the commission. There are many deals with residents in the area, in regard to getting water lines out to the river and one thing and another. There is a great deal of legal work to do, so we have a solicitor.

The commission, in addition to looking after that, becomes at times almost a—I do not know whether it is the proper word—reception commission. Niagara Falls attracts people from all over the world and great personalities come there. I have always felt—and somebody can advise me if it is the wrong attitude—that great personalities, not only from other countries but from our own country, should be treated properly, as courtesy demands. Our commissioners have to meet and entertain these people at times—indeed that is one way we get great publicity. By doing these things, we have built up visitor attendance at the falls. These people go back to their own countries and talk favourably about it.

Now, I have quite a list here of people who have been over there and—

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Would the hon. Minister mind inviting me down? I will go.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Well, if the hon. member wants—

Mr. Speaker: There will be no demonstrations from the gallery.

Hon. Mr. Daley: I am going to run through this very quickly. It is quite a long list and some of these people have not been here just recently. This will give hon. members an idea of who come to the falls.

We have had His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario (Mr. Mackay); and Princess Alice of Athlone; members of the Chilian army; the national resources commission of China; a colonel of the Indian army; General Batista of Cuba.

Sir Edward Jones of the British food commission from London has visited the falls. So has the lord mayor of Manchester; the chief scout, Lord Rowallan; and the hon. Godfrey Ince.

There is a long list here. If anyone is interested, I will read it into the Hansard record if hon. members so desire. Really I do not care. I do not want to take time to read this whole list because it is very lengthy. But it does indicate that the duties of the commission include, in addition to running a big business, this sort of entertaining. Publicity is one of our big features, I think.

Now then, the name of Mr. Cairns, a commissioner, the vice-chairman of the commission, has been mentioned here. Now, when we began over there, the Borden Company, for whom Mr. Cairns worked as manager of the Niagara Falls district, was supplying a portion of the park with ice cream, milk, and other dairy products. They had their equipment in there, the freezers and things that are required to handle that kind of business.

Is it reasonable, because a man like Fred Cairns happens to be the manager of a company, that our business with them should be discontinued?

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that is one thing I would not say I am right or wrong about, but I have never felt that there was any reason to cut off the Borden Company, because one of their employees—and that is what he was—happened to be on the Niagara parks commission, and was doing a good job.

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Just quit mumbling.

Mr. MacDonald: I was not mumbling, I was trying to explain it to the hon. Minister. It has nothing to do with Bordens.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Our business over there is quite seasonal, as hon. members know—just 4 or 5 months when we do an extreme lot of business. Serving ice cream, milk and that sort of thing is big business in that area. So we divided it up into zones where Silverwoods had one, Bordens had another, and some dairy from Niagara Falls, I think, had some of the other business.

We had to make reasonable arrangements in conducting the park's affairs to give proper service.

Now, there is no use kidding ourselves. We sometimes have a great many people come in unexpectedly in a day. I have seen as many as 12 buses come in from the United States, all in one group. One has to get foodstuffs immediately and from the people who are prepared to give good service. Bordens and Silverwoods give us good service.

Well then, Fred Cairns was—so it seems to be on the record—connected with Niagara Food Products. Now, in order to have competition and service in that area, we could not cut ourselves down to deal with one fellow—that would have left out National Grocers, whose manager was a Liberal.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Perish the thought. That would be terrible.

Hon. Mr. Daley: In spite of that we gave him a lot of business.

Mr. MacDonald: Liberals or Tories.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Daley: None of those hon. members are in business, they are just trying to tell everybody who is in business how to do it.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): They live off the country.

Hon. Mr. Daley: They are just trying to tell everybody how to run their business.

But, at any rate, there were 4 or 5 suppliers—the National Grocers; the Niagara Trading; Lacoca Brothers, who are fruit and vegetable vendors. I forget the names of some of these people. But, anyway, they handle chiefly the vegetables and fruits. There is also a firm by the name of Welch in St. Catharines which supplies us with a good deal of provisions.

I will admit, we tried, within reason, to give the business to the people in the area and if hon. members are thinking about Welch in St. Catharines, the owner is a very strong Liberal.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Now, to give the firms in the area, regardless of politics, a fair share of the business, we always kept in mind the type of service we required. We kept them competitive. If, in the foodstuffs, we wanted 100 cases of some kind of canned goods, we asked for prices from all these fellows.

Hon. members can readily understand that the income from merchandising $2.1 million is considerable, and it takes a lot of purchasing of supplies. We have buyers who are trained.

They know their business and they keep these people competitive. There never has been any indication of using politics or patronage in any way. We were out to do business with whoever was there to do it in the proper manner, and we got the best prices we could.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Minister a question at this time? Does the commission operate all of the concessions of the Niagara parks commission?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Is that the question? Yes we do, actually.

There are two enterprises that operate on lease, and one is the whirlpool aerial car. That was built many years ago by people from Spain, who came over here, and put the car in. They pay us a fixed rate per annum. I have not got the exact amount. But if they take in up to $20,000, they pay us a certain percentage. If they take in $40,000, they pay us a higher percentage, and when it gets up to $50,000 I think we get half. So it is profitable for us. The car seems to be very popular in the area.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): All the concessions are operated by the commission?

Hon. Mr. Daley: All others are operated by the commission. Of course, if hon. members know the area and they see those stores that are under the bridge there, they are not commission stores, they are under The Department of Highways. The Department of Highways built up that area and own those buildings, and, I believe, leases them. But all other businesses in the park system are operated by the commission.

Mr. Singer: The taxes are paid to the municipality though, are they not?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes, we pay business tax. Yes, we do. We do not pay on parkland, but we pay the business taxes the same as the municipalities. That is, we pay in lieu of taxes. We have our own assessors and then we pay it on the same basis that any other business in the area pays.

I will say this, also, that we have endeavoured not to compete to any greater extent than is absolutely necessary with business outside the park system. In other words, we keep our prices up. We do not cut prices in order to attract people there.

The reason we have these businesses is first, I would say, to make money; and second, to supply a service to the people who come there. If they do not want to go away to find some place to eat, they can eat in our place. But they pay a fair price, all in all, there is very little criticism from the people in the area.

In connection with this I want to mention a little bit about the school of horticulture. It was established before this present commission took over, but I think we have done a good job in improving the curriculum. We house and feed 24 people each year, 8 of whom graduate, and then we take in 8 more the following year.

This has been going on for quite some time. I want to mention this because I want to encourage some boys around 18 or 20, in that area, to come to this school.

I suggest to the hon. members of this House—all hon. members—if they have a boy in their particular riding who they think would like to be a landscape gardener or horticulturist, that he give some thoughts to making application to take this course.

It is a 3-year course, and we pay the students—I think we are unique in that. We house and feed these boys and pay them—not a big wage—but we pay a salary and they do work. I think it is about $90 a month, or something like that, besides their keep.

If hon. members have been in that area these last two years, but particularly the last year, I think they know our school is a great credit to the system. We have been able to get some very fine boys.

I am going to tell hon. members, for the record, just where some of these boys arrived after taking this course. Up to the present time, 124 persons have graduated from the school.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question? Could he tell me the minimum of education one needs for these positions?

Hon. Mr. Daley: I think grade 9 or something like that. It is not too hard, but one has to have a reasonable education in order to absorb the curriculum of the school. They are not academic subjects, and the boys do a lot of manual work. They are inside studying about the treatment and care of trees and bug control and all that sort of thing. But we have graduated 124, and I have a number of them listed here, just as a matter of interest as to what has happened to some of them.

One is a landscape contractor in Toronto and also reeve of East York. One is superintendent of horticulture at Imperial Oil in Sarnia. Another one operates nurseries in Carman, Manitoba. We do not refuse to take applicants outside of Ontario. We like to get one or two from the other provinces. We think it is a gesture of goodwill. We had one last year from Saskatchewan. He is a good boy—a much better boy than I thought he would be.

Mr. MacDonald: A lot of Saskatchewan money has been coming down to Ontario for a long time.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): It is a good province from which to come.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Another graduate is superintendent of landscape design and development, North York township. A graduate is a landscape architect in Guelph. Another lad is superintendent of parks in Calgary, Alberta. Another graduate is foreman of nursery work in Hornby.

A lad from our school is parks representative for Duke Lawn Equipment; another, the greenskeeper at Lewiston golf and country club, New York.

One is arborist for The Department of Highways; another operates a florist shop in California; another is superintendent of parks for the city of London; another, a gardener for the Kitchener parks; another, foreman at Savage Greenhouse at Sarnia; and another one is instructor in our own school.

The idea of this school was to provide men to work in our parks system, but we have discovered that they get so much better jobs in other places. In fact, we cannot use them all with the knowledge that they have.

We have a graduate who is superintendent of parks for the city of Napa, California; another, settlement supervisor, Veterans' Land Act, in Lindsay; another, superintendent of grounds, Ontario agricultural college; another, superintendent of horticulture, the Niagara parks commission.

I will mention another boy who trained in our school. He left the system, he came over here to Toronto. He had a very good job in the Toronto parks department. When we needed a man, he came back, and today he is one of our finest, doing an excellent job for us. We are very happy that he is one of our own students.

Then there is a forestry foreman, Department of Highways; a landscape contractor; there are wholesale florists; a graduate is superintendent of grounds, Ontario Department of Education; another is chief horticulturist, department of botany, Penn State College, Pennsylvania.

A graduate is chief horticulturist, department of botany, University of Toronto; another, a landscape contractor; another, construction superintendent for Terminal Construction in Ottawa; another, superintendent of parks at Kingston; another, arborist, The Department of Highways in Chatham.

This list goes on and on—superintendent of grounds, Queen's University; florist, Wardsville, Ontario.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): The hon. Minister has records of all these, has he?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes. They come back each year to visit with us, and hold a convention down there—it is a most wonderful thing, the opportunity for these boys to progress in the way that they have.

Here is one, the greenskeeper for the golf and country club in Rochester.

There is quite a long list. I point that out because, I say it seriously, I would like to see hon. members take an interest and have boys apply to take this course in our school. We will weed them out. They will have to qualify.

The physical assets of the park are there to see. Anyone can go and see them. The maintenance of 35 miles of parkway, I think, is unsurpassed anywhere. All the maintenance, the keeping and planting and growing of the flowers, is done by competent staff. I think, under the present system, that this great Niagara parkway is unsurpassed. Hon. members might think we are being a little boastful, but I do not think there is anything that surpasses it any place that I have been. The maintenance is a credit to the people who actually do the work.

The commission, of course, creates the policy and hires the people qualified to do the work. The complete story of the parks' activities are placed before this House every year. Every year they are right here for all to see.

I think that is about my story of the development of our parks system, the work of commissioners who are being criticized unjustly. I have already said that these men assume these responsibilities gratis—they get no allowance. They do have certain privileges, if they are down there—and I hope hon. members do not think that they run from their homes down there just to have a meal or something. They go down there when they are required and, if they are there, they are entitled to have a meal.

There is a place in the refectory called the commission quarters, which also includes the board room, where the business is done. When commissioners are entertaining, and there is somebody to entertain, courtesy seems to require that we do the proper thing.

Well, that is one of the things that they are permitted to do and certainly, not to my knowledge, are these privileges ever abused.

I know there are some of the commissioners that hon. members would not find there once a year, outside of the regular meeting. But other people, who live closer to the refectory, may be there more often. But I do not think that the net result of the whole thing can be criticized, when one considers this commission has, over the years, wonderfully operated this great system. They have developed it to a high point of efficiency, and created, within it, the ability to take in the money which chiefly comes from American visitors.

I think it is very fortunate that there seems to be a greater tendency toward public criticism. I read in the paper the other day about the city of Toronto's entertainment bills. Well, I do not know, I think a great city like Toronto does a very good job in entertaining personalities who come here.

These personalities get courteous treatment if they go to some other place. They know they are entitled to it, particularly if they hold responsible positions in another government. Entertainment is a courtesy, it creates good will, and I personally do not see anything wrong with this.

Our entertainment bill, as near as I can gather, is about $6,000 a year for taking in guests—sometimes only for 15 minutes. The guest may not want to stay, he may not have the time.

But for the operation of the commission, and the taking in of visitors who the commission deem desirable, the cost runs about $6,000 a year, as I understand it.

I think that is very small potatoes, taking the city of Toronto as a criterion, when it comes to proper entertaining. How people raked the harbour commission over the coals! For what? For doing a very good job, I would say.

That is my story. The commission, which has developed these parks and has put them into the shape they are in, has done a mighty good job.

Under new financial arrangements, we are not receiving all the water rentals, but we are assured of a fixed sum of money to maintain and operate the parks, and the rest goes into the consolidated revenue fund. The parks were developed from a system operating with a $3 million debt to a debt-free organization in about 10 years. Free of debt, it has returned much to the people as well as creating the interest of the tourists and the people who come here. It freed itself of debt without one cent being charged to the taxpayers of this province. This is a record of which I am not too ashamed.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege. If hon. members will bear with me for a few minutes, I would like to make a short preamble to what I have to say.

I never realized that the hon. Minister (Mr. Daley) was such a culprit, until I came to this House and now find that he is supposedly involved in land transactions and so on, and so on. I always considered him quite a chairman, doing a good job.

I am glad to find that the hon. Minister did say that the Liberals had something to do with this fine park and did get it in debt. I am reminded of a man who inherits his father's property with about 10 payments to pay off, and finally winds up with a lot of assets.

The nicest part of this particular thing is to find that this government was good enough to amend its way of operation in the park in 1951, and allow some of us to sit on that commission. So they did put me back into a spot as a Liberal to help me pay off that debt, to say the least—$3.6 million. I was there in 1951 or 1952, when the hon. Minister started to pay that after this land deal. I stayed with him until he paid it off in 1956, and then I found I should head for other fields. But I assisted the hon. Minister, as he has said before, in bringing that about, and so hon. members can see that the Liberals not only start something, Mr. Speaker, but they come back and see it finished, too.

I did stray, Mr. Speaker, from the problem at hand. Hon. members know that we, who start into this particular field, find ourselves often handicapped simply because our knowledge is limited to what we read in the papers from time to time.

I read something like this on December 22. I am not going to try to pick this paper up. I do not think I could hold it still long enough, so I am going to read it from the table if hon. members do not mind.

This is datelined December 22, 1959, Toronto:

PARK PROBE URGED

Ontario CCF leader Donald C. MacDonald said on Monday night that the provincial government is making frantic efforts behind the scenes to clean up the situation in the Niagara parks commission. For 3 years evidence has been indicated that the commission requires serious public scrutiny, he said in a statement.

That came about, Mr. Speaker, again after I left the commission. Hon. members see they still need me there, I believe.

I might say that I did not like the statement in the press, so I did a little bit of writing on my own behalf. One has to defend oneself, so in the same day we find in our local paper something like this:

WOULD WELCOME SCRUTINY IN PARK, BUKATOR SAYS

George Bukator, MPP, said today that, "As a former member of the Niagara parks commission, I am quite sure that the present members have no objections to any type of investigation; naturally this is only my personal opinion." From 1951 to 1956, inclusive, he was appointed by the Welland county council to serve on the commission. "My attitude to this is that, if the CCF leader wants an investigation, then go ahead and investigate. I am quite sure that the commission would co-operate," Mr. Bukator said. "I feel that the commission would be quite willing to let the public know anything that they, the public, feel they should know," he said.

The hon. Minister has made that very clear here tonight, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing to hide as far as my efforts are concerned, in that particular thing. I thought this should at least be added to Hansard, to let the people of Niagara Falls know how I stood on the issue. I have nothing to hide.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, it is with some timidity that I rise tonight after a day in a chamber full of tensions, charges and countercharges, dragon slayers and defenders of the faith, and everything else.

If the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is looking for more revenue—and, if we are to continue some of these disgraceful scenes that we have seen in this chamber, as well as some of the scenes that we saw last March—I would suggest to him that he start charging an amusement tax for the people who are going to fill the galleries.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the others who have spoken in this debate to convey the usual congratulations to you, as a person, in the high office which you hold. I can give no further compliment to you than just to say that I agree with everything that has been said about you, sir, and about your office. Also, I can, with confidence, agree with everything that is going to be said about you.

As well, I would like to congratulate the new hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay). I think his appointment is an excellent one. I think he has already proved that, in the energy conference that was held at the King Edward Hotel here not so ago. But more especially I would like to congratulate him on the booklet that he has produced entitled "A Layman's Description of Nuclear Energy." If there are any hon. members of the House who have not yet seen it, it is well worth reading.

Also, sir, I would like to pay my respects to the hon. Minister who guided The Department of Education in this province through a period of great crisis. I refer to the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop). I think we are all very sorry to hear of his illness and to hear that, because of this illness, he had to give up the onerous duties that he grasped so well when he was appointed the Minister of Education.

In doing so, I also want to add a word of welcome to the new hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts). I do not know yet whether he has had the time to grasp the problems that must be in existence in that very massive department of his, but I hope that, as a long-term objective, he is going to work toward free university tuition for all those who wish it in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. leader of the official Opposition in this House (Mr. Wintermeyer)—and I mean this most sincerely—on his re-election in this House, and on his continued service to this province. I congratulate also the new hon. members whom he has now sitting behind him. I mean this most sincerely.

In this day and age, when we have massive majorities in governments in the western world, and steam-rolling majorities pushing everything aside, I think any unbiased citizen today, in Ontario, must be glad that the Liberals appear to have awakened from their doldrums of the past and are showing some sign of energy and life.

I mean that most sincerely. I am glad to see the larger number of younger hon. members sitting behind him there.

Of course, I suppose one must qualify these general statements. However, I hope that the zenith of their power has now been reached. But in any event, I do congratulate the hon. leader of the Opposition on his re-election.

Which brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), the leader of the CCF.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not spoil it now.

Mr. Lawrence: I am in a disagreeable mood today, in any event, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to disagree with the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) regarding some of his remarks this afternoon, especially when he said that the hon. member for York South has no friend outside of his own party. That is absolutely not correct in my own case.

I do not know the hon. member too well, but I am sure that what he is doing, he believes he is doing in the interest of the province as a whole. I do not particularly agree with his methods, but that is not for me to judge. In any event, I would like to be classified as a friend of the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the new chairman of the Ontario water resources commission. Here in Toronto, I think we are particularly concerned about the matter of pollution. It has always been a great pleasure to me that, here in this city and in the metropolitan area of Toronto, we are sitting beside one of the largest bodies of fresh water in the world.

Whether it is an international problem or whether it is not, I do not know. But I hope that the new chairman of that commission will get to work to try to clean up the pollution around here, because it is a rather ridiculous situation when my own constituents, living by Lake Ontario here, cannot even go in for a swim in the lake or use the lovely beaches that are around this city.

Finally, my last word of congratulation is to the leader of my own party and the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost). Some of the things that I am about to say tonight are going to be rather critical of government policy in some respects, but they are, in the main, rather petty and minor criticisms. On the whole, I am proud to be associated with the party that I am, and with the government—especially when it is under the guidance of the present hon. Prime Minister of this province.

No matter what one's political bias is, it must be recognized that it is a tribute from the people of this province—a tremendous tribute, I think—to re-elect a man as Prime Minister who has been in this House so long.

and who has guided the policies of this province so long. It is a tremendous vote of confidence in him personally, as well as in his policies.

One last word of congratulations, and that is to all of the hon. members of this House, on either side, on being elected or on being re-elected. No matter what their political affiliation is, it is only after they have been in this House, for a little while, that they realize some of the sacrifices that people in politics do make today to be here.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister has asked for some words, or perhaps even some counsel, from the hon. members of this House in regard to a proposal for a pension. I am a fairly new member in the House. If it does come about, it will not affect me for awhile. But I certainly think that a pension for the hon. members in this House is worthwhile and long overdue, and I am glad to hear that something is going to be done about this.

But, perhaps there is something even more urgent and, as a member from the city of Toronto here, I feel free to speak about this because it does not affect me. I think the hon. members of this House who have to leave their homes to come down here to a session are entitled to extra living expenses, over and above the expenses that they now receive.

In the province of Manitoba, I am told, there is a living expense of $10 a day for those members who have to reside away from their homes while the session is on.

I would hope, if this matter of pensions or indemnities—or anything along that line—is looked at by the government or by the hon. members of this House, that it would be agreed that the hon. members of this House who come from outside Toronto are certainly entitled to an extra expense allowance for coming down here. It is rather unfair not to have it.

I have the privilege of going home every night and having dinner in my own home, with my own family. I do not have these hotel expenses. I think it is a rather unfair situation where I have that advantage, and presumably the costs of it are a lot less than living in a hotel or living away from home.

There is one other thing, while I am on the subject of the general membership of this House, Mr. Speaker, and that concerns the facilities and amenities in this building for the hon. members. I believe that there should be better facilities here for one to interview and see and speak to one's constituents. The rooms in this building for the hon. members of the Legislature, I think, are totally inadequate for the job that we are now doing, and the job that is going to be expected of us in the future—whenever the members of this House are going to be.

As well, on the subject of the dining room, I think it is sloppy food, it is poorly served and it is in dingy surroundings. Quite frankly, I would feel ashamed to invite a constituent down here to have dinner or luncheon with me in that dining room, and I do not think it is something that we should put up with.

Well, now that I have the congratulations over with, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I had expected that the highlights of this session were going to be labour and liquor. The Gordon committee report has come along and cast its shadow over the subject matter of this session. I know there is another debate in progress in which I could stand up and give my views, but I do want to add my nickel's worth on this matter right now.

I am glad, I was very glad, to hear, at the time, that this committee was set up, because I think this is a problem, not only in Ontario but right across Canada—provincial governments as well as the federal government. It is a problem in the United States. It is certainly a problem in Britain.

Wherever there is a parliamentary form of government in the western world today, the problems of commissions and boards, and how much actual work can be done by members in a Parliament, or in a legislative assembly, are vast, and I do not think there has been any real solution or answer to this problem yet forthcoming.

The problem of balancing responsibility with delegation, as far as the members are concerned in the field of government today, where the role of government has become so complex and confusing and complicated, is something that has not been resolved. So I was glad to hear of the appointment of this committee, because it at least indicates to me that the government realizes that that problem is here.

Now, whether the Gordon committee report is an answer to that problem is something that we may differ on. But obviously, serious consideration in this jurisdiction is being given to the problem, and it is an opportunity for Ontario once more to pioneer in something.

I think the writers of the Gordon report have fallen into the old law-school lecturer's trap of classifying a great many of these boards as either "administrative" or "judicial."

This does not completely cover the field because my definition of a judicial board, or a judicial commission, is one which decides rights or brings into question the rights of citizens. There are some boards or commissions in this province which have to be a means of placing government policies before the people, and at the same time they decide rights, so presumably they are judicial.

I do not know what the answers to these things are, but perhaps, as an example of the problem, I could use the much-maligned liquor licence board.

In the Gordon report, I have read, for the first time, of the intrusion of government policy in regard to the granting of certain types of liquor licences. Presumably, government policy has been laid down to the liquor licence board that certain types of licences will not be granted in certain areas. This, I think, is a correct way of doing things, because ultimately it is the government that is responsible to the people for these policies.

But if we are going to call some of these boards "judicial", and they do decide rights, then the question of an appeal to the courts comes up. I hope that one of the fundamentals of common law in this jurisdiction is that there shall be no discrimination among citizens. All are equal before the court. All are equal in the eyes of the law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I put this proposition to you. Suppose, rightly or wrongly, the government has decided that there shall be no more of a certain type of liquor licence in a given area. There already are some licence-holders there, but for reasons of policy, with which I think we can all agree, they decide there should be no more licences granted in that area, and the government presumably conveys their decision to the judicial body, to the liquor licence board.

There could not possibly be an appeal to the court from that decision if a man came before that board and wanted another licence because, as I say, in the eyes of the law, all are equal.

If a man across the street has the same facilities for a liquor licence as somebody on the other side of the street has, who already has a licence, how can the decision to turn down that man be appealed to the court? It cannot be, because the courts rightly would take the view that there should be no discrimination. They would say that if this man has the same facilities he should be granted the licence.

This is a problem that I do not think the Gordon committee has come to grips with. I do not know what the answer is myself.

Perhaps the answer is that there should be a closer liaison between the government and some of these boards.

A suggestion has been made that there should be no Ministers of the Crown on some of these commissions. I am not so sure I agree with that. I think perhaps there should be either more Ministers of the Crown or more members of this Legislature who sit on those commissions so that there would be a closer liaison—and a clearly delegated line of communication—for government policy to be placed before that commission. Also, it would insure that the member of that commission would be responsible to this body for decisions that, undoubtedly in the past, have been made in the name of government policy.

Now, what those decisions have been we do not know because, unfortunately, a great many of these boards and commissions that do decide these things give no reason for their decision. This, Mr. Speaker, is inherently wrong.

In all cases, there should be a reason for the decision of any of these judicial or quasi-judicial boards, even if that decision is based on government policy. I say this because, otherwise, we can come to the position where there can be rumours of skulduggery and bribes and corruption.

There is no sense in kidding ourselves that those rumours have not flown around and, in particular, in regard to the liquor licence board. If the liquor licence board had to give reasons for their decisions, I think it would clear the air a great deal—not only the liquor licence board, but just about all boards and commissions.

At the moment, no matter what category these boards or commissions fall into with their decisions, I think they should have to give their reasons for their decisions in writing in all cases—administrative, judicial, quasi-judicial, or call them what we may. The citizen is entitled to know why his request was turned down, no matter what that request may have been for.

I would like to say a few things, now that I have introduced the subject of the liquor licence commission, on government policy on liquor in this province. I do so, Mr. Speaker, in the knowledge that I did not attend a political meeting in the general election in which the subject of liquor, and the government's liquor policy, did not come up.

I speak now of urban areas, as I have no knowledge at all of thoughts on this matter, or of public opinion, in the rural areas. I think I do know what is going on, not only in my own city, but in some other urban areas as well.

I think I have been returned to this House with the idea in mind that I am to represent public opinion in my riding. In doing so, I think what I am about to say reflects public opinion in a great many of the urban areas of this province.

Now, other than Miss Judy LaMarsh, I do not think anybody really seriously wants beer sold in grocery stores. I think there have been a great many criticisms from the other side, although no concrete examples have been given as to what they would do on the liquor question if they were in power, except perhaps by Miss LaMarsh.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Let us hear the hon. member's policy, because we have been sitting here for a long time, and have not heard it yet.

Mr. Lawrence: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that one has to go back too far in the history of this province to see what a mess government policy was in regard to beer and liquor. One only has to go back to the last time my hon. friends opposite were in power.

Mr. Whicher: We ought to hear about the mess. What was the mess?

Mr. Lawrence: No matter what petty criticisms we now have—and let us be fair about this—in the main, the fabric of government policy on liquor today is pretty sound. It is pretty sound indeed, especially when one thinks of the mess that this whole policy was in when my hon. friends opposite were in power.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): What mess?

Mr. Lawrence: I have some criticisms of our policy but I want to make this clear, Mr. Speaker, that, in the main, they are petty criticisms. They are minor criticisms because no one yet—or no responsible person, in any event—has come forward to say that there should not be government control of the retail selling of liquor in this province. At least I have not heard it, and I do not think my hon. friends opposite will disagree with that.

Undoubtedly this is a government monopoly and should remain a government monopoly. That is the general philosophy and the general principle, I believe, behind this government's policy. As I say, I do have some criticisms.

The first criticism was mentioned this afternoon in a question that was obviously out of order, from the other side, in regard to liquor permits. I can see no reason, Mr. Speaker, for the continuance of liquor permits in this province. None whatsoever.

Mr. Whicher: Why did he not ask the hon. commissioner that question?

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That is what he is doing now.

Mr. MacDonald: Give him credit. There are very few—

Mr. Lawrence: The only argument I have heard for the continuance of the liquor permit policy, in this province, is that, in some rural areas, it does act as a bar against those who have abused the privilege of being able to buy liquor in this province when that permit is taken away. I do not feel that this is a valid argument for retaining what must be an expensive system, expensive not only as far as the administration is concerned, but expensive, also, in the printing of those liquor permits.

I think this is something that could very easily be done away with, because one needs no permit in order to walk into a bar in this province. If one gets his permit taken away, he can still go down on Yonge Street, in my riding, and get drunk, even though he does not have that permit.

Mr. Grossman: One does not have to get drunk.

Mr. Lawrence: One does not have to get drunk, no. But in any event, if that is the only argument that is put up for the retention of liquor permits, certainly in the urban areas in any event, I feel it has no validity whatsoever.

The next criticism I have of the liquor policy, Mr. Speaker, is that of advertising in this province. Now, if we were a continent of our own, or a country of our own, if we were in Greenland, if we were in Iceland, if we were in Australia—

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member is in Frostland.

Mr. Lawrence: —completely isolated from communication with the rest of the world, I might have very serious doubts in regard to permitting liquor or beer advertising in this province. However, we are not. We are not in that fortunate position.

Here in Toronto, most of my constituents, I am told, when they turn the television set on, turn on American stations. There we can see liquor ads and beer ads every night of the week.

The rather ridiculous "public service advertisements" in the buses across this province, in the streetcars and in the subway, do not make sense. They are no more public service advertisements than are election posters, Mr. Speaker, and they can by no stretch of the imagination be termed "public service advertisements," at least not in my mind.

Mr. Grossman: He had better leave something for the Opposition—

Mr. Lawrence: As well, the newspapers of this city and this province—and the magazines of this province—use a legal loophole to get around the publishing of liquor ads and the acceptance of liquor ads. We get this liquor advertising in any event, that is the point. We cannot keep it out. It is outside our jurisdiction.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my conclusion is that, if we cannot keep it out, let us allow it in, so that at least we have some control over it here in the province.

There is another matter in regard to the hotel and tourist industry, much of which is based in my riding. Other jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, allow liquor to be served in rooms in hotels. Now, some of the hotels in this city especially—and in my riding especially—in the last 3 years have been hard pressed to make ends meet. I am informed that other jurisdictions have met this problem of allowing the service of liquor in rooms.

I do not know whether it is a good thing or not, but I have been told by many in the tourist industry, and by many in the hotel industry, that this is a factor that is drawing some conventions away from the city of Toronto and is keeping tourists away.

If that is so, then I would urge that the government give consideration to at least a look into this problem. I do not know whether it is a good thing or not, I have not made up my own mind on it, but the hotel and tourist industry is not on the sound, stable basis that it was a few years ago, especially the hotel industry. So, consideration should be given to this point.

Another matter here in Toronto is that we are still plagued with bootleggers. I know that this is news to most of the hon. members of this assembly. I am wondering again if the government has given consideration to keeping a liquor store open in the city of Toronto to 11 o'clock at night, a single store.

It works very well in Quebec city, I am informed, and it works very well in Montreal.

We have some of the suburban stores now open on Thursday and Friday nights until 9 o'clock and I think that is a very sound move. I do feel, however, that a store in the central area of the city could very well be kept open until 11 o'clock every night and, if this was done, I certainly think this would do a great deal to destroy what remaining bootleggers there are in this city.

I am still in the congratulation stage.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the congratulation stage, I would like to commend the hon. Minister of Labour for having inserted in the speech from the Throne words concerning proposed legislation regarding employment agencies.

As a lawyer who has had some small experience, in the last couple of years, trying to work under federal legislation to prosecute some of these employment agencies which are gouging employees in the matter of fees for obtaining employment for them, I welcome the projected legislation, no matter what it is, which the hon. Minister of Labour is going to bring forth.

This is a field which the federal government entered, then found they did not have the constitutional jurisdiction to be in that field. So, I am glad to see that the hon. Minister of Labour is picking up this particular aspect of that.

There is another matter, Mr. Speaker, while I am talking about federal matters, and about labour matters, that I would urge the hon. Minister of Labour to take under consideration with his opposite number at Ottawa, and that is the question of import capital, coming into this country, mainly from the United States.

I refer to the import capital which sets up a completely different legal entity, a new corporation. This is a growing tendency on the part of American capital coming into this province that is very worrisome, and it is extremely harsh on the unions involved.

I can give hon. members an example in my own riding. The J. and J. Taylor Safe Company, Mr. Speaker, is a very old and very reputable safe company. If hon. members go around the offices of this building they will find that most of the safes here have been built and installed by the J. and J. Taylor Safe Company, an old family concern, an old Canadian firm.

During the last few years, due to questionable management, this firm has been slowly sliding downhill. The operators of a very large, almost a monopoly, concern in the United States, namely, the Mosler Safe Company, were quick to realize the possibilities and the potentialities of using the assets and the reputation of the J. and J. Taylor Safe Company.

Instead of coming up here in the normal way, and either buying the shares or buying the company outright, Mr. Speaker, these rather slick operators instead formed a new corporation. They now call it, I believe, the Mosler-Taylor Company, or Mosler-Taylor Safe Corporation—I am not too sure.

But, in any event, they have built a spanking new factory in the riding of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis).

They undoubtedly have brought needed capital into this country, I am not denying that for a minute. It is capital which we need. But I certainly do not approve of their methods because, while they set up this new company—this new corporation—they had assigned to it all of the assets of the old company. Mark you, only the assets, not the liabilities, only the assets. As well, they have taken over the key management personnel in this new company.

Now, what happens to the old J. and J. Taylor Safe Company? It is being allowed to wither on the vine. Nothing is happening to it. It is just sitting there, and the employees of that company, some of whom had been working for that company for 32 years, were given two days' notice.

Here was a company which had a strong union and a good union. Here was a company which, with the full approval of that union, had set up a pension fund for the employee. It was not a funded pension fund. That is where the union went wrong undoubtedly. It is easy to have hindsight on these matters. Nobody could see this at the time.

It was not a funded trust fund at all for these pensioners. A great many of the older employees were out on pension. They thought their rights were safeguarded, and why not?

They had a strong bargaining agreement, a strong collective bargaining agreement and a good union and a company which, up until then, had been a good company. Most of the employees were older men, specialists in their line. The majority of the employees were over 50 years of age, as a matter of fact.

On two days' notice, they were kicked out into the street. Why? Because the old J. and J. Taylor Safe Company now had no more assets. They were booted out, and the shell of the company is still sitting down there rotting.

No provision was made whatsoever for the old employees, all of them now without work. All of them are a charge on the Canadian taxpayer and the provincial taxpayer, while the new management has come into this country, set up a new plant and is hiring new employees.

Presumably the union is getting in there, presumably they are going to set up a pension fund and bargain collectively on behalf of the employees.

But the point is this: The union for the old employees, at the old company, has absolutely no means of redress, no way whatsoever of enforcing their employees' pension rights, and these people are out in the street. Why? Because it is not the old company that has been refinanced.

This is not an isolated example, by any means, Mr. Speaker, and I know the hon. Minister of Labour is concerned about it. It is happening more and more frequently.

I was informed the other day by some labour people that it has happened in at least 6 cases in the last 4 months in southern Ontario.

Here we have a problem that is outside the jurisdiction of this government. It is an international problem, undoubtedly. We do not have the power to stop this import capital from coming in. Perhaps we wish that we did have the power, but we do need this capital.

Surely, if we are going to allow these people to bring their money into this country, to make money out of this country, surely we also have the right to put some restrictions on the way in which they bring it in and in which they set up these new corporations.

One of those restrictions, I would suggest, should be that we make the new corporation not only take over the assets of the old company, but the liabilities as well, because presumably these union agreements, these pension rights and other things, are liabilities.

There is mention in the speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, of the ever-recurring problem of federal-provincial relations. This problem has plagued us, I should think, and by that I mean the people of this country, ever since about 1900. Up until that time the marvellous framework that had been devised in The British North America Act, by the fathers of Confederation, had worked, and it had worked extremely well.

I was rather disappointed to hear the hon. Prime Minister the other day say that, in the next submission to the federal government on behalf of the province, no part of that submission would concern any amendment to The British North America Act.

I firmly feel that it is about time a very, very full conference was held exclusively with the idea of amending The British North America Act. I think the situation we have had, for the last 25 years, of having provincial Treasurers and provincial Premiers make their trek, about every 5 years, or every 3 years, up to Ottawa, hat in hand, is a disgraceful one. It should not be necessary. This has gone on under Conservative governments and has gone on under Liberal governments, and it has gone on under UFO governments and every kind of government. It has gone on under governments of every political complexion.

I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come for a demand for a complete overhaul of The British North America Act, and the other Acts which make up the constitution of this country, so that a complete new distribution can be made of governmental jurisdictions here in Canada.

The federal system, if we want it to continue, must be bolstered, and it must be bolstered by a complete review of the taxing powers and of the jurisdictions of the various governments in this country.

One other matter I wanted to bring up was the question of Metro Toronto versus, presumably, amalgamation.

Now, my hon. friends opposite seem to be in some sort of doubt as to what policy they are going to come out with. The hon. leader of the Opposition blows very hot one day, favouring outright amalgamation, while the next leader of the Liberal party comes along—the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer)—and blows hot favouring Metro.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to realize that the policy of the government is to keep this development in a very flexible position. Undoubtedly, the Metro system, as it is now set up, is not the answer. It is not the end all and the be all. There is duplication, there is inefficiency, there is waste in Metro, undoubtedly. Even the proponents of Metro, under the present system, will admit that.

On the other hand, some of the suburban members of Metro have raised such a political storm about amalgamation, and their fears of amalgamation, that they have almost convinced me. Perhaps amalgamation is not the answer in any event.

Undoubtedly, we would be in a very, very bad position here in Toronto if it had not been for Metro and the Metro system. I think, in its place and in its time, it was a very worthy answer to a great many problems. But some of these problems are still with us. This is an evolving thing. It is a pioneering thing, and I do not think anybody at this stage of the game can come along and say Metro is the answer, or amalgamation is the answer.

I would suggest that we have reached the next stage in this evolution. I would suggest that, in the Metro set-up, we are just about ready for direct representation to Metro. By that, I mean a divorce of the constituent municipalities and their representation on the Metro council. I would suggest that consideration be given so that a "ward" system now be set up for the Metro area, and members be elected for those wards directly to the Metro council.

I am no expert on this, I have had no municipal experience whatsoever, unlike a great many of the hon. members in this House. But I do think that the time has now come for us to give another very close, and very searching, look to the duplication of effort that exists in the Metro set-up as it now stands.

I am going to refer, Mr. Speaker, to another matter.

At the beginning of my speech I did not congratulate, as is customary, the hon. mover (Mr. Davis), and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman), of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne.

I thought their speeches were well worthwhile and covered some very good points. I have kept my congratulations on that matter to the very end, because I was disturbed to see some rather carping criticisms in some organs of our daily press in regard to speeches of the hon. members in this House, and the reading of speeches in this House, and the reading of statements and the reading of questions.

I do not think that is a bad thing whatsoever, I think it is a good thing. I think, perhaps, I should read the speech that I give, and perhaps I would not ramble all over the lot the way I do.

But I just wonder if the main reason for the reading of speeches, by some of the hon. members in this House, has been brought to the attention of the members of the press gallery. It is mainly on the basis that, if we do make a speech off-the-cuff, we find we are misquoted, and weirdly misquoted sometimes, by the press.

I would say that if some of the members of the press gallery want to see a lessening of the reading of speeches in this House, then they should be a little bit sharper with their shorthand, so that we do not pick up the newspaper the next day and find that our words have been grossly misquoted and misrepresented in some cases.

That is the end of my congratulatory speech, Mr. Speaker, with one further subject.

At the beginning of—perhaps I should call this a lecture, not a speech—at the beginning of my sermon, I mentioned what I thought were rather disgraceful scenes in this House, and I meant it. I am a new member here, I have not been here as long as most of the hon. members. But I must say that I have seen more decorum and dignity in a great many high school and a great many college debates than one sometimes sees in this House, and this afternoon was no exception.

Presumably, Mr. Speaker, we have rules of order in this House. I am going to be a nuisance to you, Mr. Speaker, for the rest of the session, because I am going to try my utmost to learn a little bit more about those rules and what they stand for.

One hon. member described those on the Treasury benches this afternoon, as “those Scrooges on the front benches.” Whether it be “Scrooges on the front benches” or whether it is the back benches or whether it is anybody else, I am going to try to make it my crusade to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, whenever an hon. member is out of order. Certainly we have seen enough examples of that just this afternoon.

I am sorry if it appears that I may be picking on the hon. member for York South, but this afternoon, for instance, there were a number of occasions which did not add to the dignity and the decorum of this House when he was clearly out of order in his references to speeches and his references to persons. Yet he, when asked, would give no dates or from what he was quoting or even the names of the people concerned in some cases.

This does not add to the dignity or the decorum of this House. One of the things that is a detriment in that hon. member I think, Mr. Speaker, is that he goes off on some of these personal attacks sometimes, and that in turn only gives the people on this side of the House an opportunity to reply in kind. This merely muddies the water, and his original point, or his original charge, is forgotten. Some of them are very able presentations, except for this tendency to make personal attacks.

I think it is a deplorable thing, it should not be allowed. I do not care whether he is the leader of the CCF, the leader of the Opposition, or the leader of the government party, the Speaker of the House, sir, should step on him, and step on him hard in these instances. By that I do not mean the give-and-take, the good natured bantering in most cases, that goes across the floor of the House, which normally takes place, I think, in every democratic Parliament.

I think this give-and-take is a good thing, I enjoy it myself as long as you, Mr. Speaker, keep control of the assembly and do not let the matter get out of hand. But I think, in the last few years—and certainly in the last session and in this session—we all ought to be rather ashamed of ourselves, because it has not looked good from the galleries. I know, I have gone up there to sit and watch some of it.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, there are those things, and just as a continuation of this thing for instance, the sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for York South this afternoon I think is clearly out of order. The sub-amendment speaks of this House or this government as having “countenanced widespread political patronage.”

Now, there is an innuendo, there is a smear on all of those who are on this side of the House. It comes forward with no specific reference. It does not name dates, name times, name anything else, it is just a wide innuendo—that there is widespread political patronage, as far as the government is concerned. That is the type of thing that I do not feel is worthy under the rules of this House, and should not be allowed.

I would, Mr. Speaker, ask you to take under consideration whether or not the sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for York South is in order on this ground.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in this debate, perhaps I should first address a few of my remarks to the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence).

I have known the hon. gentleman for quite some time. I listened with great interest to his remarks, particularly when he seemed to have some doubt about who is leading the party on this side of the House.

Let me make it abundantly clear for his information—and for the information of anyone else who is interested—we have one hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer), and we are all behind him, and he is going to lead us to victory in the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the other hon. members to compliment you on your selection for this post, and I feel certain that you will pay close attention to the admonitions just given you by the hon. member for St. George, and pay attention to the way he thinks the House should be run.

As I sat here and listened, I think I have learned quite a bit from just watching the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) in action. Certainly as I listen to him I recognize in him a man of very substantial ability, and I understand—

Applause.

Mr. Singer: The hon. members may well clap, and I think they should, because the reason that most of them are here is because they have clung so closely to the hon. Prime Minister's coattails in the past few elections.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Well, that is where the hon. member's failure is.

Mr. Singer: I do, however, fail to understand some of the remarks that the hon. Prime Minister has made concerning a previous government.

It may be that governments that represented my party in days gone by have made some mistakes. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that a government known as the Ferguson government, which was in this province some years ago, made some mistakes. It may be that a government known as the Henry government made some mistakes. It certainly is, as the hon. Prime Minister said the other day and admitted even on that side of the House, that this government makes lots of mistakes.

I think the affairs of this province would be advanced to a very great extent if the government concerned itself about what is happening in 1960, and forward, rather than what happened 20 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I note, as I have gone through Hansard of previous years, that it is customary to talk about one's own riding and so, for a few moments, I would like to tell hon. members something about the part of Metropolitan Toronto that I have the great privilege of representing.

My township, the township of North York, the township described in The Municipal Act as a rural area, consists of some 70 square miles—

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I thought the hon. member came from York Centre.

Mr. Singer: My riding is the riding of York Centre. If the hon. Minister will just bear with me, I will explain it so that even the hon. Minister can understand it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I figure that we have that in common. If I can understand it, the hon. member will.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to continue without the heckling from the cheap seats?

The township consists of some 70 square miles in area. It runs from the Humber River on the west to Victoria Park Avenue on the east, from Steeles Avenue on the north to the southerly boundaries which are the northerly boundaries of York township and Forest Hill village in the city of Toronto and East York township.

It is an area that was incorporated as a municipality in 1922, and, at that time, had a population of some 6,000. At the end of the war its population had grown to some 25,000 and today it has a population of some 250,000.

I share the honour, along with the hon. member for York East (Mr. Beckett), of representing that township. I represent the portion to the west of Yonge Street and he represents the portion to the east of Yonge Street, and some other portions of the metropolitan area.

I think it is of some substantial importance, Mr. Speaker, as we have talked in recent days about democratic principles such as are outlined in the Gordon report, that we perhaps pay a little attention to one democratic principle that is not mentioned there. I refer to the idea of representation by population.

It is rather interesting to note, from the figures that were recently released, that there is a population of 1.5 million in the Metropolitan Toronto area. There is a population of some 6 million in this province of ours.

There are 98 seats in this House. If, by any chance, we were following the idea of representation by population, the Metropolitan area should have about 25 seats. It has, in fact, 19.

Then look at the distribution, Mr. Speaker, for a moment of those 19 seats. The city of Toronto has 13 of those seats and the suburbs have 6. The population in the city of Toronto is about 650,000 and the population in the suburban areas is about 880,000. Therefore, with 200,000 more people in the suburbs, we have less than half of the representation in the city of Toronto.

Now surely, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when the government should recognize that the citizens in my township and my riding are not third-class citizens or second-class citizens, but are entitled to representation by population, as is the right of every person in this province.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister, in his remarks the other day, spoke to us about The Municipal Act and indicated that, notwithstanding the fact that The Municipal Act had its basis in The Baldwin Act which was passed 110 years ago, he really did not feel that it was that old. It has been changed from time to time.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the changes that took place were little plugs in the gaps in the wall, from time to time, which became obvious, and that the Act is out of date, and it is long overdue for the sort of revision that we have been talking about.

The best example is the township that I have just been speaking about. Here we have a municipality of 250,000 people that is described as a township and in this book—and this is The Municipal Act—in this book it is treated as a rural municipality.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, it is that not what the hon. member wants? He gets better grants that way.

Mr. Singer: Well now, just a moment, Mr. Speaker. I think the time has long since passed that grants should be determined by the title that has arbitrarily been assigned, to a municipality, by some geographical accident that happened 25 or 30 years ago. If there are going to be grants in this province, Mr. Speaker, the grants should be based on the basis of need, and they should not be based on a series of artificial titles that are contained in this book.

Let me read to hon. members one of the modern and up-to-date sections that is in this municipal statute—dealing with police villages.

I do not know how many hon. members of the House are aware of these sections, but these are very interesting, and this is very up to date and most important. Section 520, subsection 1, says this:

Every proprietor of a house more than one story high shall place and keep a ladder on the roof of such house near or against the principal chimney, and another ladder reaching from the ground to the roof of such a house under the penalty of $1 for every omission, and a further penalty of $2 for every week that such an omission continued.

Or subsection 2, Mr. Speaker:

Every householder shall provide himself with two buckets of water, fit for carrying water, in case of an accident by fire under a penalty of $1 for each bucket that is not provided.

And I like this one, too, subsection 5, Mr. Speaker:

No person shall enter a mill or a barn or an outhouse or a stable with a lighted candle or a lamp unless it is well enclosed, nor with a lighted pipe or a cigar, nor with fire not properly secured under penalty of $1.

Mr. Speaker, this is the Act that is being suggested to us as modern and up to date, and that deals with the municipal problems of the province today.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Was it less up to date in 1940?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I hear one of the hon. Ministers over there asking whether it was less up to date in 1940.

Let me say this, and perhaps this will end these references back, I do not know—probably it is a vain hope that the government hon. members will listen. I do not think that the people of this province are concerned with what government did in 1940. They disposed of those governments, as they will dispose of this government in the next election. What they are concerned with, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what the hon. member said last time.

Mr. Singer: I was not here last time, but I am here this time. Will the choir please quieten down?

Mr. Speaker, I think it is most important that this government should consider what is happening in 1960, from February 9 forward, and in 1961 and the years to come. It should not spend so much time, and so much valuable effort, that could be better spent running the affairs of this province, by looking into what happened 20 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Throne speech—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has dismissed, with the usual wave of the hand, the suggestion that has been put forward of having a select committee to sit down and study this Act, to draft it and rewrite it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have a better method.

Mr. Singer: Well, the hon. Prime Minister may have, but as yet we have not heard it.

Some hon. members: Oh, no. Oh, no.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister suggests that he brought in those two very able gentlemen, Messrs. Cumming and Yates—and I agree with him that they are very able gentlemen—to do just this sort of job.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that sort of ability has long been overdue in The Department of Municipal Affairs, and those two gentlemen are going to have a busy enough time setting those affairs properly in order to get the municipalities under good control, even under this Act.

Mr. Speaker, had the department had the time to examine the auditor's report that arrived from the municipality of Belleville, with the comments of the auditor a year or more before the investigation arose, the investigation might not have been necessary.

The answer that came forward from that department, Mr. Speaker, was that there are 977 municipalities in Ontario, and we really have not the time to look at every auditor's report, and the one they should have caught they missed. So let Mr. Cumming and Mr. Yates get into the reason why it was missed, and set that department in proper order, but let us get this Act properly written.

Mr. Speaker, there are people with very substantial ability and experience in this province. I think that the government could well consult such people as Professor Curtis, Professor Crawford, and Eric Hardy, and put those people to work if we have other jobs for Messrs. Cumming and Yates. I do not think we could add two better people to the list, I am suggesting, than Mr. Cumming and Mr. Yates, to sit down and start to work on this, together with a select committee that is going to listen to the municipalities and listen to their views.

There was nothing wrong, Mr. Speaker, in setting up a select committee of this House to undertake the very complicated job of rewriting The Companies Act. I think most lawyers in the House will agree that that was a job well done.

It was a job done by a select committee. If a select committee was able to wrestle with that complicated job, I think it could do even better with the job of rewriting this Act.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has said that he blushing refers to the 1958 report of the Ontario mayors and reeves association, or to certain sections of it. He suggested to me, and I agreed with him, that this is a good association. It is made up of some of the finest people in the province of Ontario—

Applause.

Mr. Singer: I was a member of that association, I attended its sessions in 1957 and in 1958 and, Mr. Speaker, I well remember the sessions in 1957. They took place in Chatham, just a few months before the federal election of that year.

It was as a result of the resolutions that were passed, at that meeting of the association, that these submissions were prepared and submitted to the government in January, 1958.

It is interesting to note that, at that time, the president of the association was that very able gentleman, then his worship Mayor Bobby Simpson of Amproir. He had a substantial role to play in the writing of these submissions. I think very highly of him, and the government does too. They have since appointed him to the Ontario water resources commission.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member take any part in writing it?

Mr. Singer: No, I was not consulted.

These submissions were written by the executive of that time, and I well remember the tone of that meeting.

The tone of that meeting on May of 1957, on the eve of the federal election, was set by Bobby Simpson, the president, and two or three others, none of whom were known for their animosity to my hon. friends opposite, but who did have a certain animosity to the government of the day in Ottawa. They had a responsible part in writing these submissions.

But let me read just a little bit beyond, Mr. Speaker, what the hon. Prime Minister referred to.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Now, let the hon. member remember that he has already said that it was a biased report.

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. Oh, no—I am just going to read it. Let the hon. member be patient for just a minute, and let us see what this says. At page 9 of the report it says:

It is indeed gratifying to realize—this, remember, is early in January, 1958, —that the impasse between the federal, provincial, and municipal governments has been removed and the way has been opened for substantial agreement between the federal and provincial governments, which places the government of Ontario in a position to give greater consideration to the plight of municipalities and which will alleviate the financial position of the municipalities to a very considerable extent.

It is the hope of this association that the pending adjustment of the federal-provincial fiscal relations is just around the corner. It will enable the government of the province to bring about a still further adjustment of the remaining inequities in the municipal position.

And then, on page 10, it goes on to say:

After the conclusion of the federal-provincial conferences—that were just about to take place, —for the adjustments of fiscal relations between those governments, the association respectfully urges that the government of Ontario hold a plenary conference between the representatives of the province and the representatives of the municipalities to clarify and clearly redefine provincial-municipal relationships and financial responsibility.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps some of the authors of this report might have been caught up in the vision of a promised land—a lot of vision. Perhaps there was some reason for it because hon. members will recall, Mr. Speaker, that a meeting took place in Massey Hall on April 25, 1957, and the hon. gentleman who is now the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), had this to say at that meeting:

We believe there can be no national unity in this nation until there is a realization that the federal and provincial matters have handcuffed the provinces of this nation, have denied the municipalities adequate sources of revenue, have placed the provinces and the municipalities in a position where they cannot discharge their constitutional responsibility of permitting the necessary development in their own territorial confines of the natural resources that are there. We believe that the provinces must have sufficient resources to carry out these responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Frost: This is a good speech.

Mr. Singer: Now, that is the problem—that was the problem, Mr. Speaker—as enunciated by the now Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, and this is what he said he intended to do.

We intend to form a government to immediately convene a Dominion-provincial conference to bring about a settlement of these problems, not in the spirit of arrogant domination displayed by the present government, but in a spirit of unity and amity with mutual tolerance and respect.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not hard to understand how some of this vision of the promised land found its way into this 1958 submission.

But, Mr. Speaker, how could those people have known what really was going to happen? They really could not see into the future, nor could they have had the privilege, at the time they were drafting this report, of listening to what the hon. Finance Minister of Canada (Mr. Fleming) was going to say on October 15, 1959.

Reading from the Toronto Globe and Mail of that date, I find that Finance Minister Fleming is quoted as follows:

He told the 10 provincial Treasurers that the present arrangements of dividing, with the provinces, return from income and corporation tax and succession duties would stand until the expiration of the present agreement on March 31, 1962.

Mr. Speaker, some of the enchantment and vision, I suggest, that was there in 1958 had worn a little thin by 1959, when this submission was made.

I lost track, Mr. Speaker, of the two reports the hon. Prime Minister tabled. He tabled two—one dated 1958 and one dated 1959—but there are two in 1959, and I am going to come to the third one in a moment. This one is dated February 18, 1959.

In this report, the second one which is the result of the 1958 meeting, and was presented to the government early in 1959, the enchantment is not quite as elaborate as it was in the 1958 report. I am going to read these because I do not think they will embarrass the hon. Prime Minister nearly as much as the other quotations embarrassed him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The honeymoon was over then, and it was not Niagara Falls either.

Mr. Singer: To find these same flattering sentiments, we have to turn, not to page 1, in the first 4 paragraphs but to page 5, the last page of this submission. The third paragraph from the end of the submission says only this:

The association appreciates greatly the understanding which was extended by the government of Ontario to the municipalities of this province, and is grateful for the increased provincial assistance which it has made on the municipal level, but respectfully urges that it examine such a system for present and future years in light of these representations.

What takes number one place are the first 4 pages, and I am not going to bore the House by reading too many sections out of this report. But just let me read a bit here from the bottom of page 2, Mr. Speaker.

The municipalities are not the designers of social measure. They do not take any significant part in drafting such measures over the provincial or national field.

Social and health measures of necessity must emanate from broader fields of provincial and federal governments, and the satisfactory implementation of such services must be carried out by these two levels of government without any residual part of the cost being hoisted upon the municipal level of government.

Municipalities must be removed from the position of being forced to assist federal and provincial governments through payments for the cost of social services, and municipal tax resources must be relieved of the crushing cost of education.

Further on in the same page, and underlined in this submission, Mr. Speaker—undoubtedly the underlining is to emphasize this point.

It is startling, and most significant, to realize that while provincial grants for general municipal purposes, taken as a percentage of general municipal expenditures, have increased by 4.34 per cent. between 1948 and 1957, the provincial grant for education, taken as a percentage as a total cost of education, has decreased by 5.17 per cent. during the same 10-year period.

Then it goes on to say:

While the association appreciates the increased provincial subsidies, it is an unfortunate fact that, in each succeeding year since 1948, the municipal taxpayer's dollar has been spent less and less on basic services and more and more on education, entirely because provincial grants for education are not keeping pace with the increasing costs of education.

Well then, there is a third report.

I want to make sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister was brought completely up to date. This, I understand, is the latest one. This is the one that came in on December 2, 1959, and may have been one of the documents that the hon. Prime Minister tabled.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is still there.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Will the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Singer: No. By the time, Mr. Speaker, this third report had been submitted, the exuberance is still a little less obvious and the praise still a little less glowing. It is found, just in a few lines, on page 2.

The association willingly and gratefully acknowledges that much has been done by the federal and provincial governments toward alleviating the cost borne by municipalities—

Applause.

Mr. Singer: Just wait for the applause until I am through—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Speak up, speak up. Put a little life into it.

Mr. Singer: I continue to read:

—however, the association still stands on the principle that the municipalities have in no way been the creators of social welfare measures designed for the nation as a whole, and should not be left to pay the deficit caused by insufficient payments of the federal and provincial governments.

Social and health measures must emanate from the broader fields of federal and provincial governments, and satisfactory implementation of such measures must be carried out by those two levels of government without any residual part of the cost being borne at the municipal level.

Revenues of the federal and provincial governments and of the municipalities have been increasing steadily since World War II. The expenditures have been increasing just as steadily, but there is one major difference. Federal and provincial tax rates have remained steady while municipal tax rates have been rising greatly, and it is quite obvious why this has had to take place. It is because the grants for education are not nearly sufficiently high enough to enable the municipalities to take care of this most serious problem.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Will the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Singer: I will have a question-and-answer period with the hon. Minister in a little while. I have a lot more things to say that he is going to be interested in.

Mr. Speaker, the crux of this municipal-provincial problem certainly is understood and recognized by these fine people who make up this association and, year after year, the same type of representations have been made and we still have the same type of an Act, and we still have the same type of an inadequate grant system.

The time is long overdue, Mr. Speaker, that this government tackle this problem head on and not try to just fill in a little gap here and a little gap over there. It is time that it get down to the basic root of the problem, begin to understand that we cannot just determine what the municipality will be, or get, by attaching a title to it dating back some 25 to 50 years ago.

That is the problem, to provide for growth and to provide for education. The time has come when this whole problem should be basically examined from the ground up, and it is not going to be done—or at least there has been no indication of it being done—according to the speech from the Throne.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, in listening to some of the reasons the hon. Prime Minister gave as to why his party is over there and our party is over here.

Just insofar as municipal affairs are concerned, it is significant to note that, on this side of the House, the people of Niagara Falls, Windsor, Fort William, Sudbury, North Bay, Hamilton, and the people of Toronto have not been quite as enchanted with this government's reaction to municipal affairs as the government thinks, and they have sent other people here to represent them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We cannot win them all, of course.

An hon. member: It is getting late.

Mr. Singer: That is a pretty impressive list even my hon. friends will agree. These are important municipalities in this province, and their views at long last should be paid attention to.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): His hon. leader had no policy on it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with another subject.

My hon. friend from St. George made passing reference to this, and some of the things he said I agree with, and these concern the liquor laws in the province of Ontario.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the liquor laws of Ontario can be any better described than in the words of this editorial which appeared recently in the Toronto Telegram:

THIS STUPID LAW

The farce that passes as liquor legislation in this province has been exposed over and over again. The latest demonstration is this business of obtaining cases of liquor from distilleries without the benefit of a permit. Such is the absurdity of the legislation that it is almost impossible not to violate it in one way or another.

To observe it strictly, a man should not even offer his wife a drink from the bottle he has bought. This crazy law allows only the permit holder to use his bottle, and now it is shown that even a permit is needless to obtain supplies if one knows the ropes.

The law is stupid, hypocritical, obsolete, sanctimonious, uneconomic, juvenile, ludicrous, humiliating. It is an insult to the intelligence of the people of Ontario. If there is one law on the statute books that deserves a thrashing it is this liquor legislation. It is time for the government to reform it.

These are the words, Mr. Speaker, of a journal that is not known for its unfriendly attitude to the present government.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and read all sorts of quotations from the Toronto Daily Star, from the Toronto Globe and Mail, from the North Bay—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Will the hon. member please read the Star on the subject?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I would be very happy to oblige the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Could I ask my hon friend what his policy was in the last election?

Mr. Singer: Well, if the hon. Prime Minister will be patient, we will come to these things in due course. I have a lot more material here. Just be patient.

The Toronto Daily Star—I will read the editorial since the hon. Prime Minister requested it—was dealing with the recent remarks of Prince Philip when he came to this country, and the Star, on July 4 of last year, had this to say:

Prince Philip (to Harry Allen, MPP, Middlesex South): You are one of those government fellows. When are you going to change these obsolete and old-fashioned liquor laws?

Allen: We will give it every consideration at the next session, and I am really going to try and carry out the pledge I made.

Prince Philip said he would speak to Frost. Did he? What was Mr. Frost's answer?

Clint Melville, managing director of the Ontario hotel association, said the Prince is only saying what most of the tourists say when they visit the province. He said: "We get a great many complaints from visitors about the liquor laws, how they vary from town to town, hours of sale and lack of service."

I have a Globe and Mail editorial here along the same line.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is not an editorial, that is a news item the hon. member read there, is it not?

Mr. Singer: I understand it is an editorial.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is contained in any event in the Toronto Daily Star of July 4, 1959. It is a news story, perhaps.

Mr. Speaker, it is all the more efficacious. I have extracts from the North Bay Daily Nugget, the Peterborough Examiner, the Sudbury Star, the Chatham Daily News.

The Chatham Daily News' view is the shortest that I have on these sheets, so I will just read it. On July 18, 1959, it said, in an editorial recalling that the present liquor laws were ostensibly designed to curb drinking and increase sobriety:

We are inclined to think they are ineffective. Far from promoting moderation, let alone sobriety, they seem to have the opposite effect.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to the hon. members of the House the series of articles written by a very competent journalist—at least in my opinion he is a very competent journalist—one Harold Greer. These articles appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail from November 23 to November 29, 1959. There were 6 of them.

Mr. Greer apparently undertook some 3 months of very serious, careful and intricate study of the liquor laws of this province. He says in his articles that the figures, that he ascertained, resulted in his being able to make some 15,000 different calculations to come up with some of these conclusions that he has arrived at. I am going to deal with some of the facts he deals with in these articles.

Mr. Speaker, I say that I do not know if the statements Mr. Greer has put forward here are absolutely correct, but certainly this is the most exhaustive study, that I am aware of, that has ever been undertaken in this province by anyone seriously concerned with what effect our liquor laws are having.

If there is a better study, if there is more up-to-date information, if there is more authentic information, I think it is the duty of this government to produce it and let us see it, so that we can begin to talk about it.

In the first article he says this:

Consumption in Ontario is governed almost entirely by the amount of money people have had to spend and the price they have had to pay. The number of sales outlets apparently has had no measurable effect on the amount of liquor consumed by the public at large.

Liquor advertising in Ontario, to the extent it is permitted or practiced, has little or no effect on the overall consumption.

He suggests that, while the purpose of Ontario's liquor control system is to restrain consumption, to the extent that public policy has been able to influence liquor consumption since 1927, his survey has found that it has worked to encourage, rather than to restrain, drinking.

It is likely, in other words, that the various features in Ontario's control system, which cannot be measured statistically, have actually tended to increase consumption.

On price, liquor is probably unique amongst consumer goods in that its real costs have declined over the past 30 years. The computer calculations that were made indicate that the relative cheapness has been a significant factor in increasing consumption.

The proportion of income spent on liquor is remarkably constant. In 1929 there was 3.09 per cent. of disposable income spent on liquor and, in 1958, 3.67 per cent. In the intervening years, Mr. Speaker, those figures have varied very little.

The system has failed, not because price and supply have no influence on consumption of liquor, but because they were used, whether willingly or not, to increase the rate of consumption rather than to restrain.

In his fourth article he deals with drinking and driving, and these things I think are very serious, Mr. Speaker.

In 1957, in this province, we had 1.95 million drivers over 20 years of age. Presuming, as statistics in liquor research do, that 70 per cent. of these people drink—and he gives reasons as to why he starts at 20, rather than 18 and so on—he struck a happy compromise—these 70 per cent. of drinking drivers consumed, on the average, 2.72 gallons of absolute alcohol during the year. This would be the equivalent of two shots of whisky, or two pints of beer, or 2.5 glasses of wine every day.

Mr. W. B. Common, and the hon. members of this House are very familiar with this gentleman—he is the Deputy Attorney-General—says that the more liberal attitudes of the public towards drinking, coupled with the present volume of speedy motor vehicle transportation, creates unquestionably one of the most, if not the most, important problems of law enforcement agencies today.

Hon. members will remember the grim statistics given to us just the other day by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko). In effect, they said that 3 people every day were killed on our highways in this province last year.

The result of this study, and similar studies, indicate that just a little less than a third of motor accidents somehow involve the use of liquor. So, Mr. Speaker, just about one person in Ontario is killed every day in a motor accident that involves the use of alcohol.

Much research has been done on this particular problem—the use of alcohol and its effect on driving—by such people as Dr. Leonard Goldberg of the Karoluska institute in Stockholm; by Dr. H. Ward Smith of the crime laboratory here in the province of Ontario; by Mr. R. E. Popple of the alcoholic research foundation of the province; and the works of these 3 gentlemen have become standard references in the field.

The results of their studies, and other studies, show that, for most persons, there is a threshold of impairment by alcohol on the ability to drive which begins at a level of .03 or .04 per cent. alcohol content in the blood.

On-the-ground tests have been made right here in this Toronto area, in 1951 and 1952, through the crime laboratory and through the alcoholic research foundation, with the co-operation of the metropolitan police and the local police forces. These tests show that the chances of the average driver having an accident are increased 50 per cent. when the blood contains between .05 and .10 per cent. of alcohol; by 150 per cent. when the percentage has risen to between .10 and .15 per cent.; and by 970 per cent. when the percentage of alcohol in the blood has risen over .15 per cent.

The point of my analysis of driver-drinking, and its effect on our community, is that some jurisdictions have faced up to this problem in a serious way. In the Scandinavian and other European countries, since the early 1930's, there have been provisions made for compulsory tests, by mechanical means, to determine the alcohol blood content, and strict measures of enforcement have been taken.

The federal government, in recent amendments to the criminal code, made admissible the evidence of such tests if they were voluntarily taken.

In the province of Saskatchewan—no reaction? I am sorry.

In the province of Saskatchewan, they have begun to experiment along these lines. They passed, just a couple of years ago, a new section to their Vehicles Act which reads this way:

The board may suspend—and this is section 92, subsection 4, paragraph D of The Vehicles Act, 1957, of the province of Saskatchewan:

The board may suspend an operator's, chauffeur's, learner's or instructor's licence for a period not exceeding 90 days if, after an examination of the circumstances, it is satisfied that, when suspected of driving, or of having driven, a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, he refused to comply with the request of a police officer or police constable that he submit to the taking of a specimen of his breath and, if after a hearing of which reasonable notice has been given to the holder of the licence, and after further examination of the circumstances, the board is again so satisfied, it may suspend the licence for a stated period or revoke it.

This is the type of legislation, Mr. Speaker, that I think should certainly be examined most carefully by this province. This is the type of legislation—and I do not think, perhaps, that even this goes far enough—that should be perhaps enacted in this province in order to bring under control this most serious problem.

The constitutionality of this statute was referred to the supreme court of Canada, 1958, and I have here a copy of the judgment of Mr. Justice Rand, that eminent Canadian jurist. I may say that the majority of the court agreed that the statute was within the power of the province of Saskatchewan and they—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member agree with that—

Mr. Singer: Well, I am coming to that—

I want to quote, however, this section from the judgment of hon. Justice Rand—the answer to this question of the constitutionality of the section.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Forget about the constitutionality. Does the hon. member agree with the type of legislation?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister will be patient, I will come to that very shortly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member want to give us his liquor policy, too?

Mr. Singer: I quote from the judgment of hon. Justice Rand:

The answer to this must take into account a consideration of the impact on the constantly intensifying traffic of persons and vehicles on the highways, the use of automobiles, and the ghastly results, from mere carelessness in operation alone. When, to the lethal dangers, inherent and multiplying under the best of ordinary circumstances, we have the most potent and destructive factor, the intoxicated driver, a stage has been reached where the public interest rises to paramount importance—and this, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say later, but I will say it right now.

I believe that a system such as this should become a part of the laws of the province of Ontario, and this is my own opinion. This is not necessarily the opinion of my party, but I think this is only one of the things that should be done. I know all that we are going to get is objections about infringements with a person's private rights—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is that what they have been talking about over there? They transfer to a board the liberties and the rights of a citizen. Do they want to do that? That is what I asked the hon. member about.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, nevertheless I am going to continue with what I have to say. What I have to say substantially is this—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member should understand, because—

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the hon. Prime Minister would save his remarks until he gets his next opportunity. He has one almost every day in the House—to make a speech. Let him save his remarks for his next opportunity, and let me just carry on and make my speech.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was going to ask the hon. member a nice question.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member makes it sound so evil.

Mr. Singer: The Toronto Globe and Mail's survey of Ontario's experience with liquor, since the end of prohibition in 1927, has found that support for drinking limit for drivers comes from senior officials of The Department of the Attorney-General, from traffic experts, from prominent members of the medico-legal society of Toronto, from magistrates, from lawyers, and from police officers.

The general feeling appears to be that such a law is necessary, because the existing legislation does not come to grips with the hazards of public safety created by the 154 per cent. increase in Ontario's drinking rate over the past 30 years. I quote directly from the report:

As things stand now, the criminal code makes it a crime for anyone to drive while intoxicated, or while his ability is impaired. But the law does not define what these terms mean, it is up to the courts to decide.

Inevitably, therefore, the problem has been handled within the context of traditional police thinking and traditional court procedures. The courts do not convict unless they have good and sufficient evidence—and that is as it should be,

—and the police do not lay charges unless they have good cause to believe they will get a conviction.

And that also it as it should be.

According to the deputy chief of police of Metropolitan Toronto, Albert Lee, a man who is suspected of drunk driving is a man who is not capable of driving at all, a gross menace to others; and an impaired driver is something a little less than that.

Other police forces have similar approaches. The general police rule can be said to be that a drunk person cannot perform physical acts. An impaired person can, but not as well as normal. The use of the breathalyzer, or any chemical test, for determining alcoholic content of the blood has not changed this approach materially, as it is used now, because the results of such tests may be accepted in court as corroborative evidence only.

The practice has grown up, and this is the present practice in this municipality, for the police to use breathalyzer readings of .15 per cent. and over as substantiating evidence of drunk driving, and readings between .10 and .15 per cent. as substantiating evidence of impaired driving. At these levels the breathalyzer is largely redundant. The average person would have to drink—and mark this, I think these things are important, —about a third of a bottle of whisky, on an empty stomach, to reach the blood alcohol content of .10 per cent. It would not take any chemical test to decide whether he was drunk or not.

There has been a growing realization by those directly concerned with the problem that this is not good enough. It has been indisputably proven that the driving ability of most persons is significantly impaired well below the levels of .10 per cent. Indeed, research has shown that 25 per cent. impairment can be expected on the average at drinking levels as low as .03 and .04 per cent.

Now, this is the field where the breathalyzer should be brought in. The hon. Prime Minister asked me earlier what my opinion was, and I say that we should begin to do this in this province. That is my own opinion.

There are many things that are done in Saskatchewan that I can find completely within my principles to agree with. I will tell hon. members about some of the things I do not agree with later on.

Mr. Grossman: Do they have drunk drivers down there?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Oh, yes.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Greer goes on to say that, after 3 decades of controlled drinking, Ontario has become the scene of some of the heaviest drinking in the world:

Ontario can safely be rated amongst the top 6 of the world's heaviest drinking states. Only France, Italy, New Zealand, West Germany, Australia and Belgium appear to have higher liquor consumption rates than this province. The liquor rates in every other province, the rates of consumption in every other province, are lower, and similarly in every state in the United States. This is a disgraceful record.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We have a lot of tourists.

Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member want to take the pledge with me?

Mr. MacDonald: It is enough to drive anybody to drink with that government over there.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) told us a while back—I do not think he told the House, but he said it outside of the House—that about half the population of our jails are there because of alcohol. There was some reference in the speech from the Throne to something being done about it, but it has not been too clearly spelled out.

When I looked at the figures of expenditures as exhibited in the public accounts, and the various other documents that have come forth, I noticed that $76 million was received by this province in the last fiscal year from liquor. This is the fourth highest source of provincial revenue.

The only reference—identifiable reference, Mr. Speaker—in these accounts to the expenditure of monies relating to this very serious problem, is the grant of some $340,000 to the Ontario alcoholic research foundation, apparently for the study into this very serious problem. This is much less than one-half of one per cent. of the revenue of this province which has been devoted to this purpose.

I recognize—and maybe I can think of what the hon. Prime Minister is about to say before he says it—there are monies that are not readily identifiable in the figures that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has in his department, some of which go to the treatment of alcoholics in some of the mental hospitals. Those figures are not readily identifiable. I would appreciate it, and I think the House would appreciate it, if perhaps the hon. Minister of Health, when he gets a chance to speak in this House, will bring those figures forward and identify them.

But as I say, the only identifiable figure in these documents is the sum of $340,000. There is some more, but how much more, none of us knows. The only identifiable figure amounts to less than one-half of one per cent. of the total revenue that we receive.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I assure my hon. friend that we lead America in our—

Mr. Singer: I have heard that statement repeated by many of the hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker. I would like to see the facts and figures, and I would like to see much more than just a statement that "we lead."

These documents that I have just referred to—Mr. Greer's studies—show that certainly we lead in America in the rate of drinking per capita. We are the greatest drinking people on the North American continent. I hope we lead it in other ways.

Mr. Grossman: We have a tough population.

Mr. Singer: I will read just one more quotation from Mr. Greer's article, and I think this is something to which this House should pay very serious attention. This is the concluding portion of the last article:

Yet, apart from the current effort to promote a national advertising campaign and open up Canadian radio and television to liquor sponsorship, the government's attitude appears to be leave the liquor control system alone.

Partly this is due to the ignorance, the belief—the misguided belief, as this surely is, —that the consumption of liquor in Ontario, as high as it is, would be still higher if the control policy of the last 30 years had not been followed. The government has never received any methodical analysis from the liquor control board which would enable it to evaluate the effects of its present policy.

The board, in turn, has never been permitted to prepare and supply such reports. It does not operate that way. It exists in a statistical vacuum lacking the basic facts and analytical procedure which are the lifeblood of any large corporation or any large government department. There is no price index for alcohol ever constructed by the board; its record of price changes consists of one set of price lists issued from time to time over 30 years.

The state of Pennsylvania, for example, maintains a ratio between the number of liquor retail stores and the growth of the population. The Ontario board does not. It builds stores according to overflow demand and the dictates of local option. A store is built if nearby stores cannot cope with the business.

Mr. Speaker, if these facts are correct, and I have no reason to doubt them, then surely the time is long overdue for a real overhaul of these laws that have been referred to in the language that they have in the article.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk for a few minutes about liquor advertising. I have been very confused in trying to determine just what our law is in this province. I embarked on a little bit of research, to try to determine what the law concerning liquor advertising is, and I thought I would discover—somewhere along the line—great masses of rules and regulations and orders and procedures. But I find that the law, as stated, is very simple. It is contained in section 91, subsection 3, of The Liquor Control Act, and that section says simply this:

No person, unless authorized by the board, shall exhibit, publish or display, or permit to be exhibited, published or displayed, any advertisement or form of advertisement or any announcement, publication or price list of, or concerning, liquor, or where or from whom liquor may be purchased.

I would ask the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, to keep these facts in mind as I develop this theme a little further.

This section has been in the Act for some considerable time. As a result of some of the studies I was doing, I discovered that, prior to 1943, authorization by the board—which are part of the words of this section—was never given, so that, in fact, prior to 1943, there was no liquor advertising.

In 1943 the Dominion government, under its wartime powers assuming control over liquor in Canada, permitted distillers and brewers to promote the war effort through advertising. The exemption was continued under provincial jurisdiction after the war, and institutional advertising was born.

Now, this allowed the use of such things as these, and I suggest that they are legal and they are valid, but they are truly hypocritical.

They started off innocuously enough, Mr. Speaker, and we were told that good citizenship is a lot of little things, and Bradings told us all about this—how we should put the lid on the garbage can. That is the first in the series—this one is dated February 17, 1948.

Then, Mr. Speaker, a little later on, in July 1950, Carlings are telling us about the birds. Public service!

Then, Mr. Speaker, we are beginning to get a little more blatant—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I ask my hon. friend if that is not better than scenes of drinking and pictures of bottles?

Mr. Singer: Let the hon. Prime Minister just bear with me. I am going to come to those, too.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The trouble with the hon. member is that he never comes to it.

Mr. Singer: Well, I would suggest that the people of Ontario have waited a long time for the hon. Prime Minister to do many things, and I think the hon. Prime Minister can have the patience to wait for me—for another 15 or 20 minutes—until I finish developing—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member has not come to those other things he was—

Mr. Singer: Just be patient.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Like the education—

Mr. Singer: Yes, I think it is time that my hon. friends opposite got some education.

In 1954, Labatts is telling us to see the world's top golfers.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Singer: Now, just watch the subtle change.

In 1954, too, Carlings are telling us about fish. Hon. members will notice that the words and the size of printing of the description of the company are slowly becoming larger and, for the first time here, we have a little seal.

Now, watch this development, Mr. Speaker.

In 1958, these are fairly current, 1959, Little B'ar—Dow Kingsbeer.

We notice, Mr. Speaker, that we have a new name for the company. It used to be Dow Breweries, but now it is Dow Kingsbeer Brewery Limited, and as we look at this, Mr. Speaker, the words "Dow Kingsbeer" stick out.

I suspect that the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips) had something to do with the incorporation of this company which brings in, for the first time, the trade name of the particular beer that the company is making.

Mr. Speaker, this thing moves on.

Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Singer: This thing moves on. I know this is embarrassing to the government, but I am not going to answer any questions for awhile.

Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member knows it is perfectly normal.

Mr. Singer: In 1959 and 1960—this is a fairly current one—"It's Time For Fun" and here we have a whole bunch of people fishing and we have Molson's Export Ale—with their seal on this, their word mark—Brewery Limited, Toronto—"It's Time For Fun."

Now, Mr. Speaker, finally—and this, I think is the most ridiculous one of all, Molson's Canadian Lager Beer Limited. A big sign—any hon. member can pick it out even from where he is sitting—says that Canadians have a heritage of fine taste. And if that man, getting the great pleasure out of sampling a piece of cheese, does not convey to anyone who looks at this ad, Mr. Speaker, the idea of drinking, or the pleasure that might be obtained by drinking this brand of beer, then the advertising man who is being well paid for this should be fired.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that, without changing the law at all, this government has allowed this sort of thing to go on—that it is being hypocritical—and if it wants to change the law, it should do it by amending the statute.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. H. Collings (Beaches): Would the hon. member allow me to show him—

Mr. Singer: No, I wish the hon. member would sit down until I am finished.

The other day I tried to ascertain from Colonel C. E. Woodrow's office what system of permission, what rules and regulations, there are for giving permission for these things. I asked if there were ground rules, if there was a printed sheet that said one can do this and do that.

It was said: "No, there are not any."

"Are there regulations?"

"No, there are not any."

"Well, who determines this sort of thing? Can you tell me anything about the rules?"

"Well, we cannot display the product, that is one thing. These things can be on the inside of a streetcar but not on the outside of a streetcar."

That one fooled me completely.

Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is easily fooled.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, to go onto the second, and more serious, section of liquor advertising—

Mr. Rowntree: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, he will not answer questions.

Mr. Singer: I think it is of importance that this editorial that appeared in the Post Express of Napanee should be put before the House as well:

ONTARIO TODAY

The title of this editorial is also that of a weekly supplement of at least one Ontario newspaper which we ran across this week. The supplement, something like the old familiar week-end magazine, is in tabloid style, because the Ontario government law, which stops Ontario newspapers from accepting brewers' advertising in Ontario, was printed in the United States. The ostensible publishing office is 302 Gore Street, Buffalo, New York, but the front page of the supplement bears the name of the Ontario provincial daily which sends it out.

The advertising content of this supplement is curious. With its 24 pages are 8 full pages of advertising for brewers; one page for The Ontario Department of Transport warning against drinking and driving during the Christmas season; and another full page of advertising from the government of the province of Ontario publicity division—"This is Ontario Today"—December 12, 1959.

The Ontario government has spent roughly one-quarter as much in our tax money as have the breweries in the publication about Ontario people, and for the exclusive consumption of Ontario people. But, because of the Ontario government's own laws, the supplement was printed and published in another country. Those who benefit from Ontario Today are the owner of the provincial daily newspaper which distributes it, who, incidentally, lives in Scotland; the brewers who sell more beer because of the advertising contained in it; a few other advertisers; and the printers of Buffalo, New York.

If the Post Express of Napanee, Ontario, were to print and publish 8 full pages of brewers' advertising with a total revenue of well over $1,000 for this newspaper's personnel to spend in Napanee, Ontario, we would all go to jail.

Whether or not to accept advertising from the breweries is a matter for each publisher to decide according to his own standards. Business is business. And those who can afford to circumvent the provincial law by using the technicality of publishing and printing their Ontario newspapers in the United States should not be blamed for so doing.

But the Ontario government has used our money to support a publication which cannot be printed in Ontario solely because its content is contrary to Ontario law.

The editorial page of a weekly newspaper is just a voice in the wilderness. We know the utter futility of such a protest, but nonetheless we cry shame.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone a little further into this subject than just to read this editorial.

I have been advised, for instance, that one magazine in December, 1958, had 62.6 per cent. of its revenue from liquor advertising; one Ontario brewery increased its ad spending by 33.1 per cent.; one liquor company increased its spending by 34.9 per cent.; two Toronto papers had an increase in liquor advertising of 88.8 per cent.

I have been advised also that, in 1958, the following percentages of their total revenue was had from the alcohol trade by the following magazines: Maclean's, 26.4 per cent.; Time, 28.9 per cent.; Reader's Digest, 21.2 per cent.; and Liberty, 58.2 per cent.

How has all this been done, Mr. Speaker, and how do we get to this sort of thing?

This is an extract from the Toronto Telegram TV Weekly—and these advertisements are typical.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an extract from the Globe magazine, and its advertisements look like that.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an extract from another magazine that comes out with the Globe and Mail, which is called "The Globe and Mail Programme Guide," and the ads look like that.

This, Mr. Speaker, comes with the Telegram every now and then from O'Keefes, and a very lovely picture with the product shown.

This is another one by the same company, a lovely picture, and certainly is liquor advertising.

I began to wonder, Mr. Speaker, if really this was legal, notwithstanding the popular opinion in this province.

I began to look, Mr. Speaker, at what the word "publish" does, in fact, mean. There is no definition of the word "publish" in the statute, there is no definition of the word "publish" in The Interpretation Act.

Oh, I am sorry, I forgot to add one more here. This is a rather good one. This is a section of Le Droit, the Ottawa French language newspaper and this paper, at least, Mr. Speaker—to give it full credit—is a little more honest than some of the others. It says on the back, "Imprimee au Journal Le Droit, Ottawa, Ontario," and they do have liquor advertising in it.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I began to wonder what the word "publish" means. I could find no statutory definition in The Liquor Control Act or in The Interpretation Act. I know that there are certain references to "publish" in other statutes.

For instance, in The Post Office Act, section 11 of the federal statute, there is certain mention there of publishing and what has to happen, and what has to appear, and this gives hon. members some idea why the name of the printer, and the place of printing and publishing, should be in the paper.

The Copyright Act, another federal statute, Mr. Speaker, has technical definitions of "publish," but I hardly think that these definitions are too pertinent.

Then there is one more statute—there is The Libel and Slander Act and the word "publish" in the law of libel and slander, as the legal hon. members of this House know, has a special and particular significance.

However, there is a section in The Libel and Slander Act, Mr. Speaker, which talks about certain rights that newspapers have, or have not, concerning libels that are alleged to have been published in newspapers and certain things that can be done.

To my knowledge there is no Ontario case dealing with this, but there is an Alberta case based on section 15 of the Alberta statute which is much the same, in fact, and practically in the same wording as our Ontario statute. In that case, Scown and Herald Publishing Limited, as reported in 38 Dominion Law Reports 43, all of the court of appeal of Alberta unanimously agreed and concurred in this decision, and it was subsequently confirmed by the supreme court of Canada, Chief Justice Harvey. At page 45 it said this:

It seems more reasonable to think that the word printer is used to explain publisher who is not simply one who publishes as the publisher of a libel, but one who publishes a paper by causing it to be printed for distribution.

Mr. Speaker, this is not exactly on point.

So I went a little further in my investigations. I could find no other Canadian case that dealt with the word "publish," but I did discover an English case, and I would commend to the legal members of the House, and to others who are interested, the case of McFarlane vs Hulton that is reported (1899) 1 Ch. 884.

In that case Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy, as he was then, was called upon to deal with the interpretation of the word "publish" as it appeared in a contract.

Two newspapers, or two groups of people, had made a contract, and the essence of the contract was that one should not publish in another jurisdiction as part of the agreement. And the importance of the case was that the court was called upon to interpret "publish."

Now, this is what the head note of this case says:

A newspaper is published when it is offered to the public by the proprietor. It may be published in more than one place, and where its proprietor has two offices in two different towns, and in each of which he offers for sale or distribution copies of his paper, the paper is published at each office.

Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy says, and I have gone a little farther than the head note:

What is the meaning of publishing a newspaper? I see no reason why the newspaper should not be published in more than one place. In fact, my attention has been called to two well-known newspapers which are expressly stated to be published in several towns. It seems to me that a paper is published when and where it is offered to the public by the proprietor.

Mr. Speaker, as we look at the masthead on some of these papers I have shown hon. members, we see that the Toronto Globe and Mail, for instance—which boasts every morning from its masthead that it is Canada's national newspaper—suggests that these supplements are published in the United States—in one case in Buffalo; in another case in a room on 42nd Street in New York City. The Telegram suggests that it is published in Buffalo; and there are other subterfuges. They send the stuff out of the province and it comes in from other jurisdictions by mail.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the law is as I have read it here. The word "publish" is defined. The only proper definition of the word "publish" in the common dictionary—the ordinary English language interpretation—is confirmed by the judgment of Mr. Justice Cozens-Hardy. It means that a newspaper is published in the place where it is offered to the public for sale.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to hon. members that either the hon. Attorney-General and his law advisers have not bothered to find this out or that, if they found it out, they have been most negligent in their duty.

Every day in this province, for a long time, the law has been broken. This province has encouraged this through the negligence and failure of the law enforcement officers to do their duty, which is the enforcement of the statutes that are on the statute books.

Mr. Speaker, if this government has a policy—and it is all very well for the hon. members opposite to ask what my policy is—this government is charged with the responsibility of enforcing this statute, or, if they do not like it, then to change it.

Certainly they are charged with the responsibility of enforcing all of the statutes of the province of Ontario, and they are not doing it, and their most blatant neglect of their duty is in the way they treat this statute.

In conclusion on this particular point—and I am sorry the hon. Prime Minister has left, he wanted to know what my conclusions were going to be and they are coming now.

Let me make this point abundantly clear. I do not believe in a wide-open liquor policy, nor does my party.

Surely, however, the intense volume of justified criticism, the record, the statistics and the problem, all warrant the strictest and most frank investigation of the problem. It will not go away—it has not gone away—if we pretend it does not exist. This is obvious. We make ourselves a laughing stock in the civilized world by keeping our present laws and not even enforcing them.

Worse than that, we still deliberately encourage—by having unreasonable, hypocritical and unenforceable laws on the statute books—public disdain of the rule of law. This, Mr. Speaker, is a most serious thing. If we are going to encourage public disdain of the rule of the law, one of the cornerstones of our democratic system, I fear for the democratic future of this province and this country.

I do not know, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, whether Mr. Greer's research and conclusions are valid. Certainly, at the moment, they represent the only real effort that has been made by anyone, that I am aware of, to analyze our so-called liquor control system in Ontario.

These articles, and the other details that I have dealt with, lead me to the following conclusion—and these are the suggestions that I commend to the government:

That immediately a Royal commission should be set up to carefully examine the liquor laws, and to recommend changes which will adequately control the industry; the consumption of alcohol; education about its dangers; research into alcoholism; and the care and treatment of alcoholics.

I commend to this House the use of the breathalyzer test. I think it is a valid thing, and I have much more material on it. I am quite prepared to discuss, with the hon. Minister of Transport at the appropriate time—perhaps the time will come before the highways and highway safety commission—the further ramifications of the remarks I have made concerning the importance, in my mind in any event, of adopting the use of the breathalyzer test as part of our system of control of drinking on the roads. I think this should be done, and I think it should be done immediately.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I commend to this government an expenditure of a proper amount of money, and a reasonable explanation of how this money will be spent, to achieve all of these purposes; to devote particularly a good sum of money for the study of alcoholism—not less than one-half of one per cent. of the total revenue.

We have heard a lot of suggestions—there was a reference in the speech from the Throne and there are other references—but we have not seen any facts and figures concerning the expenditure of a very substantial portion of our provincial money in hospitals and hospital treatment for these unfortunate people. My hon. friends opposite should pay attention to the words of the hon. Attorney-General and start doing something about the one-half population of our jails whom he tells us are there because of alcohol.

These are the conclusions that I come to as a result of my analysis about liquor.

Mr. Speaker, I have two or three more subjects that I would like to deal with, but the hour is late. I would like to move the adjournment of this debate and continue another time with some remarks on housing and other things. With your permission, sir, I suggest the adjournment of this debate at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will bear in mind that there are no sittings of the House tomorrow. The adjournment is until 3 of the clock, Thursday afternoon, at which time I expect to go ahead with the Throne debate.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 of the clock, p.m.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion that I have been asked to present by some of the hon. members concerning the opening of the House on Monday. As Monday is a late day, the suggestion has been made by some hon. members, which seems to me to be altogether reasonable, that the House might meet at 2 o'clock p.m. instead of 3 o'clock p.m.

Therefore, I move, seconded by hon. W. A. Goodfellow, that this House meet at 2 o'clock Monday next and that Rule 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it might apply to this motion.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if it is acceptable to the hon. members we might let it go ahead. Otherwise I would not press the motion, I would just leave it that way.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned, it is quite acceptable. Is the hon. Prime Minister going to make any explanation with respect to night sessions?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, there is a matter I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost), in the absence of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts).

I have in my hand a clipping from the Hamilton Spectator with a story emanating from Parry Sound, a Canadian Press dispatch. It reads as follows:

JUST NO GOOD, YOUNG KILLER DIES

"Mervin McKee, 20, went to a quiet, efficient and quick execution early today," said Sheriff Steven Elliott of Bracebridge, Ontario.

Later on it goes on to say Sheriff Elliott said McKee —was constantly interested in what kind of splash he was making in the newspapers and said he read press accounts over and over again in his cell. "He was just no good," the sheriff said.

Mr. Speaker, I became involved in this particular case because I happened to be the officer commanding a certain regiment, the Algonquin regiment, and this young man's father was a member of the regiment. He, unfortunately, left our unit, went into the provost corps, and was in hospital and died, but not in the service. He was discharged from hospital and the army two weeks before he died. He died in 1942.

The young boy's mother was a helpless cripple for 7 years before she died last year.

I became involved last Saturday when the employer of the brother of this unfortunate young man telephoned me from Trout Creek and asked me if I would try to do something about commutation of the sentence. I got in touch with Ottawa, at least with the federal hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), and I was eventually told that one of the reasons why it was not commuted was that the young man was unregenerate.

Now, in my faith there is no such time when there is no regeneration and, according to the statement of the defence lawyer, the young man, at first, was of a certain disposition, but he had changed his attitude. Is the sheriff of Bracebridge the psychologist who informed the government this man was just no good?

I have very mixed views on the death penalty but I think, in justice to—

Mr. Speaker: I believe I will have to rule the hon. member out of order. It is not a question of the Minister, and I had no notice of a statement before the orders of the day until the notice came up to me just before we read the bills.

I had no opportunity to get a reply back to the hon. member, owing to the passing of bills, that it would be out of order. I thought he would only be short, but I must rule the member out of order under these circumstances.

Mr. Troy: Will you pardon me just to say that I discussed this matter with the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope), and he discussed it also with the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer).

Mr. Speaker: The member must advise the Speaker before the House opens in order to get in the order.

Mr. Troy: I sent you a note, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): It was a long time before you asked the clerk for his observation, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that, in view of that, you permit this hon. member to ask his question.

Mr. Speaker: Well, pardon me, I would like to point out to the members that it was a matter of knowing how to deal with this without consulting the clerk. I just made sure by consulting the clerk, and I thought the member would soon be finished—a few sentences and so forth. But, owing to the length of it, I felt that the member had to be called to order.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Would Mr. Speaker allow me to ask a question of the office of the hon. Attorney-General?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Has the hon. member given any notice?

Mr. Speaker: It has been observed that the questions have to be given to the Speaker's office prior to the opening of the session.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Before the orders of the day I would like to direct two questions to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass).

I feel it appropriate because of this government's policy on air pollution and, to introduce my questions, I would just quote from an article, of the Toronto Daily Star yesterday, that also appeared in the Hamilton Spectator:

OLD FAITHFUL RAISES BEEF

Eight boulevard residents here say they are black with anger and soot. They charged that a huge furnace near the skyway bridge toll plaza, used to melt ice and snow on the roadway, belches clouds of dense black smoke regularly every 15 minutes.

Bert Worden, member of the beach property owners' association, said that they have complained to Queen's Park and the smoke abatement laboratory without results. He said soft coal used to fire a large boiler in the building, alongside the toll plaza near Beach Boulevard, is blanketing the area when the wind is blowing in from the bay.

Residents in a 5-block area on Beach Boulevard say they cannot hang out washing any more.

Mr. Worden says that the health authorities have been notified, as residents feel their health is also in danger. He said also that the smokestack is being nicknamed "Old Faithful" because it regularly belches out smoke every 15 minutes.

There are two questions, Mr. Speaker.

1. Is the skyway bridge operation subject to prosecution under the Hamilton smoke abatement by-law?

2. Does The Department of Highways intend to take action to clear up this situation?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I would be most pleased to take the hon. member's question as notice.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of what I think is public interest and public information, I would like to make a very brief statement here, and inform hon. members that, at a meeting held in my office yesterday that lasted from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock in the evening, conducted by myself and Mr. Metzler, my Deputy, a memorandum of settlement was mutually agreed upon by the representatives of the Hamilton builders exchange and bargaining agents of carpenters local No. 82.

This agreement must, of course, be ratified in this case by both parties, and I think it will be because assurance was given me by both parties that this was a deal and would be carried out.

If that is so it has terminated a strike of 90 days' duration which practically tied up the construction industry in the city of Hamilton.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, because I feel something will definitely have to be done to eliminate the possibility of one section of the construction industry, by strike action, being able to completely tie up an entire city's building activity.

This, in my opinion, can best be accomplished by the parties themselves, and I am holding continuing meetings with representatives of all the trades in the province and the Ontario construction association. I sincerely hope, and I really believe, that from these meetings will flow a better understanding in this great industry. Both parties, in my opinion, at the first meeting realized the need to accomplish this, and are tackling this question with great sincerity. So I am hoping good results will flow from these meetings.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word of pleasure on behalf of the Hamilton group. I am sure that the members from Hamilton will be pleased to know that—

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Although the rules do not provide for an hon. Minister making a statement in terms of public interest, nevertheless, traditionally, it has been permitted that an hon. Minister, when there is a matter of public interest, should have an opportunity of making a brief statement. It has also always been understood that that statement is not debatable. There may be, however, one or two amplifying questions asked.

If my hon. friend is making a statement in relation to a statement, he is out of order. If he is asking a question, he is in order.

Mr. Speaker: The member is quite in order because it so happens that he gave notice of this before the House convened today, and I rule that it is quite in order.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As I was saying, I am sure the Hamilton members are pleased to hear of the anticipated settlement of the carpenters' strike that has continued for over 100 days in Hamilton. This, I understand, is the first time in two decades that the carpenters in Canada have had a strike of any duration of more than a few days. I think that one fact exemplifies the reasonable look they have taken at the industry, and, because of that reasonable attitude, they found that prior to going on strike in November—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Who is running this House, anyway?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member quote his point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think an hon. member can raise a question in this House, if he has given advance notice to you. The hon. member opposite I do not believe is asking a question. If so, I have not heard it yet, and I would ask you to rule him out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the member who is speaking had my permission to finish.

The member came to me before the session today, and asked me if he could bring this to the attention of the House, as a matter of public importance. I discussed it with him at considerable length, and, as he will realize, I tried to persuade him, perhaps, this was not a matter of public importance and it was so ruled.

However, when it was introduced I thought it only fair that the member should be allowed to discuss this, in view of the notice which he gave me and the discussion which we had before the House convened.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I just want to say that the remarks I have made would point out that this union is a responsible group and, not having had a strike for some past 40 years, and because of their reasonableness in their attitude toward the industry they did fall somewhat behind in conditions and wages. Therefore, they felt that this year was their only opportunity to catch up.

Of course, as has been mentioned, a strike of this nature did cause several other people to be out of work. But the main thing is that we are happy that it is over. It has been an honourable strike; there has been no trouble; it has been orderly; we hope that their settlement is honourable. Also, we hope that, in the future, if we can feel that the hon. Minister of Labour had something to do with bringing this to a conclusion, that he will get into the picture somewhat earlier and see if the results will be better.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, now that the hon. member has finished his statement, am I to understand that any hon. member, at the beginning of the day's session in this House, can rise and make a statement as long as he has given advance notice to you? Does it not have to be a question of urgent public importance, and does it not have to be a question directed to another hon. member of this House?

Mr. Speaker: The answer is, yes.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. Report of the Minister of Agriculture, Ontario, for the year ended March 31, 1959.
2. Report of the statistics branch, Department of Agriculture, Ontario, for the year 1958.

3. Report of the Ontario food terminal board, Department of Agriculture, Ontario, for the year ended March 31, 1959.

4. Report of the Ontario stockyards board for the year ended June 30, 1959.

5. Report of the Ontario veterinary college for the year ended March 31, 1959.

6. Report of the co-operative loans board of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1959.

7. The 83rd annual report of the Ontario agricultural college and experimental farm for the year ended March 31, 1959.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before the orders of day, may I permitted to draw something to the attention of the House of which I think I have given you notice, Mr. Speaker?

I would like to draw attention to the death of a very valiant fighter for freedom in eastern Europe, namely Cardinal Stepinac, who—during his life, I think—exemplified the true meaning of the dignity of a man and the purpose of life.

He, on behalf of himself and his people, served himself and his conscience and his country valiantly, even to the extent of suffering the inconveniences of imprisonment and other personal embarrassments.

I am confident that this man who, unfortunately, has now died at an early age, will be appreciated by this House and likewise by all people in the free world.

I would express the hope that the day will come when his efforts will, along with others, be successful and that the concept of freedom and the basic purpose of life will be made available to all those people who currently do not enjoy the freedom that we have.

Mr. Speaker, I would draw this simple fact to the attention of this House on the occasion of the cardinal's death which, I believe, took place yesterday or the day before.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I say at this time—and I shall make a comment relating to my hon. friend's remarks in just a moment—but I think I should draw to the attention of the House the procedure in connection with statements in regard to matters of urgent public importance, or questions.

The rule is, and should be, that statements are submitted in writing to the Speaker, and that the Speaker passes upon the admissibility or otherwise of the statement. Now that is as regards matters of urgent public importance.

As for questions—they likewise, should be reduced to writing and the Speaker should be given the opportunity of passing upon the question, and there should be ample notice to the hon. Minister or the hon. member affected by the question.

Now, those are the rules, and I think that if we stick to them there will be little difficulty.

I point out to my hon. friend opposite that I do not think his question, or statement, was reduced to writing, although it may have been. But I rather doubt that. A statement should be reduced to writing and should not be in the form of an opinion, or anything of the sort.

Now, sir, as regards the statement, such as my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, has made, it has always been customary to make statements in relation to certain matters of interest which arise in the House. Actually speaking, sir, they are courtesy matters which the Speaker could rule out of order.

The other day I made a statement in relation to the 200th anniversary, or celebration, of Jewry. That is something which, as a matter of courtesy, has always been permitted in this House—as is my hon. friend's reference to the passing of Cardinal Stepinac.

Now, matters of that kind are matters of common interest in which there are not the elements of controversy which may arise in other things not applying to the strict rules.

I would say that, taking my hon. friend's reference as a matter relating to the rules of the House, actually, of course, it is a matter which the Speaker might rule out of order. It does not pertain, as did my statement of two or three days ago, to the actual work of this House.

I think there are some simple rules, reason and judgment, that if we follow we can, I think, guide the affairs of this House to the satisfaction of all here.

I would say, as regards my hon. friend's reference to the passing of Cardinal Stepinac, that he fought for freedom of religion, freedom of speech and freedom from fear, things that are basic in our democratic way of life—indeed are fundamental in our democratic way of life. In this way, he fought the battle of everyone who believes in freedom as we do, and I would join with my hon. friend in his remarks concerning this distinguished prelate.

Mr. Speaker: I would just like to point out to the members that I had studied the subjects to considerable extent, and I am the chairman of the House, as you know. I am sure that all members will agree with my judgment that, to discuss a matter of public importance, this matter must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if attention is not directed to it at once.

The Speaker is the sole judge of the question or urgency, and must also consider the other opportunities which the member may have for bringing the question before the House.

The matter to be discussed cannot be one which has already been before the House, and must be within the confidence and responsibility of the province of Ontario. The question cannot involve future government policy.

Now, those were a few notes that I have made from a study of several books on the matter, and as long as we all observe the same rules I am quite sure it will turn out all right.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before calling the next order might I answer the question my hon. friend directed to me concerning the proceedings of the House?

As has been said before, tonight there is a night session. Tonight, sir, or today and tonight will be devoted to a debate on the Throne speech. Tomorrow, the House meets at 2 of the clock, and I would propose that the House should proceed with the same order.

I may say, sir, it is necessary for me to be in Ottawa tomorrow—not on any governmental business which might provoke any questions from the other side—but in relation to opening a new building for Carleton University.

I am sorry to be absent as I like to hear the speeches of the hon. members, and I express my apologies to those hon. members who will speak tomorrow, for my absence which is necessary and has followed an arrangement made a very considerable time ago.

On Monday, due to the direction of the House, the House convenes at 2 of the clock, and we will proceed with the two energy bills which are on the order paper, on one of which the debate was adjourned. I do not propose that there should be any night session on Monday. We will see the state of business on Monday as to whether a night session would be necessary on Tuesday and on the following Thursday.

I would say, sir, and I say to the hon. members of the House, that personally I do not like night sessions. I would rather meet, if possible, at 2 of the clock and avoid night sessions, if that can be done.

On the other hand, in a House such as this, there is a very great deal of business to be done, and it is just out of the question to avoid some night sessions.

Now, I can only say this, that I shall do my best leading the government side to avoid any more night sessions than are absolutely necessary. But, I think that, in very many ways, one of the things that has avoided earlier meetings of the Legislature is the committee problem by meeting on Wednesdays. It may be possible that we could meet earlier during the week, perhaps at 2 of the clock, in the afternoon. However, we will see how that develops.

That, I think, will cover the business until Monday afternoon.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister permit a question? As the committees are meeting on Wednesdays now, it means there is very little to do in the mornings, and the hon. Prime Minister said that we all hate night sessions—I think we will all concur in that, we do—then why not meet at 2 of the clock in the afternoon and go to 6 of the clock?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think it is possible, at this stage of the session, to lay down 2 o'clock meetings. I did discuss this thing, in a casual sort of a way, with the hon. leader of the Opposition and we will see what we can do.

It may be from now on that, instead of Fridays at 2 of the clock, it will be on Friday morning at 10 of the clock. I think that might be a very definite improvement, and possibly we could work that out this week. But we will see the order of business, and the state of committee meetings at that time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue my earlier remarks in this debate, I have had some time to consider a little more thoroughly than I did the other evening some of the remarks of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence). And I want to take exception to some of the things he said.

The first one that occurs to me were his remarks about the fine gentlemen up there in the press gallery. While I would like personally to have seen, from time to time, many of my own words of wisdom spread in the newspapers at greater length, I recognize the gentlemen who follow the proceedings of this House have a monumental task before them. They devote many and long hours to their work, and they do it to very good ability, I think. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if really they should be criticized by hon. members of this House, because I think they are doing a pretty good job of covering the proceedings that go on here.

In the committee on education yesterday, we had a discussion about the education of retarded children, and I wanted to compliment many of the hon. members opposite—particularly the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis)—for the approach taken at the meeting. The hon. member has taken it in his riding and he brought it before the committee.

I want to say, to this House, that the idea of the education of retarded children should be adopted immediately into our educational system, and become the definite responsibility of our Department of Education, and the definite responsibility of our boards of education. It is one that demands the government's immediate attention.

The parents of these unfortunate youngsters have a very heavy burden to bear. They pay, as well as everyone else does, real estate taxes, and, in their real estate taxes, as we all know, they pay a very substantial portion for the general costs of education.

They get perhaps 30 per cent. of the approved costs of the building of a school and they have to raise the balance of the capital cost themselves. They get $250 for half-day attendance or $500 for full-day attendance which the hon. Minister, or one of his senior officials, said ran about 90 per cent. of the cost of operating such school. Am I correct? There is the other 10 per cent., and, in addition, there is—and I think we all must recognize this—the very substantial cost of transportation.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker, in many areas of this province—including my own riding—is that groups of selfless and devoted members of service clubs have taken the cause of retarded children unto themselves and have done a very handsome and rewarding public service.

But there are other areas of this province, Mr. Speaker, where perhaps there have not been service clubs, or where the service clubs have not perhaps been able to raise enough money to take care of this problem.

I have noticed some clippings in this regard coming from New Liskeard, and I think they are on the way with their school for retarded children. But, they have had a long and very difficult struggle.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge that the government take this into serious consideration immediately, even though, as the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) said yesterday, they have moved substantially along the line. I think this is one of the very important things, in the field of the social welfare of the province, that this government should get into almost immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few remarks about Metropolitan Toronto.

The hon. member for St. George had something to say about pollution in regard to this area. He suggested that the subject of pollution of water, Lake Ontario, the Don River and the Humber River, should be looked after by the Ontario water resources commission.

Now, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that while the hon. member for St. George may be very knowledgeable in some subjects, he perhaps has not pursued this topic too closely. He should recognize that the Ontario water resources commission—while it has had some power to come into the city of Toronto, or the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, and perhaps look at these things—was originally set up to deal with the supply of water. Somewhere a little later along the line it took under its wing, in certain areas, the problem of pollution.

But the real problem of pollution, Mr. Speaker, in this metropolitan area is a planning problem, and I think the solution lies in the control of proper planning in the metropolitan area and beyond.

We all know the chaos that existed in this area before 1953, before the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto was created. We know that new subdivisions were being built in the suburban areas without any too close relationship to each other, without any sound system of water supply and without any proper system of sewage disposal.

One of the big things that Metropolitan Toronto was able to do was to supply water in the necessary amounts and to begin to build—and the programme is still going on—large disposal plants down at the mouth of the Humber and the mouth of the Don. They are building large sewer mains that will take the sewage into these plants, which would, if these matters were allowed to go on as Metro is planning it, eventually clean up the pollution problem in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

The sewage pollution was caused because the suburban municipalities were building what are called package sewage treatment plants. These plants were capable of removing, or treating, 50 per cent. of the solid from the effluent that came into it. That was not enough because the balance of the effluent went in to the streams that did not run very strongly in the summer time.

And then municipal councils sometimes, being willing to gamble a bit, tended to overload these package plants.

One of the first jobs that Metro tackled—and I think it was a most important job—was to figure out a method of doing away with these plants. They began to build these big plants—at the mouth of the Humber and the mouth of the Don—and to build the big mains leading into them. These plants are going to remove 90 or 95 per cent. of the solids from the effluent and, as I say, if this was left by itself, it would get rid of the problem of pollution in these rivers, would remove the problem of pollution from the lakefront, and would allow the beaches in the city of Toronto to be enjoyed again as they were many, many years ago.

But, Mr. Speaker, what I am afraid is happening is this—and it is a planning problem—that the problem is just now being transferred north of Steeles Avenue. In the townships of Vaughan and Markham, package plants are being talked about again, and they are going to go through the same process that existed south of Steeles Avenue.

Metro has taken care of, and is taking care of very well, everything to the south of Steeles Avenue, but to the north of Steeles Avenue it looks as though it is all commencing again.

I say this is a planning problem and I say this is where The Department of Planning and Development should have given some guidance to what is happening in this area, so that the problem can, as it should, be taken care of.

Perhaps the time has come, Mr. Speaker, to consider whether Metropolitan Toronto is as large as it should be. There is a height of land just between Steeles Avenue and highway No. 7 which the engineers advise me separates two drainage basins, one going south to Lake Ontario and the other going north to Lake Simcoe.

Perhaps there might be an extension as far as this, and that should be the end of Metropolitan Toronto.

Perhaps there should be another metropolitan municipality called Newmarket, Richmond Hill or Aurora or what you will.

Co-ordinating this development and taking advantage of that drainage basin—it goes off in the other direction—will go a long way, Mr. Speaker, to avoid the continued and aggravated problem of pollution, and will gather together a large enough area of land, and be able to produce enough assessment, to allow proper water supply and proper municipal services that will be needed.

This is the sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, that some of us in the past have been looking to The Department of Planning and Development for, and we have not seen this sort of thinking come about.

I think it is high time that these problems be looked at, and looked at seriously, as planning and development problems because that is what they are. This department should see that the whole series of mistakes, that caused all this difficulty in this area before 1953, is not going to be repeated. We have to look at the type of development that is going on in Markham and Vaughan townships, and make sure that these mistakes are minimized, and that a new approach is brought about.

Mr. Speaker, again in relation to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, I wanted to say this:

For the past 3 or 4 years, the metropolitan council has talked about building a subway, the east-west subway on Bloor Street. Building has now commenced and the programme that is scheduled to take 10 years is under-way.

There has been substantial criticism in the press suggesting that, if the subway could be built in 5 years, it should be done in that way. The press has suggested that no particular attention should be paid to the warnings that the chairman of the metropolitan council, and its finance commissioner, have given—that it is difficult, if not impossible, to raise enough money to allow this programme to proceed in 5 years rather than 10.

On several occasions the metropolitan council has passed resolutions urging this government to assist in the construction of the subway in a financial way. I think, Mr. Speaker, the argument is logical and sensible.

Our planners and our traffic people tell us that it is useless and hopeless to continue to build massive highways into the centre or around large municipalities. These massive highways are the alternative to a subway in a large metropolitan area.

If these highways are built—such as the Gardiner expressway or the proposed Spadina

Road extension or the Don Valley parkway or the Bayview extension—and if they continue to be built, in lieu of the subway, this government would have to pay, in accordance with the present statutes and in accordance with the present policies and regulations, 50 per cent. subsidy for the construction of these highways.

But it is agreed that is not going to be an efficient or logical way to do things and, if more highways were built, the problem of traffic congestion and confusion in the core of the downtown Toronto area would be further compounded.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is logical and sensible that, when a municipality such as Metropolitan Toronto embarks on an intelligent programme of building a subway in lieu of additional highways, the province should grant subsidies on the same principle that it does for highway construction.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, resolutions urging that this course of action be adopted were passed on many occasions by the metropolitan council and, to date, they have been ignored by this government.

On one occasion I remember very well, Mr. Gardiner, the chairman of the council, prepared a brief which, I understand, was submitted to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). This brief asked that the executive committee of the metropolitan council—and I was a member of it at that time—be allowed to come before the hon. Prime Minister, and whatever other hon. Ministers were concerned with this, to present our opinion. We were later told by Mr. Gardiner that the province had said that they saw no point in this type of interview.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an important thing to this heart and centre of the province of Ontario. Also, I think that this province should now extend its thinking, and extend the principle of highway subsidies to the principle of building subways.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say a few remarks about housing as well. Hon members will recall that when our hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) spoke in this debate, he moved an amendment to the motion now before this House and, amongst the other clauses contained in the amendment, he said:

But this House regrets that the government has advanced no programme to provide low-cost housing.

In the speech from the Throne, his Honour devoted only 5 lines to housing.

You, Mr. Speaker, are undoubtedly familiar with his words. The promised very little in this regard. Perhaps, however, the government's true feeling was expressed by one of the hon. members opposite a little earlier in this debate. He said there is no such thing as low-cost housing.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): There is not.

Mr. Singer: Well, let the hon. member just listen to me for a while and we will show him that there is, and that we had already experienced substantial advances in the low-rental housing field. Let us look at the record.

In Metropolitan Toronto there are 3,206 publicly owned rental units. There are 10,000 families on an active list—10,000 who qualify by virtue of need and means for this type of accommodation.

The authorities tell us that the supply of public housing should be 10 per cent. of the existing units. There are some 400,000 housing units in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, but there are only 3,206 units of public housing—less than 1 per cent. and not anywhere close to the suggested 10 per cent.

This government glories in the fact that umpteen thousand new homes have been built in the last few years, and we hear this every time we get one of these government speeches boasting about progress and development. But new homes are beyond the reach of the average wage-earner, and this government knows it as well as anybody else in the province of Ontario. The man earning $100 a week, or less—and that includes the majority of our population—is unable to buy a new home in this metropolitan area. My hon. friend's remarks, if they mean what they seem to indicate—that this is government policy—means that the government is not going to look into this problem. This, to my mind, is a pretty retrograde step in looking after this very serious need.

Mr. Grossman: That is not what was said at all. He was going to—

Mr. Singer: I will, I will, just be patient.

In Regent Park North, Mr. Speaker, there are 1,397 suites, and 2,800 children who live there. In Regent Park South, there are 732 units, and 2,469 youngsters live there. In Lawrence Heights, the other third large development, which is in my riding, there are 1,003 units, and 2,080 children live there. The Toronto housing authority has some 34 units, and these are the only public units in Metropolitan Toronto, and they add up to 3,206.

What does the future hold? Mr. P. E. H. Brady, the executive director of the Metropolitan Toronto housing authority, says: "It is unlikely that we will have any more"—he means new units—"before 18 to 24 months have expired."

I do not think a better argument for low-cost and low-rental housing could be made, Mr. Speaker, than to quote some of the remarks made by some youngsters in the Lawrence Heights development, in an essay contest which they entered into, entitled: "Why Do I Like to Live in Lawrence Heights?"

I had the privilege of being asked to be one of the judges in this contest, and the remarks of these youngsters were simply amazing:

We live in a good community which is also neighbourly and far from the big and dangerous traffic noises at night.

When you look out from your bedroom window you can see a beautiful court with many brightly coloured doors. I have lots of room to put all my own clothes in my wardrobe, and I have my own bedroom and just my sister sleeps with me, and I have lots of girls friends the same age as I am to play with me, and I can make lots of noise and play in my own house and bring my girl friends to play with me too.

I will be 7 years old on December 16. I am the oldest in the family. I like to take my two sisters and two brothers all around the court for a walk.

The radiators make the house warm in the wintertime.

I get nice rosy cheeks and I eat a lot better. I even go back for second helpings and I get plenty of rest.

It is fun looking out of the window. I have my own room and I like it because I cannot get locked in the washroom.

I like the nice playground and there are not many cars. I do not have to play on the busy streets. They are going to build a community centre and the children will grow up to be fine people.

Well, these remarks, Mr. Speaker, are genuine remarks from youngsters who have been given an opportunity to enjoy public housing, or community housing, and these are the things that bespeak the urgency of the government getting into this programme in a real way.

What can be done in Metro today—and this is the part that my hon. friend was waiting for—there are some 3,000 acres of partnership-owned land—federal and provincial owned land—lying fallow in the metropolitan area. There are 500 acres in Etobicoke, 600 acres in North York, and 1,650 acres in Scarborough.

Under our present system, the initiative of developing these acres is left to the local municipality. But with the present burdens that exist on municipalities, it is unlikely that any of the municipalities in this area are going to be able to take too great advantage of having the partnership lands in their municipality. These are low-cost lands, and they were bought some years ago at around $1,200 an acre, or less.

On these 3,000 acres, I would suggest to the House, upwards of 30,000 units of housing could be built, either publicly or by private initiative, in probably not much more than 18 months' time. A very substantial number of families could be living in these homes, if we do not insist that the Cadillac-type home be constructed on these acres for people with Chevrolet-type incomes. Planning can, and should, be controlled in regard to the use of these lands.

It is not necessary, to my mind, to insist that lands such as these be divided into 50-foot and 60-foot lots. It is not necessary, Mr. Speaker, that every acre of these 3,000 acres have a 28-foot wide paved road with sidewalks on both sides and landscaping in the front and back.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, we want to provide good accommodation, but we do not want to provide Cadillac-type of accommodation for people with only Chevrolet-type incomes. I think that guidance and leadership should come, in the use of these lands, from The Department of Planning and Development.

I think very substantially—and it would not involve a great expenditure of money—that this government could put up the money to provide the services, the water and the sewers—the two basic services—that will allow immediate use of these lands.

Studies could and should be made about building homes. Any of the building codes in this area are old-fashioned.

There is all sorts of literature dealing with new techniques of construction—pre-fab construction and new materials—and surely, if the leadership was taken by hon. Ministers on the front benches opposite, these things could be suggested to the municipalities so we could get at low-cost housing that my hon. friend says does not exist.

Mr. Grossman: That is not the point at all. The hon. member is talking about subsidized housing.

Mr. Singer: I am talking about the use, if my hon. friend will just be quiet, of these lands to build public housing, or to use these lands for building, by private industry, houses that are within the reach of the average wage-earner.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member's municipality, when he was reeve, would not permit that kind of housing.

Mr. Singer: Well, I am glad the hon. member raised that point. Let me tell him what we did do. I was not even going to mention it.

During the depression, the township of North York acquired some 400 lots up in Newtonbrook which came to us by reason of tax arrears. The lots were not in very good shape, they were constantly being flooded, and so we hung onto them.

In my time as reeve, we put in a storm sewer to service those lands, and it cost about $1 million. Then we sold those lands by public tender to the highest bidder with an end controlled selling price, and we strictly controlled the planning requirements in the area. We got houses onto the market—300 of them—at least $1,000 and down to $2,000 less than the going market price.

So I thank my hon. friend for asking me what happened, and I tell him that there is an example of what can be done. This was done by one small municipality, and done completely on its own initiative. If one municipality can do this, certainly this province can get into this type of thinking, and should.

Mr. Grossman: Well then, let the hon. member keep on fighting. It is his speech. We will answer that later.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, these lots that can be created on these 3,000 acres can be sold to private industry with an end controlled selling price. With this type of thinking, I am certain that, with all the initiative and imagination that lie on the front benches—that lie in the collective minds of the hon. Ministers on the front benches opposite—that there could be, in this province, many thousands of low-cost housing units available for sale to the public within 18 months, and this is the type of thinking that the people of Ontario are demanding in connection with this very serious problem.

I want to deal with one more problem very briefly, then I am through—that is, fluoridation.

I notice that the council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto is about to pass its fourth or fifth—or I have forgotten, perhaps sixth—resolution urging that permission be given to it to allow that municipality to put fluoride in controlled quantities into the water that serves this area.

This problem, I know, has been discussed at some considerable length in this House. I listened with interest when the hon. Prime Minister the other day advised us of a change in the committee that the Legislature had set up a year ago. I have been unable to find out what this committee has been doing in the past year. I notice they will begin to hold public meetings shortly.

Surely a problem, the solution for which has been put forward by the medical associations of Canada and Ontario, the dental associations of Canada and Ontario, the health organizations, and the federal Ministry of Health, has only one obvious answer. Surely, with the programme that is going on now in 7 municipalities—and the reports are coming every day, a report came in from Calgary indicating the great benefits of this—surely, Mr. Speaker, a committee should not take this long to investigate something that so many important people who really know about it are completely agreed upon.

I suggest that the time is long overdue that this matter be brought back before the House, and that the permissive legislation be placed before us with the blessing of the government.

Mr. Speaker, I have reached the end of a rather long speech. I must admit that I have rather enjoyed it, and I am sorry I did not quite get some of the reactions this afternoon I was getting the other night. I was rather enjoying sparring with some of the hon. members opposite.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to rise at this time to make reference to a statement in relation to a matter which has been raised in this House—and a serious matter indeed at that—in relation to land purchased by Ontario Hydro, in the area of Sarnia, for the purpose of supplying energy to what is known as the chemical valley, and in particular the city of Sarnia. I shall be filing some 40 or so exhibits.

There is at the moment being distributed, to the hon. members, a number of maps and schedules, so that it may be somewhat easier for me to present to this House some of the facts to which I wish to make reference.

A very serious matter of the propriety of the action by Ontario Hydro has been put in issue both by persons making statements and by accounts carried in the press.

But, Mr. Speaker, before I return to these matters of very great importance, I would like to have the pleasure, first, of congratulating you upon your election to the office of Speaker of this Legislature, and I would wish you well, and I know that you will bring honour to the tradition which you follow.

I would also like to make reference to the able speeches of the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion known in relation to the speech from the Throne, and to congratulate them upon most able addresses.

I have listened with great interest to a number of our hon. friends opposite who have come to this House for the first time, and I think that they will make many worthwhile contributions, and I look forward to hearing them. The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer), who has just spoken, made a most excellent and worthwhile contribution to our deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the serious matter of the propriety of the action by the Ontario Hydro has been put in issue, both by persons making statements and by accounts which have been carried in the press.

The cause of this has been that Ontario Hydro has bought 175.6 acres from a company, known as Dimensional Investments Limited, for a lump sum price of $1.25 million. The 175.6 acres was part of a parcel Dimensional Investments had, through its agent, the Crown Trust Company here in Toronto, purchased from the Indians for $6,501,946, plus agent's fees, legal costs and surveys, making a total cost to the company of $7,086,946.

Ontario Hydro paid an average of approximately $7,000 an acre, Dimensional Investments paid on the average $2,600 an acre. Dimensional Investments purchased 3,425 acres of which approximately 2,644 were saleable lands, the balance was in roads, land already sold, under lease, and under easements.

What then, Mr. Speaker, are the issues in this matter? There are 3.

(1) Did Ontario enter into any real estate transaction, in relation to these 175.6 acres of land, which was not in the best interests of the Hydro users of this province? (2) Did Hydro take any steps in connection with this land, or its purchase, which was imprudent, fraudulent, or dishonest? (3) Did Hydro fail to take any steps which it might have taken in connection with this land or its purchase which, by not taking, made the transaction imprudent, fraudulent, or dishonest?

I say at the outset to this House that the answer to each of these 3 questions is no, an emphatic no.

Now, I would respectfully present to you, Mr. Speaker, a few pertinent points which in effect—although I may be some time in presenting this matter to the House—can in a very few statements sum up the salient facts involved in this matter.

1. The amount of land in the whole Indian Reserve was 3,425 acres.

2. The amount of saleable land purchased by Dimensional Investments from the Indians was about 2,644 acres.

3. The amount of land purchased by Ontario Hydro was 175.6 acres.

4. In 1956 the same Indians were offered the price of $8 million for this same reserve.

I shall table, in the process of this debate, 40 or so exhibits. So that they may be identified, the first to establish it will be the only evidence I have of that purchase, by a company called New England Industries, for $8 million, of the same land involved in this transaction—an article contained in the Toronto Daily Star, March 6, 1958. I will table this ultimately when I finish with the other documents. It is marked AA.

This transaction fell through in March, 1958, when the Indians requested the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration to cancel the agreement because of default by this company.

5. The price paid by Dimensional Investments to obtain the property was a total of $7,086,946—as I said, $6,501,946 to the Indians, something like $80,000 to the two churches involved in the area, and the balance in agent's fees, surveys, and so forth.

I will be presenting to this House the agreement between Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and Dimensional Investments Limited, and when it is tabled it will be marked as exhibit F.

6. The Canadian National Railways purchased land from these same Indians inside this same reserve in 1958 for $6,600 an acre, and they obtained only an easement. No, I am sorry, the Canadian National Railways obtained the fee, they did not obtain only an easement.

7. Inter-Provincial Pipe Lines paid to these same Indians, inside this reserve, the price of $14,400 an acre in 1958 and obtained only an easement.

8. The city of Sarnia paid in 1959, to these same Indians inside this same reserve, $5,800 an acre and they obtained the fee.

9. St. Clair Chemical Limited purchased from Dimensional Investments in 1959 some land almost beside the sub-station of Ontario Hydro, in the centre of this easement, and paid at the rate of $5,600 an acre and obtained the fee.

10. The Dow Chemical Company purchased, from Dimensional Investments in 1959, land inside this reservation at the rate of $4,200 an acre and they obtained the fee.

11. The Sun Oil Company purchased, from Dimensional Investments, the land inside this reserve at the rate of $4,500 an acre. But the price was really more than that because they exchanged also a lease which they had on certain lands which Dimensional Investments had purchased.

12. Imperial Oil, just outside this reserve and right beside land which Hydro purchased for $7,000 an acre, paid $13,000 an acre, outside the reserve and on its very edge. And immediately beside that, Imperial Oil paid $6,250 an acre for land right beside land they had just paid $13,000 an acre for.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): About half an acre.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would just say to the hon. member for York South—and I will only say it once and I would ask to be supported by the Speaker—that the hon. member has raised some extremely serious allegations. I do not intend to mention names or parties, or to present this in any sense in a political way, but simply as a lawyer defending the truth, as I would think this honourable Legislature would expect was my obligation, as I have advised. So I hope that my hon. friend will indicate the breeding and manners to permit me to finish this statement.

Mr. MacDonald: I just pointed out that it is half an acre. The hon. Minister should not take himself so seriously.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, it is unnecessary for my hon. friend to point anything out. He has taken some two hours to point out a number of statements, and I will refer to them.

If my hon. friend is suggesting that what he said about Hydro is a joke—

Mr. MacDonald: No, I do not suggest it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well then, he said that this matter should not be taken so seriously.

13. There are, at the moment, 3 sales pending in relation to land inside this reserve, I am advised verbally by the agents for the company which now owns the land, or has title in effect to the land inside the reserve.

One is on the waterfront at the rate of approximately $11,000 an acre; one is in the centre of the reserve at the rate of $7,000 an acre; and one is in the centre of the reserve at $6,000 an acre.

14. Ontario Hydro was advised, on a least 3 occasions, that the federal government would not permit us to expropriate this land nor has it ever been the federal government's policy to permit expropriation of Indian land unless the expropriating body could agree upon the price to be paid to the Indians.

I will file in support, a letter to that effect by hon. Mr. Harris—the then Minister, in 1952, to Ontario Hydro. I will file several declarations under oath, several press clippings and an original letter of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration in support of the proposition.

15. Ontario Hydro had no power to expropriate, from either the Indians or Dimensional Investments—I will call them Dimensional from here on in, if I may—nor had Ontario Hydro any power to expropriate any kind of interest which they might have. We were given this advice by our own counsel, and it has been confirmed in writing by Mr. Cyril Carson, QC, whose opinion I shall file in this House.

16. I would point out to this House, as a matter of law, that we can expropriate an interest that a person has in land only if that person is able to enforce specific performance.

Dimensional having no right to enforce specific performance against the Crown, Dimensional had no right or interest which could be expropriated. That is the opinion of Mr. Carson, as was it the opinion of the legal department of Ontario Hydro.

17. Ontario Hydro at no time broke off negotiations with the Indians. It was the desire of the Indians to sell the whole reserve to someone.

We were told to stop negotiations with the Indians by the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration and I will file an affidavit to that effect. I will file the letter advising us to stop negotiating, and I will file a letter of Chief Adams in relation to this matter.

18. Hydro did not negotiate this sale with any former chief Lloyd Williams in this transaction nor was he a member of the council with whom it negotiated at any time when the negotiations were taking place. I shall file an affidavit to that effect.

19. Hydro never offered to pay $2,200 an acre to the Indians, or to anyone else, nor did the Indians or anyone else offer to sell this, or any part of these lands, to Ontario Hydro for $2,200 an acre.

I would like, if I may, to read what will be exhibit B—a declaration by Mr. Charles Ford Stewart Tidy.

I would say to this House one cannot file what is called an affidavit under oath in anything except a matter which is a law suit pending before a court. If there is not a suit pending before the court, as I understand it, one files instead what is called a statutory declaration under oath. These are statutory declarations.

If I make any slip and refer to affidavits, I would ask the indulgence of the House to understand that it is a declaration to which I refer. This is what Mr. Tidy says:

(1) I am the special negotiator in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) On July 22, 1958, I met Chief Telford Adams and the councillors of the Sarnia Indian band at Sarnia to seek permission to negotiate with the individual Indians for the acquisition of land, within the Sarnia Indian reserve, to accommodate the proposed electrical transformer station and power transmission lines.

(3) I was the only employee of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, up to July 22, 1958, to meet the chief and council of the Sarnia Indian band to seek permission to negotiate with the individual Indians, for the acquisition of land, to accommodate a proposed electrical transformer station and power transmission lines within the Sarnia Indian reserve.

(4) I do verily believe that, by an election of the members of the Sarnia Indian band on June 20, 1958, Telford Adams was elected chief of the Sarnia Indian band, replacing former chief Lloyd Williams.

(5) Lloyd Williams, the former chief, was not a member of the council following the June 20, 1958, election.

(6) The former chief of the Sarnia Indian band, Lloyd Williams, was not present at the meeting of July 22, 1958, or any subsequent meeting of the Indian council at which I attended.

(7) At no time did I negotiate with former chief Lloyd Williams in the purchase of land for the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario in the Sarnia reserve.

(8) During the time between the band meeting held on August 21, 1958—to which I will refer soon,

—when Ontario Hydro was granted permission to negotiate with the individual Indians and August 28, when this permission was rescinded—and that ended the negotiations. They were carried on for 7 days only, between August 21 and August 27—

—no member of Ontario Hydro staff including myself carried on negotiations with any member of the Indian band.

This is a statutory declaration made by Mr. Tidy and sworn to, and it will be filed as exhibit B.

Hydro never had an opportunity to discuss any price with the Indians, nor was any price ever discussed between Hydro and the Indians.

I want to file, in support of that, exhibit B1, an affidavit also made by Mr. Tidy as statutory declaration in relation to the same matter, and he says this:

(1) I am the special negotiator in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) When engineering tests completed in June, 1958, proved that land in the Sarnia Indian reserve No. 45 was satisfactory for the purposes of constructing an electrical transformer station, I attended a meeting of the council of the band of the Sarnia Indian reserve on July 22, 1958; a band meeting on August 21, 1958; another council meeting on December 3, 1958; and a further council meeting on December 15, 1958.

(3) I attended these meetings to obtain permission to negotiate, with the individual Indians, for the purchase of the land in the Indian reserve required to accommodate the proposed electrical transformer station and transmission lines, which negotiations are required to be completed prior to a proposition being put forward to the council of the band or the band itself, which procedure is set out in the attached letter dated February 13, 1958, from the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration at Ottawa, Canada.

(4) During these meetings, at no time did I mention compensation or valuations of Indian lands nor could I, until I had completed negotiations with each Indian locatee. Only then could a total price be offered to the band as a whole.

(5) Ontario Hydro was never permitted to take these steps.

I would file this, Mr. Speaker, as exhibit B1.

20. Ontario Hydro for several years has been of the opinion that it would likely have to pay in excess of $5,000 an acre for the land which it subsequently had to pay $7,000 an acre for, if it wanted this land in the reserve, because it cut the land up into 6 separate parcels.

I would ask the hon. members of this House to look, if they would, at map No. 3 and they can count the number of parcels into which this reserve was cut by the process of the transmission line.

I would also draw to the hon. members' attention that there is no provision, in the patent from the Crown, to Dimensional nor to Hydro, for any ingress or egress between the portions except for persons and animals, and there may not be sewers or other services carried from one area into another across the lands of Ontario Hydro.

21. Ontario Hydro engaged no agent to buy the land from either the Indians or Dimensional, but negotiated directly in both cases—and I will file, in support of that, two separate affidavits or declarations under oath, one by Mr. Harry Hustler. Mr. Hustler states on sworn declaration:

(1) I am the director in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and incidentally, Mr. Hustler has been in that division since 1929. He has been responsible for over 93,000 easements being agreed to; over 50,000 acres of land being acquired for approximately $50 million. He assembled all of the land in the St. Lawrence seaway and, to my knowledge, there has never been a breath or suggestion of scandal associated with his name. Mr. Hustler continues in his declaration:

(2) Only myself or members of the staff of the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario conducted negotiations on behalf of the commission for the purchase of lands in the Sarnia Indian reserve. No agents, real estate brokers, or any other person or persons were employed by, or received compensation from, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario in connection with the acquisition of lands within this reserve.

Mr. Hustler makes a second declaration to this effect, and both of these declarations are marked as triple B-BBB—so that they can be found by any of the hon. members, or the press, who would like to look them over at some later date. Mr. Hustler says this:

(1) I am the director in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) During the week following the decision, on December 19, 1958—

this gets a little ahead of the picture and I will refer to it again, but this matter must be answered, —of the Sarnia Indian band to sell part of the Sarnia Indian reserve to Dimensional Investments. I, together with Mr. C. F. Tidy, met with officers of the Dimensional Investment Company, Messrs. S. Ray and Saul Sigler, to discuss purchase from that company of the commission's property requirements. This meeting was the first of many meetings, held with Mr. Sam Ray and Mr. Saul Sigler, to discuss this subject.

(3) Mr. Ray is reported to have said: "We were not approached directly by Hydro." This is untrue.

(4) Mr. Ray is reported as saying real estate agents approached them to buy what became the Hydro parcel. Mr. C. F. S. Tidy and I were the only people acting on behalf of the Ontario Hydro, in any capacity, in the purchase of the lands by Ontario Hydro in the Sarnia Indian reserve.

22. There will be, Mr. Speaker, a great need—as can be vouched for by the hon. Minister 3 seats to my right (Mr. Cathcart) and by others who have been associated for many years—such as Mr. John Barnes, the former chairman of the Sarnia hydro-electric power commission, and those persons associated with the many chemical companies in the chemical valley—a great need to bring additional power to the Sarnia area, whose load growth each year is about 12 per cent.—almost twice that of the rest of the province.

23. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario bought this land because it could not put the new lines that it needed onto the old poles that existed, nor could it put the new poles or towers onto the old easements.

My hon. friends could do me a great service if they would be kind enough to turn to the photograph at the rear of the exhibit, and compare the new towers with the old poles, and see the number of lines involved, the height and the general capital and engineering involvement.

I would say also to my hon. friends—if they would be kind enough to follow me—if they would look at what is marked as map No. 2, they will see the Indian reserve in green patching. The red lines on map No. 2 represent the easement across the Indian reserve.

If they will turn to map No. 3 they will see on the same map, only in much heavier lines, that we have purchased the easement and the additional amount of land which has been purchased. In effect, the big red blob in the middle of the reserve is the land upon which is situated the completed station which is now delivering power to the area of Sarnia and the chemical valley.

I draw, to the attention of this House, that it was the opinion of the engineering and planning divisions of Ontario Hydro that the additional power lines could not be, (a) attached to the old poles; or (b) brought in upon the old easements.

Quite clearly, if anyone looks at map No. 2, it is evident that there is no space there for the transformer station to step down the additional power, where the two red lines cross at the top of the reserve.

24. The power lines on the old easements which the hon. members saw on map No. 2 were what we call a single circuit—115,000-volt circuit—on wooden poles.

Hon. members can see that there are two of them crossing the reserve, and what were needed—in addition to those, but not in substitution to them—were two new 230,000-volt circuits, each one of which has 3 lines.

As hon. members can see by the photograph, the tower has 6 lines hanging from it. These represent two 230,000-volt lines, the highest voltage carried in this province, although we are presently experimenting at Coldwater in the neighbourhood of 600,000 volts.

The old poles could not carry the new wires, in addition to which it was impossible to do so because they would have been dangerous. Also, these wires will be crossing heavily built-up areas, and it is the policy of Ontario Hydro—and has been now for some time—to carry 230,000-volt lines on steel towers well up in the air.

Where these towers are near heavily inhabited areas, because of safety and control of the rights of way, it is the policy of Hydro to buy the land under the wires, as they did on the line going out from London and coming into Sarnia.

25. This is of particular importance to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), who raised some serious questions in relation to this matter, and who I am confident will be concerned about this particular answer.

At no time was Hydro interested in buying only 32 acres of this land. The 32 acres covered only the bare land underneath the fence site of the station itself, and allowed nothing for expansion around the station which will inevitably take place, because the facilities we have just built are to meet present demands and perhaps those of the next few years. At a 12 per cent. increase over the next number of years, obviously there is need for room to expand.

Nor does the area of 32 acres take into consideration—hon. members will see the layout if they will be kind enough to turn to map No. 3 again—any of the land across the top of the reserve down to the bottom of the reserve, or across the angle of the reserve.

A number of hon. members may ask the reason for this strip of land, right down at the bottom, leading from the site of the station. That is because we anticipate that we may, in a few years, have to build a steam generating station on the St. Clair River. When we do, we will have to bring power up to this sub-station, and it was logical to buy the land now while the prices—whether they are high or not, at least in relation to the prices that might be expected to obtain in the future—would, we felt, be more economical.

I want to say to the hon. members, although it has been said on a number of occasions that Hydro was interested in buying 32 acres of land, the fact is that, inside the fenced area of the sub-station alone, there are 32.189 acres of land at this moment. Around the fenced area is an area for expansion and enlargement of the station which, we believe, will come before long. The 32 acres do not include any of the other strips across which the towers and the wires must be carried.

In support of this, I want to file what I have marked as exhibit A. This is a letter of Ontario Hydro starting this whole matter off, lifting the whole matter off the ground. It is dated February 11, 1958, addressed by Mr. Tidy, deputy director of property, to The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Indian affairs branch, Ottawa, and this is what he said:

We are attaching hereto a sketch showing an area of approximately 32 acres which the commission would like to acquire for the purpose of a transformer station.

Now, let us be logical, what is the point of having a transformer station in a vacuum, if one cannot get in to it and one cannot get out of it? That is what a transformer station is for—to step down power. Mr. Tidy continues:

It will be seen that it is at the junction of two existing transmission lines on the west side of Scott Street between Churchill and LaSalle Road.

And if hon. members would turn to map No. 2, or map No. 3, they will see the area to which Mr. Tidy is referring, where the two red lines converge on the reserve. That is what is known as the west side of Scott Street between Churchill and LaSalle Road. Mr. Tidy continues:

Our engineering division would like to make a thorough investigation of this land to see if it would be suitable for our purposes, and perhaps inspect the surrounding property.

But before we enter into the reserve for this purpose, we wanted to apprise you of our intentions and obtain your permission to proceed in the accepted manner.

As we should like to do this very shortly, it would be appreciated if we might hear from you in this matter as soon as possible.

That I will file as exhibit A.

26. The line from London to Sarnia is now in service and operating.

27. The Indians would not sell us what we needed because it would break up the whole reserve and, in that connection, I would like to quote a statement of Chief Adams contained in an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail, dated June 17, 1959, in which the chief says this:

Chief Adams says that, at one point during the band's negotiations with Hydro, the commission was urged to take the entire 3,100 acres. He said the Indians felt that a cobweb of power lines crossing their land would detract from its market value, and they were anxious to dispose of their land in a block.

That is the statement of the man who was and, as I understand it, is presently the chief of the tribe involved.

The fact of the matter is that the Indians had been trying for a number of years to sell this whole area in a block. They tried to sell it, in 1956, to New England Developments for $8 million, and the deal fell through, and it was a great heartbreak to the Indians. My hon. friend, the Minister from Lambton West (Mr. Cathcart) knows that. And I am confident the hon. member for Brant (Mr.

Nixon) may also know that. There was much interest in these matters.

The basic additional fact of this matter is that I would want the hon. members, if they will—in looking at these maps—to turn to another map, and they will see, on what is called map No. 1, the reserve patched in sort of a red dot fashion. There is a heavy green line on map No. 1, the second sheet, around the outside of this reserve. It is a heavy green line, and it runs up the centre of the river and around the land to the north, and comes south and around the Indian reserve on the south. That is the limit of the city of Sarnia which has taken in this reserve.

The city of Sarnia has developed tremendously, as I will point out in a few moments, and included this Indian reserve which made it a very valuable land asset. The Indians were aware of that and rightly so.

28. Ontario Hydro had 5 alternatives. At least I am going to submit that to this House—5 alternatives. Perhaps it may be that someone can suggest another alternative. If so, it has certainly escaped those who have given this matter the very greatest of concern and study. They are these:

(1) Do nothing at all. I will show hon. members, in a few moments, why that was not possible, quite in addition to the fact that power demand was increasing in the city of Sarnia by approximately 12 per cent. a year.

(2) To do what we did, which is shown on map No. 3, and I will come in due course to the costs of these things.

(3) To take alternative No. 1, which is shown on map No. 4, and this would have cost, from a capital engineering point of view, $1.5 million to $2.5 million more than the cost that we paid for what we did, which is shown on map No. 3.

I will re-state myself, if I may, map No. 3 was what we did, map No. 4 was the first alternative and at the bottom of the page hon. members will see alternative scheme No. 1, map No. 4. This scheme on map No. 4 would have cost from $1.5 million to $2.5 million more than the scheme that was carried out on map No. 3.

(4) To carry out scheme No. 2, which is shown on map No. 5. This would have cost between $2.9 million and $3.8 million more than the cost of what is shown on map No. 3, namely, what we did.

(5) To follow route No. 3 which is shown on map No. 6, and this route would have cost us between $663,000 and $2.15 million more than that which we did; it is shown on map No. 3.

The hon. members of this House may wonder about the variation of from $663,000 to $2.15 million. This depends upon engineering factors to which I will make reference in due course.

Now, these then are the facts. Basically, I respectfully submit if any hon. member in this House was sitting, as I was, on a commission, and had come before him some of the finest hydraulic engineers and planning men in this country who said to him that he had 5 alternatives—to do nothing; to follow routes 1, 2, 3, or 4; and routes 2, 3 and 4 would have cost from $663,000 to nearly $4 million more than the routes they recommended—I ask any one hon. member of this House, rhetorically speaking, if he would consider rejecting on his experience this advice?

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would like to say to the hon. member for York South that I shall be, I should think, two and a half or 3 hours in presenting this matter to the House, so I would respectfully request that I be asked no questions. I shall do my very best, when I am finished, to further explain any matters on which I have not satisfied the hon. members in the process.

Therefore, the issue is, had hon. members been any one of the 5 members of the commission, would they have done what we did? If they would not have done what we did, what would they have done, knowing there were only 4 alternatives to the one that they followed—one of which was to do nothing and 3 of which were to spend a great deal more money than was spent?

Mr. Speaker, I would like if I may—since those are the salient aspects of the matter—to develop some of the facts that sit as the mortar between the bricks.

Would the hon. members be kind enough to turn to the first sheet on their exhibit, which is known as the key map? There they will see the method by which Sarnia and the chemical valley were supplied with power before all of this happened.

It was supplied with power by 3 separate lines, each one of which is 115,000 volts, the first one coming from Woodstock and London into the reserve; the second one coming from St. Thomas above the reserve and missing the reserve; and the third one coming from Chatham and Wallaceburg, into the right-hand bottom part of the reserve.

Sarnia, Mr. Speaker, has been growing in demand at the rate of approximately 12 per cent. a year, as I have indicated—almost twice that of the growth of the rest of this province. In this area, in 1951, the gross value of its products and services was $194 million; in 1957 it was $355 million. It has the third largest refining industry in the world, in crude capacity.

In this chemical valley which is fed by this power are these companies—and it is an astounding collection: Imperial Oil Company, the Sun Oil Company, the Polymer Corporation, the Dow Chemical Company, Fibre Glass (Canada) Limited, Canadian Oil, Cabot Carbon, Ethyl Corporation, Dupont of Canada.

This group of companies—just the ones I have named—have an investment in this area of $250 million. These companies in 1959 alone spent in this area $20 million on extensions.

Now, to these companies, Mr. Speaker, not only is adequate power essential, but something even greater than that—dependable power. Fluctuations in voltage can be disastrous to their production.

I would like, for the purposes of the record, to give hon. members several examples.

In the production of chlorine, with a one-minute break in power, the entire company, in making chlorine, is out of production for 10 hours as a result of a one-minute break.

In the case of ammonia, the slightest voltage disturbance or change—I would say that 4 slight dips in voltage over a 3-month period caused one company $91,000 in lost production.

In the case of one of the nylon producers, two short interruptions—tiny interruptions in a two-day period—cost the company, in lost production, some $200,000.

The reason for it is that everything that is in production when the interruption comes is lost, or the product is of dump quality that they almost have to give away.

In another instance of producing chlorine, with a very short interruption, the company was out of operation for 14 hours.

In the case of an oil refining company with a very short interruption, it was also out of operation approximately 14 hours, at a cost of about $10,000.

Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, some of these companies in receiving power are so sensitive to changes in voltage and changes in flow that when they switch, through an automatic closure, from one system to another at the same voltage it is enough to destroy their whole batch—the whole production run—that they are working on at the moment.

I would think that it could be said that the chemical valley is one of the most particular demanding type of customers that any energy resource corporation or supplier could have, and it is not said disparagingly but with some pride. Of necessity, they demand a standard of service which is difficult to obtain at best.

Despite the fact that in 10 years Ontario Hydro has spent about $1 billion in creating new assets, we were for many years somewhat behind demand in our supply. Then we sort of came even and now, in some areas, we have got a little ahead on the whole.

In relation to Sarnia, because of its tremendous booming bursting expansion, we have done well to keep pace, but we have just, at that, kept pace. That is why, in 1956 and 1957, it was realized that in 1957, or early 1958, the construction of adequate and additional supplies of power for Sarnia would be necessary to the chemical valley.

Granted, there may still be some interruptions, but one can reduce the number of voltage variations and reduce the number of interruptions by increasing the supply.

It was planned by Ontario Hydro that, in order to increase the supply, there should be brought to Sarnia two circuits of 230,000 volts each, which means 6 lines carrying power. We had three 115,000-volt lines and circuits, and we needed two 230,000-volt circuits, in addition to that which we already had.

There is an additional reason, however, why this power was needed. In 1959, Ontario Hydro exported power worth nearly $10 million—power that at the time we did not need—and that $10 million has been applied by Ontario Hydro to build capital plants and assist in keeping rates as low as they are.

With additional power between London and Sarnia, and the interconnection between Sarnia and the United States, which hon. members will find on map No. 1 at AG—that is to say, if they look at the label across the top, they are 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, down the left-hand column and the right-hand column.

If hon. members will look at the columns which would be—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: —I am sorry, 1G-1 at the top and G at the side, they will see the interchange between the United States and this area.

By having a greater capacity to carry power into this area, we would increase our capacity to sell surplus power to the United States which is a considerable source of income to the Ontario Hydro.

So I will summarize by saying to the House that we had three 115,000-volt lines, we needed two 230,000-volt lines more. I also want to point out that two 230,000-volt lines are the same thing as eight 115,000-volt lines, and the reason this additional power was needed—and these lines were not in substitution for that which we had but in addition to it—was for greater supply, for the interconnection, and thirdly, for better service.

We were, in effect, attempting to keep pace with the demand, and time was of the essence.

As I say to the hon. members of this House, this was planned in 1957, to be built in 1958. But, because of tremendous delays involved in the acquisition of this Indian land, it was not possible to build these lines until a year later, 1959.

Mr. Speaker, if hon. members would be kind enough to refer once again to map No. 1, the new lines which we have built—the two 230,000-volt new lines—commenced at London on a 60-foot right-of-way on the towers shown on the photograph, and we purchased the land in the city of London and for 4 miles outside of it, on which these towers rest, and from there to an area about 4 miles outside of the Indian reserve we carried the towers on an easement, not owning the land, but on an easement.

Land C is owned by the farmers. And it is right beside the old towers which hon. members see on the key map coming from London, the old 115,000-volt line.

Again I say to hon. members, the photograph shows clearly what the new lines and the old line look like. When we got within 4 miles of the Sarnia area, we then started to buy the land upon which these towers rest, 60 feet wide, and we purchased, as I say, in the neighbourhood of 3 to 4 miles out from the city of Sarnia.

This is a policy which Ontario Hydro has been pursuing for a number of years throughout Ontario where there is likely to be a heavily built-up area. The policy is to purchase the land under the towers for a number of reasons:

(1) So that we can control the land and the use that is made of it.

(2) To stop building underneath it because it can be dangerous if one of these lines, in an ice storm—and the line between towers can carry up to 7 tons of ice—crash down on a house underneath it.

The companies in England have experimented with building under towers, but it has never been carried out in this province. There is the occasional exception where, of necessity, there has been no alternative, or the lines have been put underground, or the buildings were there first. We have always tried to avoid it because of the dangers involved, and the lack of control of the property.

So, I say to this House that, for the reasons I have indicated, it was essential to get this power to Sarnia. There was only one way of getting it there and that was by a line—an important line—from London to Sarnia, and time was of the essence.

In connection with whether it was needed, and how it should be built, and what course it should take, the commission has, of course, to rely upon the 3 divisions responsible in this connection: the engineering division; the property division; and the consumer service.

I have indicated to my hon. friends the possibility of a future steam plant. They will see this on the key map. We are not sure if it will be built, or exactly where it will be built. This will depend on the development of the demand for power in the Sarnia and other areas. It likely will be built. Where exactly, as I say, will depend upon the demand, but when it is built, lines will radiate out like the fingers on your hand, lines will go out from it to all directions of the province, one of which will undoubtedly have to go north to Sarnia to cross the reserve.

That is why, on map No. 3, there is the large strip down to the bottom of the reserve, from the transformer station, to accommodate the new line whenever the steam plant is in operation.

I would appreciate it if my hon. friends will be kind enough to follow me on map No. 1. They will notice that the line coming from Chatham enters the reserve at the area marked 4F—that is, down at the southeast corner of the reserve. It enters there and it crosses up to the new station. That is the 115,000-volt line which now exists, and it has been integrated, as the engineers say, into the new station.

A second line enters the reserve in the centre of square 4E. This is from London. This is the 115,000-volt line to which I have referred before, and right beside it are the two 230,000-volt lines we have just built, which also come from London. These 3—they are not lines, they are circuits—lead directly into the transformer station.

Hon. members will see the third old line entering onto the map on the right side at E6, and it follows northerly through 5D and into 4D, and it turns and goes southerly a little through 3D and goes over to a sub-station.

Now, I repeat to my hon. friends that the line coming into the reserve at 4F is on wooden poles. The line coming in at 4E is on wooden poles; the two new circuits coming in on 4E are on towers; and the line at 4D, 3D and so on—leading to the sub-station in 2D—are on wooden poles.

Now then, where do these lines lead to?

If my hon. friends would be kind enough to look at map No. 1, they will see the purpose of the whole exercise is to get this power to the two sub-stations. This was the purpose of the whole exercise before the present Indian reserve situation. The one sub-station is that red blob shown in square 2F, marked "Ontario Hydro-electric sub-station." The second one is two squares above it, in 2D.

What is a sub-station for? It is this: Power comes in at 115,000 volts and it is much too hot and much too heavy for anybody to handle, so it has to be "revved" down, or stepped down, into quantities that can be used. So the power comes in through 3 lines to these two sub-stations at 115,000 volts, and is revved down from 115,000 volts to 27,000 volts, which can be consumed by industry, or lower quantities depending on who is going to use the power directly from the sub-station.

What is the purpose of the station which is shown on this map No. 1 marked E3? That is the big red blob in the middle of the Indian reserve.

The purpose of that station is simply this: That the two new lines will come into the Indian reserve at 230,000 volts, and that is too high even for the sub-stations at 2F and 2D to handle. So it has to be stepped down from 230,000 volts to 115,000 volts, and it travels out from the station at 3E at 115,000 volts to the two sub-stations I have referred to.

So the power comes into two of the sub-stations at 115,000 volts, and is stepped down to 27,000 volts, or some lesser amount. The power comes into the new station at 230,000 volts on one side and it goes out the other side at 115,000 volts to the two sub-stations.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, assuming that this is back in 1958, before we built these lines marked on map No. 3 or the station which is the big red heavy blob in the reserve, and assuming we only have the land shown on map No. 2, and they were only an easement and we could not add a wire to them without losing our easement—we could not add a wire or a pole or change them in any way without losing our easement—these were the questions which we had to ask ourselves:

(1) Where were we going to build the new lines, the two new circuits that were going to come into Sarnia? How were we going to bring them into Sarnia?

(2) Where were we going to build the new station? In the reserve, off the reserve or where?

(3) How were we going to connect the new station with the two old sub-stations? This was asked because they had to be connected. The new station was for the purpose of breaking down the power into smaller quantities to be handled by the old sub-station so they obviously had to be connected.

(4) We had to have a railway siding. Where was it to be built?

(5) We needed service roads. Where were they to be located?

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is easy, very easy indeed, to ask: "Why did you not build it here, or why did you not build it there?" or, "Land is cheaper there, why did you not put it there?"

The basic fact is that the farther we got away from those lines that crossed, the more expensive the whole project became.

So, although the land might turn out to be a lot cheaper, the engineering became infinitely more expensive, and the large cost of this project was not in land but in the capital construction of the towers and the stations. It was not in the land on which they sat.

Now, what were the requisites of the site? I am going through this briefly. I am a layman and I know very little about it, other than my experience of a year and a half on Hydro. But these were things that were put to me, and I am putting them to hon. members in just the same way that they were put to me.

What are the requisites of a station such as this? There are 5.

(1) It should have a railway siding.

(2) It should be built on firm, solid land.

(3) It should have land coming to it and land going out of it. There is no point building a station in the middle of the desert with nothing coming to it and nothing going out of it. The purpose of the exercise is to break down the power that comes in, that obviously must have one or more lines coming in, and lines going out.

(4) It was necessary to integrate this new station—that is, to connect it up in sympathy and understanding with the two existing substations so they all 3 operated as a total unit.

(5) It was necessary, wherever we built, to prepare for and to obtain sufficient land for future development, as well as extensions to the station and additional lines.

Now, those were the 5 requisites of a station.

May I first of all explain, or give some indication to this House, why did we need a railway siding? I think it is quite a logical question for a person to ask, and this is why.

Each transformer weighs approximately 100 tons or 200,000 pounds, and even if we can get, from time to time, special permission from The Department of Highways, or The Department of Transport, to carry these 200,000-pound transformers, each one of them must sit on a 15-ton truck.

We have 115 tons, first of all, that the road or bridge has to carry. Secondly, these transformers are about 16 feet high, not including the truck on which they sit.

Therefore, whatever road or bridge we are going to carry them over must be capable of carrying this tremendous weight.

The weight of the transformers is 80,000 pounds greater than the amount allowed on our highways to start with; and, secondly, one has no assurance that it can either be carried by the road over which it may have to travel, or clear the bridges under which it may have to pass.

Hon. members may think that is rather amusing, but the significant time that we need to get a transformer in is when, during a torrential rainstorm or some crisis, bridges are out and then the power has been taken off due to some failure in the transmission. That is the time we need to be able to get our transformer in—haul out the old one, and put in a new one. So it is not just a question of putting a railway siding in to instal the transformer station. It is also necessary for the purposes of servicing at all times, but particularly during emergencies.

Now let me just bring this all into perspective, because railway sidings cost—without the land on which they sit—about $57,000 a mile. When the Canadian National Railways were building their railway siding in the Indian reserve—the very reserve that we are talking about—they paid $6,600 an acre and it takes 5 acres for a mile of line. Hon. members can work it out to somewhere around $95,000 a mile for a railway siding alone. So, one can understand that a railway siding is of some consequence to where a station is, in fact, located.

Now, the next question which might very well be asked is: Why did not we use the old easement upon which to carry the lines?

So, since we may have to wait to see what happened to John's other wife, noting that it is 6 of the clock, I would ask that the debate now should stand over till 8 of the clock.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): When the House rose this evening at 6 o'clock, I had made reference to the fact that for any station it was necessary to have 5 general characteristics: (1) was a railway siding; (2) was the solid land; (3) was the land leading in and out of the station; (4) was to integrate the system which existed; and (5) was to have room for future expansion.

I then discussed the issue of why a railway was needed, and I would like, if I might, to turn to the second question of: "Why not use the old easements?"

1. The old easements were wooden poles, and they were incapable of carrying 6 new wires of 230,000 volts.

2. The present policy of Ontario Hydro, from the point of view of safety, is that 230,000-volt wires shall be carried on steel towers.

3. We were unable, under the old easement agreement, to enlarge or to deal with the old easements under the easement agreements as they existed. Those agreements permitted specific things under specific circumstances, and without renegotiating the situation it was impossible to deal with the old easement.

4. It was necessary to integrate the systems, and in order to do this, additions had to be made to the old easements as well as to the lines on the poles on the old easements.

5. It has been the policy of Ontario Hydro, as I indicated this afternoon, to buy land upon which these steel towers—and even wooden poles in recent years—are carried when they go through heavily built-up areas; partially because of safety, partially so as to control the use of the land under and around and near the towers; and thirdly because, in many cases, easements are only for a limited period of time and require renegotiation in some cases.

When the period comes to renegotiate, it may well be that the value of the land has so greatly increased that any easement crossing the land is almost as expensive as to own the fee of the land.

These towers which are very high and not particularly attractive, and which carry in effect a very heavy load of electricity, are not something that someone looks forward to crossing his property, but accepts almost as his contribution towards progress and development of his community, together with any compensation which is paid to him in this connection.

The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) has spoken eloquently in relation to this matter, and has been—quite frankly, I would say—of much help to me in making suggestions and recommendations to Hydro and the agricultural federation, with reference to the compensation to be paid for these towers.

6. As I indicated, the policy of Hydro is to carry its high tension—that is to say 230,000-volt wires—on steel towers on land owned by itself in built-up communities. In this particular case, we had to give consideration to the amount of land needed to expand the necessary number of wires, in the event that this community continued to grow at the rate of 12 per cent., and to the fact that steam generation from the south would have to be carried north into the valley.

Now, I have pointed out to the hon. members of this House, according to map No. 2, these are the lands on which, under easement, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario had a right to carry its 115,000-volt circuits—and only that, and only on wooden poles. Map No. 3 is the land which the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario purchased from Dimensional Investments.

Hon. members will see that we bought not only the old land which was under easement, but also new land over which the new transmission lines would pass, and upon which the new transformer station would be built.

The reason why the old lines were purchased was because it was necessary to make changes on the old lines in order to integrate them with the new system. In order to do so, when the changes were to be made—in order to secure service—we felt that it was essential to purchase the lands on which these lines were carried. It was the recommendation of the engineering and planning divisions of Ontario Hydro, to the commission, that the plan shown on map No. 3 should be carried out.

There were alternatives which I have indicated to my hon. friends in this House, Mr. Speaker, as shown on maps No. 4, 5, and 6 and known as alternatives 1, 2 and 3. But from an engineering point of view, that which was carried out on map No. 3 was a more desirable plan and it should be weighed from that point of view unless someone figures he is above that kind of qualification; and secondly, from the point of view of cost, which will be shown in due course to this House.

The estimate by the planning and engineering departments of Hydro was that any other alternative available to Ontario Hydro would have cost more, in the total net amount, than to have carried out the plan which it did as shown on map No. 3.

Therefore, Ontario Hydro was desirous of purchasing the land shown on map No. 3 from the Indians.

But one is not able just to buy land from the Indians when one decides one wants to. It is necessary, first of all, to obtain—before one can even negotiate with the Indians, and quite properly so—the consent of the federal Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Now, there is no doubt, as I have indicated to this House, that the Indians from 1952 in this reserve, when we first, as I recall, acquired easements across it, were becoming aware that, once their reserve had been taken into the municipality of Sarnia, it was obtaining considerable value, and they were going to sell it as a whole for a considerable sum if they were able to do so.

That is what, quite probably, I am convinced, induced them to enter into an agreement with the New England Industries. In 1956, they entered into a purchase for approximately $8 million for this reserve. Unfortunately, this transaction did not materialize and was called off in 1958, due to the inability of the company to carry it out.

Hydro, therefore, as I said also this afternoon, anticipated itself in that it had cut across the reserve like the fingers on a hand on the periphery of time, into 5 or 6 sections.

Because Hydro had cut this reserve into 5 or 6 sections, Hydro felt that it was likely, because of the land that it was buying, that it would have to pay in the neighbourhood of $5,000 or more an acre for the land it needed.

However, it first approached the Indians by dealing, as is required, with The Department of Citizenship and Immigration through the Indian affairs branch.

On February 11, to give a chronological development of these specific steps, Ontario Hydro asked for permission to go onto a specific site to test the foundations and the land solidarity of a specific 32 acres, so that it could decide whether—on that 32 acres—a specific transformer station could be located.

If the land was sufficient, it was Hydro's intention then to negotiate, not only for that land, but logically the land leading to it and from it for its lines and other needs.

If it turned out that the 32 acres were not of sufficient quality, then obviously there was no point in talking about the balance of the land.

Therefore, exhibit A, which is being filed—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, what day was that?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The letter I referred to this afternoon, my hon. friend, was dated February 11, and I read it into the record.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Why does the hon. Minister answer some hon. members and not others?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I pick and choose amongst persons whom I think are interested in information, as opposed to those who are interested in publicity.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, in relation to this particular letter which I indicated this afternoon, my hon. friend has asked about this letter which is marked as exhibit A and dated February 11, 1958. Mr. Tidy, the deputy director of property, asked the Indian affairs branch for permission to go onto the 32-acre area to test the solidarity and so on of the land. I read that letter this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I indicated this afternoon, I think, that the amount of land on which this station was based was 32.1892 acres. I have checked this since I came back to the House, and I find the figure is 32.139 acres.

In response to this letter to which my hon. friend directs the attention of the House, a letter was received in reply from The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which I will file as exhibit BB. It reads as follows:

DEAR MR. HUDDLESTON:

*Re: The proposed transformer station,
Sarnia Indian land reserve No. 45.*

We have your letter dated February 11, 1958. The Sarnia band is holding its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday, March 4, at 8 o'clock in the evening, in the council hall on the reserve, and this might be the proper time to have a representative discuss the matter with the band council.

It is noted that you wish to make a thorough investigation of the site, to see if it is suitable, and if you prefer to do this before you approach the band council, we believe that this can be arranged through our Indian superintendent, Mr. W. L. Leroy. We would suggest that you telephone him, and he can arrange to notify the Indian locatee—

a particular name to which I shall make reference soon, —as well as to advise the chief or other members of the band council as to your intention.

If it is only necessary to have a look at the site without digging any holes, this could be done on the day of the council meeting.

So, of course, I would say, in parenthesis, it is impossible to assess a site on which such tremendous weight will be put without digging holes.

Continuing the letter of February 13, 1958, it reads:

The reason we suggest that you have a representative, at the council meeting, is to make arrangements for negotiations with the individual Indians concerned, so that you will be in a position, at a subsequent monthly meeting, to put forward your proposal in detail.

(signed)

W. C. BETHUNE,
Superintendent,
reserve and trusts.

The next event that took place, after one or more telephone calls, was a letter from The Department of Citizenship and Immigration dated May 12, which I will file as exhibit C. It was addressed to Ontario Hydro and it said.

DEAR MR. TIDY,

We are in receipt of your letter from our department, with regard to the interview of yourself and Mr. Huddleston with our reserve and trusts division, having regard to your proposed purchase of right-of-way and a station site on our Sarnia Indian reserve.

At our regular monthly council meeting of May 6, we discussed this matter, and permission has been granted your staff to enter the reserve at your convenience and to carry out such tests as you may require.

I would suggest that you contact the writer prior to entry on the reserve, and we will be pleased to provide you with a letter to this effect.

Yours very truly,

(signed)

WARD L. LEROY,
Superintendent,
Sarnia Indian agency.

And I draw to Mr. Speaker's attention that, so far as of May 12, we have neither been on the reserve nor have we met or dealt with a single Indian in regard to the land involved.

The next step was on May 13. Ontario Hydro replied to this letter and this is what we said:

This will acknowledge your letter of the twelfth instant, advising that the council of the Sarnia Indian reserve, at its last regular meeting, granted permission to the commission for its forces to enter upon the reserve to carry out any tests as required in connection with the proposed land transformation station.

We have also requested that our forces contact you before entry into the reserve is made in order that certain formalities may be cleared.

When the results of the tests are available to us, we shall again communicate with you, because we should then be in a position to advise you as to the requirements of the commission, if any, and go over them with you in detail prior to any meeting with the band council, so that we may be fully apprised of your views and advice concerning the whole matter.

In the meantime, we should like to take this opportunity to thank you for your kind co-operation in this matter.

(signed)

C. S. F. TIDY,
Deputy director of property,
Ontario Hydro.

Now I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that this is May 13, and we have neither yet been on the property nor have we yet met an Indian.

The next step I would draw to the attention of the House was a letter dated June 17. This is a letter directed to the chief and councillors of the Sarnia Indian reserve, in care of Mr. Leroy, superintendent of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration:

DEAR SIRs:

In order that the commission might increase its delivery of power to the Sarnia area, we shall have to expand our existing facilities to accommodate this increase, which unfortunately appears to affect the Sarnia Indian reserve due to the location of the power lines in the reserve.

We should therefore like to have an opportunity to discuss the commission's requirements with you at your next council meeting, so that you may be aware of the proposed plans of the commission, for which we should like to have your approval and consent to approach the Indian landowners to secure the necessary rights.

We should be pleased to hear from you in this matter as soon as possible, with the advice that we may attend your next council meeting.

(signed)

C. S. F. TIDY,

*Deputy director of property,
Ontario Hydro.*

At this time we have entered the reserve and we have proven up that the land is adequate for this station, but we have, as of June 17, not yet met nor negotiated with a single person in connection with the Indian tribe.

Interestingly enough, I filed a declaration this afternoon which asserted that, on June 20, three days following this letter, whoever then was the chief of the tribe—I believe from what was said by an hon. member of this House, a Mr. Williams—was replaced after an election, and a new chief was elected on June 20. If, in fact, the new chief was elected on June 20, it is quite evident—at least I respectfully submit it to this House, and it is submitted under oath—that Hydro at no time negotiated anything with Chief Williams.

Now, on July 22, Mr. Tidy met the council of the Indian reserve. Up until this time, on July 20, neither the council nor the band nor the locatees had ever been told how much land Hydro needed, because we had had no opportunity to communicate with them. Indeed, until the date in June, we did not even know whether the land would be satisfactory.

At that time Mr. Tidy indicated, when he met with the council on July 22, that it was his opinion that Ontario Hydro would need something in the neighbourhood of 30 or 32 acres for the station, and something in the neighbourhood of 70 acres for the new lines, plus the land which was covered by the old easements.

This is asserted, too, as I have indicated to my hon. friends in this House, by virtue of exhibit B, which I read this afternoon, in which Mr. Tidy said at paragraph 2:

On July 22, 1958, I met Chief Telfer Adams and the councillors of the Sarnia Indian band, at Sarnia, to seek permission to negotiate with individual Indians for the acquisition of land within the Sarnia Indian reserve, to accommodate the proposed electrical transformation station and power transmission lines.

And he goes on to say he was the only employee who did this, and he is aware of those persons who attended these meetings.

Now, the next step that took place was that Ontario Hydro received a letter on August 8, 1958, which will be tabled as exhibit F, addressed to Mr. Tidy, and it says:

At the Sarnia council meeting of August 5, the council indicated they would like you to attend a special band meeting to be held Thursday, August 21.

At this meeting, they would like you personally to explain to band members the details of the new Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario project which is to be erected on the Sarnia Indian reserve. If this is agreeable to you, would you please advise this office.

Yours very truly,

(signed)

WARD L. LEROY,

*Superintendent,
Sarnia Indian agency.*

Now, let me recapitulate. We met once on July 22, and at that time, under oath, Mr. Tidy says price was never mentioned. The next meeting was to be held on August 21—Thursday, August 21—at which Mr. Tidy was asked to describe what Hydro needed.

The fact of the matter is that, when he met, on July 22, with the council, the council indicated that this matter was too large a proposition for them to consider, and the council wanted the band to make the decision.

Therefore, on July 22, Mr. Tidy was advised that he would have to present his programme in relation to Hydro development to the full band.

Now, I think perhaps at this stage I should indicate to the House the 3 general levels in relation to an Indian reserve, as I understand them.

First, there is the council of 5 men, who are, in effect, the parliament or cabinet of all of the members of the reserve.

Then there is the band which is the total membership—everybody who lives on the reserve.

Third, there is what is called "the locatee," the individual Indian who has a specific interest in a specific piece of land.

If one wants to purchase land in an Indian reserve, he must settle with two people. In effect (1) the individual locatee who has an interest in that particular piece of property; and (2) the whole band, which also has an interest in that same piece of property.

In short, every piece of property on an Indian reserve has two interests in it; first the individual person who is sitting on it presumably, and he is called "the locatee"; then the total membership also has an interest in the particular property. Until one has negotiated with every individual locatee along the whole line, and has found what they want for their interest, he is never in a position to go back to find out what the band wants for its interest in the same land. When he does, he adds the two together and that is the price.

And that, therefore, is the procedure under which one buys land as a white man from the Indian, first after obtaining approval from the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Now then, on August 21, Mr. Tidy appeared before the band—this is the first time he has appeared before the band—he has appeared once before the council, and now he appears before the band with this request.

He said:

I want to be able now to go to see the individual locatees on this land, this long strip of land that we want. We want to go and see them. The land is shown on map No. 3, the red lines. Those are the locatees that we would like to see, because only when we know what those locatees want for each strip along there, and then we come back to you, the whole tribe, and we find out what you want for your interest in those strips, and we add the two together; only then and never before can we ever make an offer.

The Indians know that. Anyone who has ever dealt with them knows that that is so.

On August 21, Hydro appeared before the band to ask permission to go to speak to the individual locatee, and at that time a vote was held and the vote, as I recall, was 34 to two—34 in favour of Hydro being able to go to see the locatee, two votes against.

That was on August 21, and we felt fairly confident that now, at last, as we needed this land, we were going to be able to go out and deal with all of these Indians who had an interest along all of these strips marked on map No. 3.

It would have taken a while but we were hopeful of being able to conclude it. It was necessary for the purposes as determined by our departments in Hydro.

But, on August 28, in the same month, 7 days later, we received this letter from The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, from the superintendent of Sarnia Indian agency, and this is what he said:

At a special council meeting of the Sarnia Indian band held this evening, council revoked the authority of your commission to negotiate with the property owners of the Sarnia Indian band, and granted to the Crown Trust Company of Toronto, Ontario, the right to negotiate with the property owners of a very large portion of the reserve.

This office yesterday, by a letter of identification, gave your Mr. D. M. Whalen permission to commence negotiations authorized your commission by the Sarnia band on August 21. This permission will now have to be withdrawn, and we would appreciate advice from you as to where we may contact Mr. Whalen.

May I refer to the order paper—question No. 27, on page 7:

Why did the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario not complete a deal for purchase of land directly from the Indian band?

I say to my hon. friends, the reason for it was the letter of August 28, from the superintendent of Sarnia Indian agency, who forbade us to deal further with the Indians. We could deal no further, nor did we.

The next matter to which I would like to refer is this. We were now in the situation that we could not deal any further with the Indians. We had never at this moment talked price, because there was never any point in talking price till we had talked to the locatees and then come back to the band. We had never reached the locatees, so obviously we never talked price to the band. That is so patent that, no matter how many affidavits a man may have filed, evidently it is foolish to talk about the fact that Ontario Hydro could have offered $2,200 an acre when it had never talked to the locatees to know how much they wanted for their interest, much less what the band wanted for its interest in the same amount of land.

If anybody were to ask why did we stop dealing with the Indians, the fact is we were stopped at the request of the Indians and the request of the Indian affairs branch, which had been put in movement by a specific resolution of the council of the Indians themselves.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, this having happened, we still had to decide what to do. We had now 4 courses open to us and only 4 courses:

(1) We could do nothing. Just do nothing at all. The alternative was—

(2) to put our lines and our station outside of the reserve irrespective of the Indians.

Another alternative, since the Crown Trust Company had been given the sole right to deal with this land, according to the Indians, was:

(3) to deal with the Crown Trust Company to see if we could not make some kind of deal with them; or

(4) to ask Ottawa if they would permit us to expropriate the lands involved.

So, therefore, the next step was that we went to Ottawa on September 5, 1958 to see Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, who is the director of the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration to ask him whether he would recommend whether we be given the right to expropriate the lands involved. Lieutenant-Colonel Jones said that he would not so recommend it.

I am filing exhibit H, a declaration of Arnold Edwin Huddleston, and this is what he states:

(1) I am the deputy director of the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) On September 5, 1958, I asked Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director, Indian affairs branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration, in his government office in the city of Ottawa, if he would recommend to his Minister that permission be granted to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to expropriate approximately 180 acres of land in the Sarnia Indian reserve No. 45, to accommodate an electrical transformer station and power transmission lines.

(3) Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated at that time that he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister unless satisfactory arrangements had been made with the Indians.

At that particular stage, what could we say about the satisfactory arrangements which had been made with the Indians? At this particular stage, we had been asked to withdraw from negotiating with the Indians, and I will come to this more specifically in a moment.

Now, I want this made abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that the Indian affairs branch was doing what it thought was right, and in the interest of the Indians, to see that the Indians got the very best deal that could be obtained for them. Their obligation is not to consider the relative merits of one party as opposed to another—the interests of Ontario Hydro consumers or others—but simply to protect the interests of the Indians. That was consistently the position they were taking, and have taken, throughout.

Now that we were told on September 5, 1958, when we first went to Ottawa—and we went, I think, 4 times, asking for the same thing in each case—that the director of the Indian affairs branch would not recommend this to his Minister unless we had made satisfactory arrangements, we felt it was incumbent upon us to go back to try again to do what we could, to see if we could comply with whatever he had in mind when he said, "satisfactory arrangements with the Indians."

Therefore, we went to see the Crown Trust Company who had been given approval by the Indians to negotiate with them. We saw them on September 8.

Now, I will file a declaration in relation to this. They said that they would not negotiate with us, and they said we could not approach the Indians. But they told us that, in 8 to 10 weeks afterward, they would have finished with their deal—at least they thought they would be finished in 8 or 10 weeks—and then they would consider negotiating with us a price for the land that we wanted, and that they knew we wanted.

They said that one of the reasons—and it was quite apparent and is verified by the statement of Chief Adams which I have already read—was that, if we were to succeed negotiating a transaction for a 6-finger fling through the centre of the reserve, nobody else would be interested in buying the reserve as a whole, subject to 6 pieces of pie none of which could be connected up one with the other.

And now I would just like to mention this particular point. There are those who may point out that under our easements, mainly on map No. 2, we had already cut the reserve into 6 pieces. But we had not cut the reserve into 6 pieces.

We had an easement over an area which appeared to cut it in 6 pieces. But the fee was owned by the Indians, and they could pass under our lines as they liked with roads and sewers and power and service and anything else they wanted.

But once we became the owners of those 6 strips, sticking out into the middle of the reserve, they could not pass through the lands with sewers or water or other services, except that the patent did reserve the right to put roads for persons and animals across these strips.

Now, the next exhibit I want to file is the one marked "I," and it deals with this specific matter. It is a declaration of Charles Ford Stewart Tidy, and this is what he says:

(1) I am the special negotiator in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) On August 21, 1958, the Sarnia Indian band, at its special band meeting in Sarnia, granted permission to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to have its representatives negotiate directly with the property owners of the Sarnia Indian band, for the purchase of their individual interests in the Sarnia Indian reserve, for the lands required to accommodate the proposed electrical transformer station and the power transmission lines.

(3) By letter dated August 28, 1958, notification was received from Mr. W. L. Leroy, superintendent, Sarnia Indian agency, informing me that, at a special council meeting of the Sarnia Indian band held on August 28, 1958, the council revoked the authority given to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to negotiate with the property owners of the Sarnia Indian band, and that the council granted to the Crown Trust Company of Toronto the right to negotiate with the property owners for a very large portion of the reserve.

(4) This letter, dated August 28, 1958, from Mr. W. L. Leroy, superintendent, Sarnia Indian agency, addressed to me, is attached.

(5) On September 5, 1958, with Mr. A. E. Huddleston, deputy director of the property division of the Ontario Hydro, I attended Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director, Indian Affairs branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration at Ottawa, to seek advice upon the course of action open to the commission, in view of the revocation of the permission by the council of the Sarnia Indian band at its meeting held on August 28, 1958.

(6) On September 8, 1958, I called upon the Crown Trust Company in Toronto to see if arrangements could not be made with the company whereby the Ontario Hydro would secure the land required within the Sarnia Indian reserve without jeopardizing the rights of the Crown Trust Company.

At this meeting I was advised as follows:

"(a) The company would not disclose the name of its clients for whom it was acting in the purchase of a large portion of the Sarnia Indian reserve.

"(b) The company, under no circumstances, wanted representatives of the Ontario Hydro to negotiate with the council of the Sarnia Indian band, or any member of the band, lest we interfere with the company's negotiations.

"(c) The company was confident that it would complete its purchase of the large portion of the Sarnia Indian reserve within 10 weeks of that meeting (by November 17, 1958), at which time it would enter into an agreement with the Ontario Hydro to sell the land in the reserve required by the Ontario Hydro for its electrical transformer station and the power transmission lines."

(7) On September 16, 1958, Mr. H. Hustler, director of property of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and I, again called upon the Crown Trust Company in Toronto. No satisfactory arrangements for the accommodation of Ontario Hydro in Sarnia Indian reserve was reached.

(8) On September 18, 1958, Mr. H. Hustler and I had another meeting with the Crown Trust Company in Toronto, without further progress in our attempt to negotiate with the company for the lands required by the Ontario Hydro in the Sarnia Indian reserve.

(9) On September 24, 1958, Mr. H. Hustler and I called on Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director, Indian affairs branch in Ottawa. When Lieutenant-Colonel Jones was requested by Mr. Hustler to recommend to his Minister that permission be granted to the Ontario Hydro to expropriate its requirements in the Sarnia Indian reserve, Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated that he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister, and suggested that we continue our negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

(10) On October 1, 1958, and October 15, 1958, further meetings were held with the Crown Trust Company in Toronto, and the company again refused to negotiate for the lands required by the Ontario Hydro in the Sarnia Indian reserve.

Now, here is the situation then, and what we were faced with. Again we were faced with these alternatives: do nothing at all. There is no point in repeating this, because this was out of the question. Negotiations with Crown Trust Company, and it may be believed by many hon. members—perhaps only one—that we did not make a genuine effort to negotiate with the Crown Trust Company, appeared to be out. The only alternative, since we would not be given permission to expropriate as we understood it, would be at this stage for us to reconsider what other alternative routes there were.

So we went back and studied, as I am advised by our engineers, routes 1, 2 and 3 on maps No. 4, 5 and 6.

Now, the next step that took place was on November 7, 1958, when the band refused an offer of the Crown Trust Company, who was negotiating for a company, whose name we did not know, of $5.9 million for the whole reserve of 3,100 acres.

Now, we heard that the band had refused this offer. Also, we understood that one of the reasons why Lieutenant-Colonel Jones said that he would not recommend expropriation to the Minister was that, while there was a chance of this offer going through which was good for the Indians, he was not going to permit us to do anything that would block it.

So, now that it had apparently fallen apart at the sum of $5.9 million, we thought now was the propitious moment to return to Ottawa and ask again whether they would permit us to expropriate.

Therefore, on November 12, Mr. Hustler, director of property of Ontario Hydro, returned to Ottawa again to ask Lieutenant-Colonel Jones whether he would permit it, and at this time Lieutenant-Colonel Jones indicated to Mr. Hustler that he would not recommend it to his Minister, and led us to believe that, so long as he would not recommend it, it could not be carried out.

I think that was quite proper, and I think what he was recommending was in the best interests of the Indians.

He would not recommend that the expropriation be carried out so long as there was a chance that the whole reserve could be sold as a whole, because the Indians were going to make infinitely more out of selling this in one big parcel than if they were in a lot of isolated broken-up parts.

Now, I understand that this afternoon, in the House of Commons—the wires have been very busy from this House to Ottawa—I understand that this question was asked by the federal hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) of the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough):

In the light of exchanges which took place in the Ontario Legislature on Tuesday, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration can confirm to the House the information which she gave last June 4.

At that time I asked this question: "Did the hon. Minister receive an application from Ontario Hydro for permission from the Governor-in-Council to institute expropriation proceedings on the Chippewa Indian reserve at Sarnia?"

At that time, the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration answered categorically, "no."

I wonder whether at the present time she could confirm that answer?

Mrs. Fairclough replied: "Yes, Mr. Speaker, the original answer I gave is correct."

And indeed it was correct.

On June 4, in the federal Hansard, I find that the hon. member for Trinity in the House of Commons in Ottawa, page 4317, said this:

I should like to direct another question to the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Did the hon. Minister receive an application, from Ontario Hydro, for permission from the Governor-in-Council to institute expropriation proceedings on the Chippewa Indian reserve at Sarnia?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, stated: "No, Mr. Speaker."

That was her reply and it was quite accurate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, following that, I would like to read if I may, something which gives one of the important aspects upon which this whole matter turns.

Incidentally, I have a number of affidavits to which I will refer, a letter from Chief Adams, a letter from the department, and others.

But I would like to refer first of all to an article contained in the Toronto Telegram of June 6, wherein the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is referred to in these terms:

Ontario Hydro's declaration that it could not expropriate Sarnia Indian reserve land was confirmed today in Ottawa. Citizenship Minister Ellen Fairclough said on general principles she would not approve such expropriation. Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director of the Indian affairs branch, also confirmed he told Hydro he would be reluctant to recommend expropriation to the Minister and had urged Hydro to continue negotiations with the Indians for a direct purchase.

That is filed as exhibit JA.

Now, I would like if I may, to file exhibit J, a declaration by Arthur Wood Lamport of Ontario Hydro and he says 3 things:

1. I am the chief agent in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

2. On November 12, 1958—the date we are referring to,

—I was present when Mr. H. Hustler, director of property, Ontario Hydro, requested Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director, Indian affairs branch, Department Citizenship and Immigration, and other officials of his, in his government office in the city of Ottawa, to recommend to his Minister that permission be granted to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to expropriate approximately 180 acres in the Sarnia Indian reserve No. 45, to accommodate an electrical transformer station and power transmission lines.

3. The said Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated at that time he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister, and suggested that representatives of Ontario Hydro continue their negotiations with the Indians for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

As a matter of fact, I would have thought—although I was not obviously in attendance when these meetings took place—I feel that likely what Lieutenant-Colonel Jones said was not that he would not make such a recommendation, but that if he made such a recommendation—that if such a recommendation were demanded of him—he, in effect, would recommend against it. However, that is not the way the declaration reads.

Now, I would like to file that declaration which is marked as J. The next one is J1, and it is by Mr. Hustler:

1. I am the director of the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

2. On September 24, 1958, and on November 12, 1958, I requested Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Jones, director of the Indian affairs branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and other officials of his, in his government office in the city of Ottawa, to recommend to his Minister that permission be granted to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to expropriate approximately 180 acres of land in the Sarnia Indian reserve No. 45, to accommodate an electrical transformer station and power transmission lines.

3. The said Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated at those times that he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister, and suggested that representatives of the Ontario Hydro continue their negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement, all of which is consistent with the department's policy previously outlined, by a former Minister, hon. W. E. Harris, in a purported letter dated January 22, 1953, addressed to the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. A copy of this purported letter is attached hereto.

4. This statement of Lieutenant-Colonel Jones and the department's policy are confirmed in the letter July 23, 1959, attached hereto from Lieutenant-Colonel Jones and addressed to me.

If I may have the indulgence of the House, I would like to read both of those letters. The first is from the former Minister, I believe, of Citizenship and Immigration, hon. Walter E. Harris, to Mr. Robert A. Saunders, and is dated January 22, 1953.

This was at the time we were trying to require an easement across this same Indian reserve. We were having considerable difficulty. We had negotiated our way, or stick-handled our way, through almost all of the locatees with the exception of one person, and we were having such difficulty with that one person that we decided that it was almost impossible to satisfy him.

We went to Ottawa and asked for power to expropriate, and we were told by hon. Mr. Harris in this letter we could expropriate if we could agree with that person on the price to be paid.

Now, would hon. members tell me what value the right to expropriate is if we could exercise it only if we could agree on the price to be paid?

I am not making fun of it. I want the hon. leader of the Opposition to understand this. I am not making fun of Mr. Harris' position because I think it was right.

I think his hon. friend and adviser, and very valuable hon. member of this House—the hon. member for Brant—would agree that their responsibility is to get the very best deal they can for the Indians. That was Mr. Harris' view—and that is still the view of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration—and so long as Ontario Hydro, or any other transmission group, or anybody else, can get around the Indian reserve, they are not going to give them powers to expropriate. Further, they are certainly not going to give them so long as they cannot agree on price.

Now, the statement is contained in the letter. It is a long letter, in which the Minister at that time says, in effect—"your commission will be granted an easement for the proposed transmission line right-of-way over the required land, with respect to which an agreement has been reached with the council of the band and individual Indians, if you can agree as to the compensation to be received."

I am paraphrasing it, but my hon. friends know that I will not mislead this House in this respect. They will have an opportunity of looking at this letter. If I have made a mistake, I will be quite prepared to accept the responsibility for it.

Then, in a letter of July 23, from the director, Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, whose name has been referred on a number of occasions, and who wrote this letter—and I want this to be understood, Mr. Speaker, by you—I am not like some others, producing only the evidence that is good for Hydro, I am producing all of the evidence as I understand it, and the chips can fall where they may.

There are persons who have printed maps, and who have made statements in relation to these property sales, and either have negligently left out other sales which had a great bearing on the prices to be paid, and the actions that were taken, or else have suppressed one or two.

In this particular case, I assure this House that I am presenting all of the evidence as I understand it, both the good and the bad.

Therefore, when they look at some of the maps to which I will refer, they will see that some of the evidence is not so good, and some if it is very good.

In this particular letter, I would draw to the attention of my hon. friends in this House, this is one of the examples.

This is a letter written by Lieutenant-Colonel Jones to Mr. Hustler, and he says, on July 22, 1959—and this was 7 or 8 months after the whole event. This was last July, 6 months ago, or a year after the whole transaction was over.

I am filing this as JJ:

When you and Mr. Tidy were in my office this morning, you referred to publicity given to the purchase by the Ontario Hydro commission from Dimensional Investments Limited of land within the Sarnia Indian reserve. You seem to have taken back with you the letter you addressed to me, and therefore my reply must be without benefit of reference to it.

The consistent policy of this department, in dealing with applications from authorities with powers of expropriation for rights-of-way, etc., across Indian lands, has been to advise them to work out an agreement with the Indian band concerned, and you were advised to this effect.

Lieutenant-Colonel Jones goes on and says:

You are aware, of course, that no formal application to expropriate the lands in question was ever made. My recollection is that you did not even make any informal application, although the matter was discussed in my office on one or two occasions. I indicated to you, at those times, that any expropriation proceedings required the consent of the Governor-in-Council under The Indian Act, and that I would be reluctant to recommend to my Minister this course of action unless I was certain that this was in the interests of the Indians and had their support.

The item that appeared in the Toronto Telegram of June 6, which you had with you, is correct in essence. I could not refuse permission to expropriate as that was beyond my authority.

I have referred to the House the statement which the director of the Indian affairs branch, in the Telegram says was, in essence, correct, in which he says the consistent policy of the department, in dealing with applications from authorities with powers of expropriation for rights-of-way across Indian land, has been to advise them to work out an agreement with the Indian band concerned.

This is confirmed—so that the chips fall on all sides—by a letter of hon. Walter E. Harris, former Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, on January 22, 1953, in which he says, in relation to a specific and not a hypothetical problem that we had at that time, that he would not permit us to expropriate nor grant us the power unless we arrived at an agreement as to the price.

If one has arrived, as a lawyer would say I would think, as to an agreement as to the price, there is not much need of expropriation unless one is doing it simply to clear the title of problems involved in descriptions.

I would like to file an additional declaration by Charles Ford Stewart Tidy in relation to this matter:

(1) I am the special negotiator in the property division of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(2) On September 24, 1958, I was present when Mr. H. Hustler, director of property of the Ontario Hydro, requested Lieutenant-Colonel H. Jones, director of the Indian affairs branch, Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and other officials of his, in his government office in the city of Ottawa, to recommend to his Minister that permission be granted to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to expropriate approximately 180 acres of land in the Sarnia Indian reserve No. 45, to accommodate an electrical transformer station and power transmission lines.

(3) The said Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated, at that time, that he would not make such a representation to his Minister, and suggested that representatives of Ontario Hydro continue the negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

Now, the next event which took place was on November 20. The band was to have met on November 20 with respect to the offer of Dimensional. They turned down, on November 7, 1958, an offer of $5.9 million, and they were to meet again on November 20. That meeting did not take place, it was postponed to November 27, 1958, and at that time the band voted to accept a new offer of $6.5 million plus a number of other isolated items to which reference will be made when I come to the agreement which I will table.

This vote, however, was ruled invalid by the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration—ruled invalid because a sufficient number of the Indians of the band had not voted to support it.

Now, in view of the fact that this vote took place on November 27, and was approved—we did not know, at that time, as I recall, that the federal hon. Minister would disapprove of the vote, and, therefore, we figured that we would never get any land on the Indian reserve. So we started to negotiate for land outside of the Indian reserve, and, as I recall, the land involved is the land which is shown generally on map No. 5, alternative 2, marked in heavy black print away above the right top corner of the Indian reserve, up on the railway.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, I have misrepresented the matter to the House. I apologize to hon. members. The reserve is shown as alternative 3, map No. 6, not map No. 5. The land on map No. 5, not map No. 6, was the land we then set out to obtain by option if we could, and we ultimately did.

Now, when we heard that the hon. Minister had turned down this vote—and I believe we had heard it—we decided that we would ask the band, through The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, if we could do something, due to the fact that this had been turned down now by the hon. Minister. We were going to go in like an eager beaver all over again.

Every time somebody turned an offer down, or someone else turned it down, we tried to go back and see what we could do, and we asked The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, in view of the circumstances, if we could go back and see the band again. We asked if we could point out to them the difficulties that Hydro was in, and the tremendous cost we would be put to if we had to go around the reserve, according to the plan which is shown on map No. 6 or 5 or 4.

We received a letter back which I am filing as schedule K:

With reference to your telephone request re a meeting with the Sarnia Indian band council, we have arranged this for you for Wednesday, December 3, at the Federal Building here in Sarnia at 8 p.m. If you are unable to meet at this time, would you kindly advise.

We attended that meeting of the council. Five members were present—not the band, just simply the council. We requested to see them, and they were kind enough to permit us to see them. The letter I am filing as schedule K gives us consent to see them, which is the only procedure by which one can see them, or as I am advised, one can see them.

Now, at this time the council gave us consent to put a Hydro transmission station on the reserve. This is shown on map No. 8.

Mr. Wintermeyer: When was this last meeting?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: December 3.

Mr. Wintermeyer: December 3?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, 1958. On December 3, 1958, the council consented to us having a station on the reserve as shown on map No. 8. If the hon. leader of the Opposition will compare it to map No. 6, he will find out there is almost no difference between the two of them. The engineering and capital costs are just as much, or more, on map No. 8, as they are on map No. 6.

The only difference is that the station, on map No. 6, is outside of the reserve and the station, on map No. 8, is inside of the reserve.

The difficulty is that alternative 3, which is shown on map No. 6, as I have already pointed out to hon. members, would cost us between $663,000 and $2.15 million more than what we did do, even paying the price we did pay. Our engineering department is of the opinion the plan shown on map No. 8 would not cost any less.

But here are the problems in relation to this particular site as shown on map No. 8, and there are many.

(1) We had no railway siding and the Indians offered us no land to get a railway siding in to serve this site.

(2) It would be extremely expensive to integrate this station with the other two sub-stations in the same way that we would integrate them according to map No. 6, just as expensive.

(3) Hon. members will see that the station sits on one line coming into the reserve, but not two, which is the desirable place where one would integrate. The desirable place to have a station, to step down the lines, is where they all come together in the station. Instead of this, the station would be on one line and not have control of the other.

(4) No price was mentioned, and we have no idea to this day what price we would have been asked to pay for that amount of land involved in the station.

(5) We had spent a considerable amount of money, over a period of a year, in preparing the engineering plans for the station to be in the centre of the reserve, and we had spent many thousands of dollars in testing the land in the centre of the reserve.

(6) This position was not a bit better in map No. 8 than it was in map No. 6, because we already had an option on the land across the road, and we at least knew the price. The price, as I recall, was something like $310,000 or $320,000 for, I think, 100 acres—something like $3,000 and some an acre.

(7) The seventh weakness of the programme, as suggested by the Indians on the reserve, was that there were no interconnecting lines, no lines into the reserve and no lines out of it, and a station in a vacuum, as I pointed out before, is just useless unless one is going to have the lines come out.

Therefore, the only thing we could do was lead the lines back out from map No. 8 in the same way we did with map No. 6, where, as I pointed out, the engineering and capital costs could run from $663,000 to $2.15 million more than the method by which we did carry out this programme, as shown on map No. 3.

(8) They actually made no offer, nor would they even discuss with us, as I am advised, anything about our present easements—our two lines which cross the present reserve—which on every map are shown, particularly however, on map No. 2.

We were not satisfied with these easements because they were not permanent enough, we had to make jointures to them, we had to alter them in order to integrate the system, and the minute we did, we would be in a position of having all our easements and we would have destroyed them.

But the real joker of the deal was that it was all to be subject to the approval of the Crown Trust Company. We had already been to the Crown Trust Company on 3 or 4 occasions, and they told us:

You cannot deal with the Indians because you will ruin our deal, because you cannot run 6 slivers through the middle of that reserve and still have anybody buy the whole thing, less the slivers.

So I do not, by any means, blame the Indians for it. I think they are quite right in making it subject to the Crown Trust position.

Now, at this meeting of December 3, Ontario Hydro found out for the first time that Dimensional Investments was going to be the owner of this land. So far, we had only known the Crown Trust Company was involved, and they would never tell us, according to a sworn declaration that I have already presented to hon. members, who they were acting for. We found out on December 3, for the first time, that it was Dimensional Investments Limited, and on December 5, we wrote this letter to Chief Adams, who I am sure will still have it in his file:

DEAR SIR:

With reference to the special meeting held on Monday evening, December 3 last, at which a resolution was passed whereby the agents of the commission may negotiate with the Indian locatees, subject to the consent of the Crown Trust Company, for a parcel of land amounting to 30 acres immediately south of the existing east-west transmission line, and abutting on the easterly limits of the reserve (that is map No. 8), we should like to advise that the interested divisions of the commission have considered the suggested relocation for the new site, and report that they find the site not suitable for the commission's purposes.

We would, therefore, request that reconsideration be given by the council to locating the proposed transformer station in the original suggested location, on the east side of Scott Street, as shown on the aerial photograph used for our discussion at the last council meeting, which is now in the hands of Mr. Ward Leroy, superintendent of Sarnia Indian agency.

We are advised that, unfortunately, unless the station site, amounting to approximately 30 acres, is located on the original site on the east side of Scott Street in the reserve, an alternate site will have to be acquired outside of the reserve.

Should you want to discuss this further with us, we shall be pleased to attend the meeting with your council early next week for this purpose.

We might mention that, due to the urgency of this matter, a decision will have to be made one way or another.

It would therefore be appreciated if you would advise Mr. Leroy of your decision so that he may convey to us your instructions.

We indeed regret that we cannot comply with your request in this matter, but we should like to take this opportunity to thank you for the very kind co-operation which you have extended to the commission.

That is dated December 5, 1958, and I am filing and marking it as exhibit L.

Now, perhaps this is the pièce de résistance, a letter from Chief Adams to like effect, dated December 17, 1958.

This is in, I understand, the chief's own hand. It is signed Telford Adams and it is directed to Mr. C. F. S. Tidy, Toronto, Ontario, dated Sarnia, Ontario December 17, 1958, and I file it as exhibit M.

DEAR SIRs:

Re: transformer station location.

At our meeting with you on December 15, when I was able to get the attitude of the prevailing council, they insisted the transformer station be located at the east end of the reserve, adjacent to Indian Road. This was passed accordingly.

This was the reason I insisted the council grant the right to Crown Trust Company to make another offer for the 3,100 acres they want to purchase. I figured if the Crown Trust succeeded in purchasing the land, the Ontario Hydro would negotiate direct with Crown Trust, so we are looking for Friday night's results. Season's greetings to all.

The chief was a very smart chief, in looking after the interests of his tribe.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I agree with the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, I would want to say to the hon. members of this House, despite the season's greetings from the chief, we had these two meetings with the council—one on December 5 and one on December 15—and in both cases, the council reiterated their desire that the station should be located as on map No. 8.

They would discuss nothing else, no railway rights-of-way, no road easements, no connection with our present lines, no lines in and out, no lines anywhere, and obviously the council were basically really trying to be gentlemen.

They had an offer in the wind and it was a good one—a good one from their point of view—and they were not going to do anything to destroy it. They were excellent negotiators from their point of view.

The next aspect that took place was on December 19. I should just say at this stage that—jumping ahead about 7 or 8 months—last summer, Chief Telford Adams made several statements to the newspapers with respect to our purchase, and we thought perhaps it would be as well to jog the chief's memory and so we wrote this letter to him on June 24, 1959.

DEAR CHIEF ADAMS:

Our attention has been directed to a newspaper report published in the Sarnia Observer on June 16 last, in which you are quoted as having stated that this commission was not compelled to purchase this land requirement from Dimensional Investments Limited. This statement, if correctly reported, is of course inaccurate.

Interestingly enough, following this letter, the chief made no more statements. I do not suggest this letter and that event are related, but, nevertheless, it is a fact. I continue:

Arising from a decision of the band's council, we were notified in writing on August 28, 1958, by the reserve superintendent, that permission to negotiate with the Indian locatees, given to us on August 21, 1958, had been revoked, and that authority had been transferred to the Crown Trust Company.

Subsequently, when an offer made by that company proved unsatisfactory to the band, we again met with the council on December 15, 1958, to ascertain if the land we needed in the reserve could be acquired.

At this meeting, as in all previous negotiations, it was clearly understood that our requirements included not only approximately 32 acres for the transformer station itself, but also a much larger acreage for the connecting transmission lines.

We were then informed that the land which you were prepared to make available to us for a site for the transformer station was on the easterly boundary of the reserve.

We stated to council, on that occasion, that the site suggested could not be used by the commission since its location was unsuitable.

You will recall your letter of December 17, 1958, in which you describe aspects of this council meeting and clearly indicate, in part, that you preferred a sale to the trust company from which you suggest this commission could obtain its land requirements.

I am sure that, upon review, you will agree that the statements attributed to you in the Sarnia Observer of June 16 were incorrect.

I am sure that the statements attributed to the chief likely were not correct, and that perhaps accounted for the misunderstanding.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Did he acknowledge the letter?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That letter was sent by Mr. Hustler, director of property of Ontario Hydro.

Now then, on that—

Mr. MacDonald: Did he acknowledge it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That, Mr. Speaker, was the letter of June 24. Now, as I indicated on December 19, 1958, the band accepted the Crown Trust offer of $6.5 million, plus about $80,000 in relation to some churches to which the agreements referred.

Once this agreement had been entered into, or the band had approved this agreement, Crown Trust disappeared from the situation because they had been agents to acquire it for Dimensional.

We, at this stage, then met with Dimensional to see what position Dimensional would take in relation to this matter, and what they would be prepared to sell this land for.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Dimensional indicated at this time, and we met on a great number of occasions—as is indicated by affidavits which stated that we did not have an agent, and that we met directly with Dimensional once the band approved of their agreement—that they wanted, as I recall, something like $1.4 million for 140 acres.

There were a great many meetings, and ultimately we negotiated what they would accept but we felt was still not adequate, an agreement to pay $1.25 million for 175 acres, instead of $1.4 million for 140 acres. We still were of the opinion that this was too high.

We had felt that we might have to pay $5,000 to $6,000 an acre for this land from the Indians, but we felt that $7,000 was too high.

Therefore, we immediately considered the alternative cost, and when we looked at the alternative routes, which are shown on maps No. 4, 5 and 6, they all worked out to be considerably more than the price we would have to pay Dimensional, including the construction of the lines on the land.

Nevertheless, we went again to Ottawa to ask them if, under the circumstances, Lieutenant-Colonel Jones would recommend to the Minister that we be permitted to expropriate. We were advised, as these affidavits have earlier stated—in relation to this specific date also—that he was not prepared to do so.

His reason was obvious. This was a good deal for the Indians, and if he gave us consent to expropriate from the Indians, and there was yet no title in the Dimensional company—that would be enough to enable Dimensional to withdraw, and the Indian transaction would fall to the ground.

At this stage, we asked our own counsel at Hydro for the second time—we asked him at the start of all of these proceedings—“Can we expropriate from the Indians?” His advice was: “No, we cannot expropriate from the Indians unless we have approval from The Department of Citizenship and Immigration.”

We now asked him: “Can we expropriate whatever Dimensional Investments have?”

His answer was: “No, you cannot expropriate anything that Dimensional Investments have because they have nothing you can expropriate. The reason you cannot expropriate from them is that you can only expropriate an interest in land, and an interest in land is not an interest in land unless it can be specifically enforced. You cannot specifically enforce an action against the King or Queen. Therefore, you cannot specifically enforce an agreement of this nature, therefore you cannot expropriate it.”

I will file now, as exhibit O, an opinion of Mr. Cyril Carson, QC, and I will read two or three paragraphs from it. He says, at paragraph 2—

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the date?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, the date is December 29, 1959.

I do not think it makes very much difference whether it is after. This confirms that the opinion we got from our own solicitor, at the time we asked him, was correct and that is the most important thing—the fact that we were confirmed afterwards does not change the facts. The facts were then the same. He says, at page 2:

The commission had no power, in my opinion, to expropriate the 175 acres in question from the Crown without the consent of the Governor-in-Council, and I understand the commission's request for such consent was refused.

By virtue of section 28(1) of The Indian Act, any agreement by which a member of a band of Indians purports to grant to any person, other than a member of the band, any rights on a reserve is void.

Under the options it obtained from the Indians, Dimensional clearly did not therefore acquire any right to the lands of the reserve that could have been expropriated by the commission. Dimensional was not, however, required to pay the balance of the purchase price until March 15, 1961.

If the commission had been able to wait until Dimensional had received a patent to 3,100 acres it would then, in my opinion, have had the right to expropriate from Dimensional the 175 acres required for its own purposes.

Before a patent to the land in question was issued to Dimensional, however Dimensional—in my opinion—had nothing which the commission could expropriate. Under an agreement of sale of land, the purchaser acquires an equitable interest in the land only if the purchaser is entitled to specific performance of the agreement.

Dimensional as the purchaser under an agreement of sale of Crown land was not, however, entitled to specific performance, because specific performance will not be decreed against the Crown.

That is precisely the same advice we obtained from our own legal department, and it is a question now for someone to come forward, I respectfully submit, and file documents which establish, I would think, clearly that the commission was wrong in adhering to advice of that nature from its own department, as confirmed by Mr. Carson, because therefore, perforce, he must also have been wrong.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here then is the situation at this particular point, and I would want my hon. friend—and I do not want to unduly embarrass him—to indicate to me whether he considers Mr. Carson to be an able counsel in this province.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I do not think there is any doubt about that. I likewise think there are other able counsels who take the opposite opinion. Sometimes able counsel is overruled by—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite right. I simply want to establish that I do not think the commission is required to send out a variety of 16 or 17 questions and take the majority opinion. I do not think that one should—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Send out a circular letter.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: —send out a circular letter. I think that we should be expected to rely on a man whose standing is very high in this country.

Mr. Wintermeyer: A person should not send out for any opinion before the deal.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: At this particular time we were quite satisfied that the opinion, which we had obtained from our own counsel, was correct. We were satisfied with it for the complete length of time that this matter has been discussed. But I knew that a number of persons would feel that, unless there was someone outside of the commission who had confirmed this opinion, the opinion given, would have been perhaps a reflection of our own view.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Would the hon. Minister express his own opinion on this particular legal technicality?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to my hon. friend that this was also my own opinion, as it was of the first vice-chairman, Mr. Strike. We were of the opinion, in that, that one cannot obtain specific performance from the Crown. One has not a right which could be expropriated. That opinion was, I think, one of the determining factors in confirming the opinion of our own legal counsel.

So, therefore, if one accepts the advice which the commission at this stage has been given, we were left in this position, that we could not expropriate, either from the Indians or from Dimensional, and the best price we could negotiate from Dimensional was $1.25 million.

We were left, therefore, looking at the cost, or price, of the only 3 alternate routes available to us. If these alternate routes cost more than $1.25 million, our opinion was—regardless of how badly we felt about the price we had to pay—it was far better to get on with the job at a much cheaper price.

Now, if I may summarize the alternatives which were now available to us—and I would like this House to look at them—we had 4 alternatives. These are what they break themselves down into basically: to go through with the plan on map No. 3, which had a relatively low capital cost and a high land cost; or to do what was done on maps No. 4, 5 and 6, and have a low land cost and an extremely high capital cost.

When we add the capital and the land together, surely the most prudent decision was to take the route which was by far the cheaper. In any event, that is what recommended itself to the commission.

Now, I would like hon. members to turn to what is sheet No. 9. This sheet was prepared by the assistant general manager in charge of engineering, and it has on the front page certain suppositions. On the second page, it shows the relative costs of these routes.

Now this is a rather complicated statement. I will try to simplify it. I might explain that I am not very good at mathematics. But, in any event, if my hon. friends will look at this cost table No. 9, the second page on which there are a lot of numbers, they will see there are 8 columns, and it is in the eighth column that the total cost can be seen of all of the alternates.

The way we did it by map No. 3 will cost for engineering, capital and the land through the Indian reserve, $8.65 million. If we had taken alternative 1, which is shown on map No. 4—alternative 1A or 1B—it would have cost either $11.1 million or $10,332,000.

What is the difference between alternative A and B? A is shown at the bottom of this sheet. If hon. members look at the north side of the reserve on map No. 1, they will see that about two-thirds of it is the frontage of land owned by the oil company, and about one-third of it is land marked in green which is a subdivision.

Alternative A goes along the whole north end of the reserve, underground, which the engineers felt we would likely have to do. Alternative B is going above ground on the oil property and underground through the subdivision.

So hon. members will see there are alternatives 1, 2 and 3, and they are on maps No. 4, 5 and 6.

But the 1, 2 and 3 are themselves broken down into A and B. The 60 per cent. above ground and 40 per cent. underground is the B, and the 100 per cent. underground is the A.

But the most important column itself is column 8.

One can see, if one looks at column 4, that by 1975 it will have cost $2.8 million more to have gone by route No. 1. Why by 1974? Because by column 3 it will cost $1.4 now, and as we make natural additions between now and the next 15 years they will have cost more to have gone by that route, another $1.4 million than if they had been in the centre of the reserve.

These things must be planned for some considerable distance ahead.

So if hon. members look at alternative

1A, which is completely underground along the north side of the reserve as shown on map No. 1, they will see that by 1975 it would have cost $2.8 million more to have gone by that route than the route we took across map No. 3, even paying $7,000 an acre.

If, on the other hand, we had gone along alternative route B, along the north side of the reserve—60 per cent. above ground on towers, on land owned by ourselves, and 40 per cent. under the subdivision—it would have cost us, by 1975, $1.8 million more.

If hon. members follow column 4 down that way, they will see the relative comparison of prices and the total cost of the route is shown in column 8.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if hon. members would be kind enough, for a moment, to turn to map No. 7, where they will see some sales which have taken place around the land involved. Some of them are good, some favourable, and some of them not so favourable. The one thing anyone with any experience in expropriation matters will assure anyone else, who has not, is that the most relevant and up-to-date sales are the ones to which the court gives the greatest credence.

Another aspect of this matter, which is also a serious one, is that a man who professes to show values has some responsibility to show all of the sales, not just the ones which substantiate the picture he would like to paint.

I have numbered these:

(1) In 1952, Sun Oil bought 197.7 acres at $2,200 an acre. The opinion of the property department of the Hydro is that this price is so far out of line today, 8 years later, that it is not relative, but nevertheless it was there and I therefore insisted that it stay on the maps.

(2) The Polymer Corporation—that particular sale is up at the top of the map. We work around the map and then go into the centre of it.

At the top of the reserve, hon. members will see Polymer Corporation paid, in 1956, for 114 acres, $1,800 an acre.

(3) For the land right beside it, Imperial Oil, in 1956, paid $2,500 an acre. Why right beside it $2,500 an acre, when the other is $1,800 an acre? There just is not any strict rule as to values. One pays, if one wants, what the vendor wants to sell it for.

(4) Immediately beside that, in 1953, Imperial Oil paid $1,200 an acre for 320 acres.

(5) Incidentally, hon. members will see at (5), down at the right-hand bottom of the reserve, that we have a piece of land that is not a stone's throw away from it. This piece of land is a small "hunk," but it sold at the rate of $13,000 an acre in 1959.

(6) The interesting point about it is that there is a piece directly across the road which sold, also in the same year, at the rate of $6,000 an acre—actually $6,250 an acre.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): How about the location?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Then, if I may turn to the next one, No. 7, which is on the bottom of the reserve, there were a lot more. These were just some that we obtained. After all, the statement was made in this House that the highest price paid as of 1958 recorded was 2,700 and some dollars an acre, and it was untrue.

I am just showing some of these simply to show a sampling, and hon. members who want to search should now go forth and obtain their own evidence if they want to say more.

(7) The Dow Chemical Company of Canada Limited for 200 acres purchased outside the reserve, paid $1,100 an acre.

(8) This is just not far from it. The Canadian Oil Company, in 1957, paid $1,400 an acre.

(9) This piece is down below it, and getting further away from the reserve. For it, the Dupont Company paid $1,400 an acre in 1957.

(10) Right beside it is a little strip. For this, in the same year, they paid $2,600 an acre.

(11) Right beside it, they paid $1,500 an acre—$1,800 an acre, I am sorry—and then No. 12—

An hon. member: Where is No. 12?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. 12 is right beside it—and that was $1,500 an acre—all in the same year and the land is all contiguous, side by side.

(13) This is the interesting one. This is recorded. This is a deed that was recorded—$6,600 an acre right inside the reserve.

While people are trying to draw analogies of prices of land outside the reserve, they completely overlook certain sales that took place right inside the reserve. They were right on the same registry, and I say to hon. members, they could not find one without seeing the other.

Mr. MacDonald: And for a very small parcel of land.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: A very small parcel of land, my hon. friend, but an equally large size on The Registry Act, unless one was trying to withhold evidence.

Mr. MacDonald: Look at those that are approximately the size—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Another interesting aspect of this is No. 14, which is right beside it, and this was the Interprovincial Pipe Line. This time, they got only an easement, as I recall, and not the fee. They paid $14,400 an acre for it.

Mr. MacDonald: For two acres.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What does it matter? The fact is the hon. member has been quoting the rate per acre, and so am I, and what is fair for him is fair for me. He does not believe it, but I do.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the hon. Minister is talking to me now, is he?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now, turning to No. 15, the Sun Oil Company—and this is a sale that took place in the reserve in 1959—bought 112 acres approximately for a price of $4,500 an acre.

(16) The Dow Chemical Company of Canada Limited paid $4,200 an acre for 66.4 acres in 1959.

(17) The St. Clair Chemical Company, right beside our transmission station, paid $5,600 per acre for approximately 25 acres in 1959.

These 3 transactions, I am advised, are not yet registered in the registry office and there are 3 others that are underway.

One is over in the area just below the land marked No. 1, as I understand it, at $11,000 an acre, on a very large purchase. The other two are more in the centre of the reserve at $6,000 and $7,000 an acre.

Now then, I would like to file, if I may, Mr. Speaker, exhibit P with these documents. This is a certified copy, registered on May 13, 1959, between Her Majesty and the Canadian National Railways for the land which I have referred as marked as No. 13.

I would like now to file exhibit Q, if I may—this is recorded on November 7, 1958—$14,400 an acre. There are two deeds. This is to the pipe line company and they are easements.

The next is R, to which I have not made reference, and it is the deed between the city of Sarnia and Her Majesty the Queen, at which, as I recall, the price was $5,820 an acre.

The next document I would like to file is a deed between the Queen and Dimensional Investments Limited—dated March 14, 1959, I guess it was—which is marked as S.

The next document is one marked T, between Dimensional Investments Limited and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

The next document I want to refer to is a photostat of some newspaper articles. It was stated at page 237 of Hansard several days ago by an hon. member of this House:

Another interesting point, Mr. Speaker, is that in the Toronto Telegram, whose only interest in this was belatedly to write stories to try to substantiate the hon. Minister's position—because they published nothing on it for the first month or so of the whole discussion of it—

This matter arose on May 4 and I am filing with this House a photostat of articles in the Telegram dated May 11, 1959, May 19, 1959, May 6, 1959, and May 9, 1959, amongst others, and I am marking that, if I may, as exhibit U.

I would like to follow with one more filing, if I may, and that is this—which I will come to in a moment. I have summarized the statement to the House by saying to hon. members that we felt we took every step we could. We had 5 alternatives:

(1) To do nothing; (2) To pay what we did according to map No. 3; or, (3), (4), and (5), To take the alternate routes which are shown on maps No. 4, 5 and 6, at the costs shown on sheet No. 9.

Now, everyone in this House, and every hon. member, and everyone elsewhere, must honestly ask themselves whether they would have done otherwise, with the advice that I had, and this commission had, being faced with those opinions and faced with those facts, and having been told the things that we were told and given the estimates we were given by our engineering division as to whether they had any other choice.

I want to conclude, if I may, with one other statement, and that is from the Sarnia Observer, dated May 4, 1959, where it says:

C. Cunningham, publicity chairman for the West Lambton CCF party, said that he thought the reasons behind the Indians' refusal to sell to the Hydro would bear investigation. "The price of $1.25 million was possibly not out of line for choice land," he said. "It would vary in different sections, but the refusal to sell, rather than the price, seems to warrant investigation."

Thank you very much.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I will take it as notice. I draw to my hon. friend's attention I have been 3 and a half hours on my feet, and I am rather tired.

Mr. Lawrence: This is merely a question about the documents. There may be many hon. members of this House who would like to see what has been tabled. I wonder if the hon. Minister could make arrangements to see if the material that he has tabled will be photostated or reproduced, so that there is more than one copy of each available.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would be happy to make as many copies as seem to be needed.

Hon. Mr. Frost: To this, I should think it only fair to give the House a statement of government policy in this matter. The government is determined that this matter, to its last detail, will be submitted to a committee of this House, and I shall make the appropriate motion for that, after consultation with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Now, sir, I just want to say that it is with a good deal of resentment that I see the last paragraph of an editorial in today's Toronto Daily Star which says this:

Hydro chairman James S. Duncan has already on record that he would welcome an inquiry by a legislative committee. Let Premier Frost take the proper and responsible course and permit an effective inquiry into this question of a land deal.

Mr. Speaker, if the Star is capable of understanding, may I point out that I said that very thing on the second day of February, standing in this place at the conclusion of the address of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and so did the hon. Minister of Energy Resources.

This is just a question of repeating something that looks innocent, but is calculated to make it appear that I was standing in the way of an inquiry into this matter. That, sir, is false and unfair, and I object very strongly to that sort of thing taking place. I do not think it is honourable, I do not think it is decent.

I said, on February 2 in this House, that there would be an inquiry. I repeat here and now—if it is necessary to repeat this—that this matter will be referred to a committee of this House in an appropriate way, and every last detail of this matter will be submitted to the hon. members of this House for their inquiry and questioning.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate in reply to the speech from the Throne. In so doing I would like to first congratulate you, sir, on your well-deserved appointment as Speaker of this House and second, to wish you every success in the future.

I would also like to welcome, as have many others, the new hon. members to this assembly. They will find the work interesting, hours spent will be many, debates will be stimulating, criticism continuous, and rewards will not always be obvious.

But, as have their predecessors, they will be loath to leave when the time comes. From experience, I should like to pass on a few words to the hon. newcomers. Many a verbal gem left in their cheeks will save hon. members embarrassment when they find their first shot did not hit the bull's eye.

Borrowing a slogan from the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko), I would say, "be safe—be sure."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to review some events, and to give some thoughts on the government of Metropolitan Toronto.

As a result of Bill No. 80, established by this government in 1953, Toronto and its 12 suburban children have enjoyed tremendous progress and improvements. Insurmountable problems—as we thought at the time—of water shortages, sewage problems, highway nightmares, transportation dilemmas, chaotic shortage of accommodation for our senior citizens, our schools—132—our court-houses, municipal centres, and other much needed facilities, have, in most instances, been provided for or are under construction. Under no other form of government had this been possible before and, therefore, I compliment the Legislature of that day.

Mr. Speaker, the metropolitan form of government is here to stay, and those who advocate its abolition do not echo the desires of their constituents, despite many violent arguments and temporary disagreement of policy.

I suggest the mayors and reeves of these municipalities should look back on the improvements that have been created in their own municipality by the government of Metropolitan Toronto, which would have been impossible by local administration. Then probably they would be able to conscientiously practice the Metro concept instead of using it as a title for an everyday song. It is a little bit ridiculous, in the light of all these achievements—in so short a time—for anyone to believe that the metropolitan form of government is not the answer for these 13 municipalities, and others in similar circumstances.

Now, what about the future? Metro is in its seventh year. As in most instances, conditions change with the times, and Metro government is no exception.

Bill No. 80 when created adequately covered most situations. But I believe we should now take another look at its contents. We will find some amendments will be necessary, possibly of a minor nature.

Metro has taken gigantic strides in promoting parks and conservation areas—far beyond the boundaries of Metro, in some instances. We should see how closely these projects fit in with our provincial programme.

The St. Lawrence seaway is now in operation, and the miles of Metro Toronto's waterfront are bound to play a very important part in its future. They will affect the whole of the province of Ontario. So we should be sure that local planning dovetails with the provincial picture.

The metropolitan planning board is to be congratulated on its production of a master plan for future development of this unique and great metropolis. But we will have to be sure that mushroom growth, in a disorderly fashion, does not occur immediately outside its border of authority, or the same havoc will come home to roost, as it has in the past. It is logical, in terms of geography, that this metropolis will continue to grow northward in the years to come.

With the pollution problems of Lake Ontario already becoming serious with increasing marine traffic, including oil tankers, the future does not look bright for our water supply. I urge this government to keep an ever-watchful eye on Lake Simcoe—to continue strict supervision of possible pollution—because it is not an idle dream to say that Lake Simcoe will be very important for our future water supply.

And we should be concerned with economics.

Some of the small municipalities in this great union should give consideration to the economic and administrative benefit of joining with an adjoining municipality or municipalities. This might benefit all concerned and strengthen the unity of Metro government.

Before we commit ourselves to more multi-million-dollar expenditures for highway purposes in this Metro area, we should carefully assess the value of subsidizing or assisting public transit projects such as subways and commuter trains. With the completion of the new rail route across the northern extremity of Metro, our existing tracks in the southern area will be in a secondary position, and quite adaptable to commuter service.

Assistance to these available modes of transportation in the end may be more economical than creating further ribbons of cement leading only into the hub of confusion in downtown Toronto, where parking and traffic conditions are sadly outdated.

I hasten to say that this is no reflection on Mother Toronto who, quite properly, could not envision, years ago, the tremendous use of automobiles today, nor the fact that the Metro area would be the fastest growing area on the North American continent.

We should not, at this time, be asked to make any major changes in the legislation governing the authority of the Toronto transit commission, despite the almost everyday headlines it receives. There is nothing wrong there except a clash of personalities, and I am not sure that is not a good thing to keep people on their toes—at least it shows intense interest on the part of the commission and others concerned.

The fact that should receive more publicity is that the Toronto transit operation is the finest and best run of its kind anywhere on the North American continent today. Great credit is due those responsible, now and in the past.

Mr. Speaker, these are my observations on metropolitan matters. I hope they will be of some value to the hon. members of this assembly.

Now, I turn to other subjects of particular interest to me.

Industrial decentralization should continue to be encouraged for the financial benefit of all municipalities, thus creating a more equitable business assessment throughout the province, progressive development, and a more diversified area of employment. Decentralization can create happy and well balanced communities.

It was very interesting to read in one of the daily newspapers recently the comments of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), that the Legislature would probably discuss a pension plan for its hon. members, and to listen to him in this House, the other day, give his opinion as to how progress, growth, and ever-changing times were affecting the lives and habits of the hon. members. The duties of all hon. members today are no longer part-time, or a hobby, they are continuous—and daily becoming more so.

I suggest the hon. Prime Minister include also for discussion hon. members' remunerations for, in the same instance, they are also materially affected—especially those hon. members who have time-consuming distances to travel on behalf of their constituents.

Some municipalities in this province have already recognized the plight of members in the local councils and have taken steps to correct it, with the result that many municipal councillors today receive more than twice the amount of private hon. members of this Legislature.

Too often, in the past, men have spent their productive years in the service of their people only to wind up their careers with a handful of press clippings, and there certainly is no security in that.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the people of this great province do not expect their representatives in public office to jeopardize their financial status or security. I appreciate that possibly someone will say, it is our own choice, we were not forced into public life—rather the opposite in some instances. But, nevertheless, someone has to do it. It will be a sorry day for our way of life when the main qualification will be that one must be a millionaire, or financially independent.

If we are going to continue to attract the right people into public office they must be assured a more reasonable security than exists in this Legislature today. Hon. members' honorariums have not kept pace with the ever-changing times and conditions and a move should be made immediately to correct them.

It was heart-warming to hear and read of the hon. Minister of Health's (Mr. Dymond's) programme of expansion of hospital facilities, particularly for retarded children. It is wonderful to hear someone speak for those who cannot speak for themselves.

With reference to a recent report, where some hon. members were accused of using their political influence to obtain accommodation for these unfortunate children, I plead guilty. I am not ashamed of it, for I believe that is one of the duties for which I was elected. To date I have usually been successful, receiving every assistance possible both from the hon. Minister of Health and his predecessor, the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips).

It was very gratifying to be advised that the hon. members of this House will be asked—and I quote:

To vote funds to permit special grants to hospitals for capital and debt retirement purposes.

It was my privilege, or otherwise, to have had a rather lengthy stay this past summer, about 3 weeks in duration, at Toronto's Queensway Hospital, where I am one of the board of governors. This particular visit was in the role of a patient and I was able to view, first-hand, the unbelievably crowded conditions existing in this hospital. It made no difference whether one was boiler maker or top executive, he was lucky if he could get a bed in the corridor, for a few days, until a room became vacant.

Due to this serious lack of accommodation it is understandable that consideration can only be given by the hospital to patients who are seriously ill. This hospital of 132 beds was opened 3.5 years ago, and already it could use daily another 230 beds to serve the 80,000 people it now tries to accommodate.

A major portion of the original capital for construction was raised by the herculean efforts of the building fund committee. But, in spite of these efforts, the hospital still carries a $500,000 debt.

It is the feeling of many, now that the provincial and federal governments have entered into the field of hospitalization, that these governments have a far greater responsibility to provide hospital construction assistance than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, if present premiums for hospitalization are not enough to take ample care of a realistic portion of construction costs, then we had better take into consideration the adjusting of premiums, if all other avenues fail. I say this because hospitalization under our plan—taking into account the growth factor—certainly requires additional hospital accommodation. In many areas of the province, hospital boards just cannot find the money.

The need for accommodation in the particular hospital I mentioned is understandable when we are told that, in this western area of Metro, the population has increased by approximately 15,000 persons a year—for the last 5 years.

Now, in respect to the government's consideration of instituting a physical fitness programme, I would say that physical fitness, like money and good looks, is a wonderful thing to possess. But, whereas good looks may be obtained effortlessly through inheritance, I believe that money and fitness are more likely to require some personal effort.

There is little question that our modern standard of living, with its emphasis on spectator sports and television exercise, tends to reduce the interest in physical activities, that there is greater need for the type of associations which offer opportunities for public and private participation in active enjoyments.

In the field of public health service, The Ontario Department of Health conducts clinics and surveys that cover the major health needs of the province. It is encouraging to note that the government has now widened its interests in the health of Ontario citizens by recognizing the increased importance of physical fitness as a benefit to the individual and to the community at large.

Mr. Speaker, on Thursday it was refreshing to hear the hon. Prime Minister invite and encourage hon. members of the standing committees of this House to examine the economics, efficiency, methods, and operations of the various departments of this government, with a view to suggesting improvements where found necessary. This is a challenge that should be accepted and not quickly forgotten. In a successful business of any kind, one's expenditures must be controlled by incoming revenues. Whether it be the local grocer or this billion-dollar business—called provincial government—which is continuously harassed by John Q. Public for more expenditures, revenues must control expenditures. And if we do not have the money, we cannot spend it. So let us try to find some of it.

Millions of people just south of our border search the world for natural beauty spots, good food, and entertainment. Ontario is blessed with most of these requisites. The Department of Travel and Publicity, a very important arm of our government, as the promoter and developer of Ontario's third largest industry—the tourist industry—is concerned with major problems. It must conduct research, both within and without the provincial borders, to discover what attracts our visitors and what makes them stay. It must be the central figure in co-ordinating the complex hotel, restaurant, and transportation industries to better serve our visitors.

More important, when it has all of the researched facts and figures, when it understands why our tourists may stay only 5 days instead of two weeks, it must apply the researched knowledge, in the form of promotional appeals, to lengthen the visitors' stay and to attract other tourists.

Imagine the challenge of designing an appeal that will bring visitors to Ontario year after year. What, for instance, can I say on the floor of this House that will make hon. members plan to visit Port Arthur, or possibly Ogoki, next summer? Will it be the historical background, the food, the accommodation, or sports, the differences, or the similarities, of the areas?

Since potential tourists represent all types and interests, since they are of all age groups, the answers to the problem of "what to say—and how to say it" are as complex as the questions themselves.

Sometimes the importance of travel promotion is not taken seriously. It is looked upon as a bonus, a windfall of "spending travellers" that the province attracts without effort. Yet, if we closely check the tourist figures, we will find that it is a bonus that can be taken away from us. Our American friends below the border outnumber us 10 to 1. Yet, even though we have 10 times their visitor potential, they are able to attract more tourist dollars out of Canada than we can obtain from them. This is the situation which challenges our Department of Travel and Publicity, and with which it is coping.

The possible avenues of approach to tourist problems, the policies, promotion, and administrative guidance, are possibly better known to hon. members than to myself. But I believe, in order to hold the Canadian tourist trend and to develop Ontario's greatest visitor potential, that The Department of Travel and Publicity must be given every assistance.

Without proposing specific remedies it seems to me that Switzerland and Florida are often put forward as the best examples of tourist promotion. Well, let us not confuse their promotional needs, or qualities, with those of Ontario. We have no need to duplicate their appeals, or their methods of presentation. Indeed, I believe that we would be completely wrong to do so.

In its own wonderful way, our province has a distinctive flavour and as many outstanding attractions as either of these areas. I will even guarantee that it has greater variety and more opportunity for enjoyment than both together. If enthusiasm and knowledge and the skill to apply each of these in balance are an older part of Ontario's heritage, then let us apply them again in these fields that are so beneficial to all of our people.

The golden decade has already commenced, and I believe that the province of Ontario will amply justify the title which the decade has already received, "The Soaring Sixties."

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to go over the programme again for tomorrow and the day following, but we meet at 2 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): We will behave ourselves while the hon. Prime Minister is away.

The House adjourned at 10.15 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome as guests of the Legislature pupils from Humber Valley Village school, Islington; Norman Ingram school, Don Mills; Gulf Stream Road public school, Weston; Earl Beatty public school, Toronto; and Queen Alexandra public school, Toronto. We are very happy to have them.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Before the orders of the day, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), notice of which has already been given.

Will the hon. Attorney-General take disciplinary action against the sheriff of Muskoka for his most indiscreet comments to the press following the execution of a young man in Parry Sound jail in the early hours of Tuesday, February 9, 1960?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, the only information I have of the incident is what I have read in the press. The sheriff of Muskoka is today actually attending the funeral of a fellow sheriff in Stratford, and I would have to get full particulars of the incident before I could answer the question yes or no. But that I will do.

Mr. Troy: I am not one to sentence a man before he has been tried and I thank the hon. Attorney-General very much for his answer.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The 39th annual report of the public service superannuation board.

2. Report of the provincial auditor on the public service superannuation fund for the year ended March 31, 1959.

3. Report of the provincial auditor of the public service retirement fund for the year ended March 31, 1959.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with others who have spoken before me on the Throne speech, in extending my sincere congratulations to you on having been appointed Speaker of this, the twenty-sixth Legislature of the province of Ontario.

I would also like to join with that, my congratulations to the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow). Both are able and both are veteran hon. members who, undoubtedly, will discharge their many duties and responsibilities in a most capable and acceptable manner. I would also like to give my congratulations to the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and to the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion of thanks in reply to the Throne speech. I thought they did a most excellent job. My young friend and colleague here, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) and that "old pro" from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), I think, combined in a most excellent manner to get this twenty-sixth Legislature off to a good start.

I had toyed with the idea of congratulating the new Whip, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling), but he has scratched me on so many occasions from getting on to the Throne speech that I had some doubts as to whether I would include him in my congratulatory remarks. However, I have relented, and I give him full marks.

I am sorry the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is not in the House because I did think that he made the best speech since he has entered this Legislature on that occasion of reply. It was an earnest speech, it was a constructive speech, and I think that the hon. leader of the Opposition has progressed very far since accepting his high office, and I do wish to congratulate him.

I did think that my leader, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), was never better than when he replied to the hon. leader of the Opposition in joyously clobbering the Opposition on both sides for any elation they might have because of wins in the last election. I say that kindly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the speeches that have been made in this House on the Throne speech thus far have been of a very high calibre.

I admired the spunk and the independence of the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) in his lovely speech the other night. He said many of the things that most of us hesitate and dare not say.

I did like the speech very much of the new hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer), and that reminds me that the Liberal benches have always had a good distribution of talent. Apart altogether from good speakers, they acquired a man who could certainly write poetry in my young hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Innes), and now they have acquired a singer, and that makes a fairly good distribution, and I hope that he sings and continues to sing in key.

Now, I have neglected, until the last, to give any praise or thought to my good friend, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). I would like to say in all sincerity, to my hon. friend from York South, that I regard him as a personal friend, as I do all hon. members of this House. He is one of the most charming men, in my opinion, outside of the House, but he is a "real beggar" in the House.

He is a man, in my opinion, of distinct talent and ability. It sometimes grieves me, sir, to think that a man with that great talent and that great ability pretty much wastes it. When he comes into this House, he is altogether a different type of man from what he is outside. He does not use those great talents in a constructive and objective way.

I listened to him speak the other day, for a matter of probably two or more hours, and never once during that entire period of his speech had he said one constructive thing about all the marvellous things this government had done down through the years.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I am sorry I cannot agree.

Mr. Letherby: I will give just a little bit of advice to my good hon. friend over there. If I had his ability and his ambition to go forward in politics, I would take a leaf out of the old and the great master of politics in this House, and I refer to the hon. Prime Minister. I would steal his whole book, if I were he, and I would also take more leaves out of the book of the progressive-going hon. leader of the Opposition.

Now, having said all this, I hope that there is no one I have forgotten. If I have, I wish they would raise their hands and I would be glad to extend a word of congratulations to them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to be serious for a few moments, the purpose of my speaking this afternoon is to refer to some very serious charges, in my opinion, that were made about the Ontario hospital in Orillia—not only by the hon. member for York South but by two Toronto evening newspapers some few weeks ago.

I refer specifically to the charges made by the hon. member for York South when he said that great old institution up there was a place of human storage, it was a fire hazard, it was intolerable, it was terrible—and I do not know how many other adjectives.

It is this particular case that I would like to deal with this afternoon. I would like to say, sir, that hospital is in my riding, that I have lived in the riding of Simcoe East all my life, and that I have had the honour of representing that great and historic riding for the past 6 years.

I am quite well acquainted, and very familiar, with the conditions of that hospital.

I have made it a practice to visit that hospital on many many occasions; indeed, I have tried to do so every two or three months through the year.

The purpose of my visiting that hospital is to show my encouragement, my interest, and my appreciation to the medical superintendent, his medical staff, the nursing staff, and the attendants and The Department of Public Works for the great job they are doing there. I have, on more than one occasion in this House, spoken of the great work they are doing.

It is no secret that there is overcrowding at that hospital in Orillia, and neither is it any secret that there is considerable overcrowding in every general hospital in this province. Overcrowding in that hospital in Orillia has been well-known to the public and to The Department of Health for years and, just because my friend, the hon. member for York South, has just discovered this situation, I do not think it warrants the situation that we should award him any meritorious medals, or anything else, for his late discovery. Nor do I feel that the rest of the hon. members here should all panic.

I maintain that these old Parliament Buildings are overcrowded. I maintain that the East Block is overcrowded, and has been for years, with the result that our public and government services are scattered all over this city and out into the country.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not the main point I made, though.

Mr. Letherby: I will get to that, my hon. friend. Now let the hon. member just be patient and read his paper.

We all know the reason for overcrowding at this and other hospitals. With our increased—and rapidly increasing—population, and the demand for increased welfare and other health services, it is quite impossible to build hospitals and accommodation as rapidly as they are required.

For some years there has been steady progress made toward building increased facilities at that hospital. What they have done, I think, has been done in the most modern fashion possible.

However, until such time as sufficient new accommodation is made ready, it is necessary to hospitalize about 400 patients in that old wing of the hospital to which my hon. friend referred.

Might I say for the record that there are 3 types of mentally retarded people: the mildly retarded; the moderately retarded; and the severely retarded. Out of some 2,565 patients at that hospital only 400, as I have said, of the severely retarded are in sections B and L, in the old building.

Following these newspaper reports, and the charges by the hon. member for York South, I went back to that hospital to see just what great and terrible changes had taken place since I had been there—some time, I think, late in November. I, in company with Dr. Hamilton, the medical superintendent, and Mr. Ernie Boorer who was, at that time, the assistant chief attendant, went through the same building, through the same areas, saw the same conditions as did my hon. friend from York South and, I think, his young hon. colleague from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden).

I want to get back to some of these specific charges. If hon. members will recall, my hon. friend from York South made the charge that, on the first floor, I think, in that old building where these 400 are housed, some 60 or 80 boys were housed in one room with one wash outlet.

I agree with him but I saw that room, and they were apparently having no difficulty in keeping clean. They had never had any outbreak of skin rash or other associated conditions which oftentimes accompany lack of washing facilities.

But I did note, as I went through that wing, that the floors were particularly clean, the beds were all neatly made—a little close together—and the boys were sitting on their benches and seats enjoying the afternoon television show.

Now, I wish to refer to the two wings, directly above those, where the more severely retarded are located. I went up to the wings where the hon. member complains that there is only one washtub for 120. Now, there are two floors with a washtub on each. Each serves, I think, from 60 to 80 patients. I went into the very same washroom, sir, that he did, and indeed there was only one washtub there. But this is for a very good reason—the staff in the hospital will not permit, or do not want, any more than one washtub, because if they take adult retarded men, who are not capable of looking after themselves, and dump them into a slippery tub, they are apt to crack their skulls or fracture their legs. That is no place for them.

Those washtubs are used by only 8 or 10 of the mildly, quietly retarded, old gentlemen who could get in there without difficulty. What the hon. member did not say was that by that washtub were 6 shower outlets where the attendants undressed the patients, showered them, scrubbed them—soaped, inspected, dried, and dressed these patients in a matter of two hours.

Now the impression was left that there is only one washtub on that floor for all these people. That is all they want. They are not capable of using those tubs.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): That was not what they told us.

Mr. Letherby: They, who are they?

Mr. MacDonald: Some of the members of the staff. I have been there, too.

Mr. Letherby: I have been there, and, just a minute, I have the floor. The hon. members can comment and talk all they like later on.

When I discussed this matter about the washtub they said: "One tub on these floors is all we want—we prefer the showers for these patients." But did the hon. member for York South say anything about these 6 shower outlets? No, and if he had an eye in his head, he would have seen they were there, or if he had asked any questions, he would have learned they were there.

The hon. member talks about overcrowding, and he talks about human storage. He talks about walls needing paint and the plaster showing thin in places.

Mr. Speaker, I have seen military barracks in World War I and World War II where the overcrowding was a great deal worse than in those buildings. Nobody objected—nobody said a word. I suppose there are some hon. members of this Legislature who know something about the old “horse palace” down here at the Exhibition grounds. That was a crowded place, and I do not think the odour was too good down there, not for a moment.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Those men should speak for themselves.

Mr. Letherby: I have seen, Mr. Speaker, rural churches in this province of Ontario—and lovely little rural churches they are—and I have seen public buildings where the paint is peeled off the walls and where there are cracks in the walls, and where plaster shows through a great deal worse than in those 3 wings. But, nobody has made any sensational charges or made newspaper headlines in speaking about them.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member spends an hour a week in those, though.

Mr. Letherby: I admit that those walls in that hospital need painting, and they are going to be painted. But I would suggest that, in my opinion, if the hon. members of this House could see the type of mentally retarded adults who are in those two wings, they would agree with me that these people do not care, or are not too much concerned for the moment, whether those walls had just been recently decorated in turquoise, beige, coral or any other colour. Just because they have not been recently painted is not going to affect the health or the welfare of these people.

And with all the talk about lack of proper washing facilities, and other facilities to keep clean, those authorities up there tell me that never have they had any difficulty with skin rashes or, as I have said, impetigo or bed sores, among those patients who are confined steadily to their beds, as oftentimes is the case in a general hospital.

May I say a word about the food which is served there? I doubt if the hon. members of this House get half as good food in their own homes as they serve in that hospital. I went through the dining rooms and they are spotlessly clean, the table tops are all covered with arborite, and all the cooking utensils are stainless steel.

And just to go back a moment, sir, about the reference of the hon. member for York South to the floors in that place, and the terrible stench and odour. Those floors were meticulously scrubbed clean. Indeed, the Toronto Telegram in their report, as bad and all as it was, repeated on one or two occasions that the floors are meticulously scrubbed, and are clean, and that there is no odour.

Mr. MacDonald: So did I say it was clean, but the odour is still there.

Mr. Letherby: The odour is not in that room. I was amazed to go in there and find that room in that splendid condition.

Mr. MacDonald: It was drawn to our attention by members of the staff—by members of the staff.

Mr. Letherby: Now listen, the hon. member spoke for two hours and I did not interrupt him. Now, will the hon. member have the kindness, and the courtesy, to be a quiet little mouse this afternoon?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. member does not misrepresent what I said, I shall be quiet.

Mr. Letherby: The only place, Mr. Speaker, where there was any odour in that building was in the toilet room and that is understandable, in my opinion. There were sufficient toilet outlets for the use of the occupants of that building. But when one gets severely retarded adults who are not toilet trained, one is bound to have odour.

Despite that, those floors are washed down several times a day, and sufficient deodorant is used to try to overcome the situation. No matter if they had the most modern up-to-date toilet facilities that man can make, the same condition would prevail.

Now, let me get back just for a moment to talk about the fire hazard the hon. member was so glad to bring out in his headlines in the newspaper story.

Now, he is reported in the Toronto Daily Star of January 7 as follows, about the fire hazard at that old hospital:

The older wings, some of them built 80 years ago, should not be tolerated for a moment by any fire marshal in a public building. Obviously the standards for safety have been so lowered that they are meaningless with hundreds of retarded persons ranging in age up to 70 or more, crowded into 3 floors in these wings. An outbreak of fire, particularly at night, would bring almost certain tragedy for the staff and patients.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the fire marshal, Mr. W. J. Scott, who has been dealing with fire hazards and fire problems for the greater part of his life, nailed down that declaration fast.

I want to read what he had to say, as reported on the January 11 front page of the Toronto Globe and Mail:

HOSPITAL SCHOOL NO FIRE TRAP, MARSHAL FINDS

The Ontario Hospital school at Orillia is not a fire trap, Ontario fire marshal W. J. Scott said last night after a two-day tour of the rambling buildings by a team of provincial fire inspectors.

Mr. Scott said peeling paint did not make a fire trap, that the hospital had fulfilled regulations defined by the government's inter-departmental committee on fire safety, and that there were no physical defects in the building that would justify calling it a fire trap.

That, sir, is what Mr. Scott, fire marshal, and his great team who have spent the greater part of their life dealing with fire hazards, had to say about these accusations.

Mr. MacDonald: He ordered putting on more guards.

Mr. Letherby: Now, let me say a little bit more about what steps have been taken to help correct any possibility of a fire trap.

All non-fireproof stairs have been removed or replaced with reinforced concrete stairs. New fire stairs have been built to improve exit facilities. Masonry fire walls with fire resistant doors and frames have been constructed to act as fire breaks.

The majority of the hospital buildings have already been equipped with an automatic fire alarm system, and work is proceeding to complete this system as quickly as possible.

Work has been proceeding on the fire-proofing of the oldest cottages for the past 4 years. However, this policy is under review, due to the slow progress resulting from the limited areas available for fireproofing at one time.

Obsolete and faulty fire-fighting equipment is being replaced where necessary, and additional stand pipes and hose cabinets have been added at strategic points.

Further, Mr. Lee Edwards, veteran fire chief of the Orillia fire department for many years, has been appointed fire chief at the hospital on a full-time basis.

Fire chief Edwards, along with his staff and equipment have also the assistance of the Orillia fire department, who can be on the scene of a fire in a matter of 4 or 5 minutes.

Now, I think, hon. members will agree that all possible precautions are being taken for the safety of the patients and the staff at that hospital, in case of fire.

Now, there is another matter in this same connection that I would like to deal with for a moment, and that has to do with the charges of political pressure being brought on the hospital and on the superintendent of the hospital. I would like to refer to a newspaper report in the Toronto Daily Star, January 8. In a 6-column front-page headline, I quote:

CHARGES MPP PRESSURE JAMS MENTAL HOSPITAL and a two-column sub-head says:

POLITICAL RACKET, SAYS ORILLIA HEAD

Now, I am reading from what the newspaper report stated:

Politicians who apply pressure to get children admitted to the Orillia hospital for the retarded are responsible for at least 50 per cent. of the overcrowding.

"They just keep pouring them in," superintendent Foster C. Hamilton said yesterday in an interview. "At least half of the 310 admissions last year resulted from pressure by MPP's."

At first reluctant even to discuss this phase of the overcrowding problem, Dr. Hamilton said that, "After 41 years"—and he made a correction there—he said, "I've only been in 35, I do not know how they got the 41, I am now on the last lap and maybe I'm free to speak out. It is a political racket," he said, "and everybody knows it. First I get a letter from the parents, then I get one from the local MPP, then I get one from the Minister's office, if the child has not been admitted by that time. It does not seem to matter whether we have beds.

"In one case I was told by the parents that the patient would bring his own bed. The pressure never ends."

He said the government had ordered acceleration in plans for new hospitals at Chatham, Palmerston, Goderich and Owen Sound.

Superintendent Hamilton, who agreed that his major problem was overcrowding and old buildings, said that, "The political pressure was being exerted by MPP's of all parties, and not just members of the Conservative party."

He said, "In the mail yesterday morning, for example, came a request from a prominent Liberal, living in western Ontario, to have admitted to the hospital a retarded child whose parents were known to him."

As soon as Dr. Hamilton read that article, he called me and he said, "Lloyd, I never did say to that reporter that it was a political racket. What I did say was political pressure." I can reasonably understand his saying that, and I can understand what would bring that about.

Now, in all common sense, let us be reasonable. If parents are worried, and have a retarded child, the first thing they are going to do is go to their family physician for counsel, advice, and guidance. Then undoubtedly the family physician would say, "Well, why do you not go and see your member of Parliament? Perhaps he could help to get this child into a hospital."

I maintain, sir, that if an hon. member of this Legislature is worth his salt, and is doing his job, the first thing he will do is get in touch with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and try to put that child in a hospital. If he does not try to get that child in a hospital in a hurry, the chances are that the father and the mother, or other relatives of the family who must live with that retarded child, are going to come down with a nervous breakdown. Then we would have 3 or 4 faced with hospitalization instead of just the one.

In my 6 years as a member for the riding of Simcoe East, I have never once approached Dr. Hamilton of the hospital in Orillia to have a retarded child admitted. I had only two cases come up during that time, and I immediately referred them to the then Minister of Health, my good hon. friend Mr. Phillips, and, bless his dear heart and soul, within a matter of weeks he had them both in an eastern institute.

I say that this government is being condemned by one or two newspapers and a few individuals for not moving faster to correct the overcrowding in hospitals of our mentally retarded. I say we are doing a wonderful job, having regard to the many difficulties in providing accommodation fast enough, and also having regard to the pocketbooks of our citizens.

So I would like to place on the record what this government has done in trying to provide increased and better accommodation for our mentally retarded, at the Ontario hospital in Orillia, since it came to power in 1943.

The first project undertaken was the construction of a 300-bed extension, consisting of 6 one-storey and basement wings for patients, with the centre wing accommodating the food service centre for the unit, together with dining rooms for ambulatory patients, and the staff.

This is known as the first group of the children's unit, providing 300 beds, and was completed in 1946 at a cost of more than $434,000.

The second project was the construction of an isolation building. Contracts were awarded in 1953 for a self-contained unit, having a kitchen and food service system, so that the maximum segregation is obtained when desired. This building provided accommodation for approximately 76 patients and was completed in 1955 at a cost of over $453,000.

For the third project, contracts were awarded in May, 1953, for the construction of a reception and dormitory group of buildings and connecting passageways. This group of buildings provides 300 beds, and was completed in 1955 at a cost of $1,124,000.

The additional projects include a new powerhouse which has been recently built at a cost of $1,468,000; new offices and stores buildings for The Department of Public Works, $236,000; a new heifer barn, $66,000; new sub-station, $102,000.

I am giving all even figures.

Renovations to main kitchen and dining room, including installation of modern equipment, amounted to $641,000.

In addition to the new bed programme and ancillary buildings constructed at this institution, The Department of Public Works have expanded a considerable amount with relation to capital improvements. Some of these capital improvements of major concern are: fireproofing section to the building; major alterations to the laundry building and the laundry equipment; provision for outfall sewers; installing new watermain; installation of the new elevator in the stores building; complete renovations to the electrical system, including the installation of the emergency power plant.

They include provision of non-static floors in the operating rooms; installation of a TV antenna system; and the hard surfacing of roads and landscaping work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is an impressive record of progress at that hospital over the years. Since this government took office, 676 new beds have been provided at that Orillia hospital, with a capital expenditure of $6,821,000. That is not chicken-feed. This, in addition to the running expenses of that institution, would amount to well over $1 million a year.

I think the hon. members will agree that this record will indicate that this government has been alert and active in trying to meet the needs of our mentally retarded. It is regrettable when newspapers such as the Toronto Daily Star and the Toronto Telegram get down into the gutter and publish those things which will bring heartaches and concern to the parents of these people in order to increase their newspaper sale.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member should read some of the letters I got from parents, not one—

Mr. Letherby: I wish the hon. member would go up to Orillia. They would tar and feather him after what he said up there.

I say it is all the more regrettable when an hon. member of this House, who should know better, would come up there and make a hit-and-run attack as the hon. member for York South did. He is a man who would pour salt into the aggravated wounds of these parents of these retarded children solely for political purposes.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member sounds like the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) now.

Mr. Letherby: The hon. member as much as told the parents of those people that their loved ones up there are piled into our mental hospitals like cordwood, and they are being shabbily and dirtily treated.

Mr. Speaker, I am one who welcomes, and even admires, sincere and honest criticism. But I do not like, and I detest, criticism which is not sincere, and which is designed to destroy, rather than improve, a situation for selfish, political reasons.

The hon. member for York South was lavish in his destructive criticism of the Ontario hospital, but not one word of praise did he have for all the good things that they have done and for all these new buildings—for the loving, tender care that great staff are giving to these people. Not a word, nothing, was said about the new building which is the most modern, I suppose, that one could get.

Nothing was said about the dozens and dozens of trips which are planned by the staff up there for these mentally retarded children. Throughout the year they take busload after busload up to the Midhurst forestry park with picnic baskets. Attendants play games with them. They see the birds and the animals, which are at the park, and they have a lovely time.

Nothing was said about the many many trips which are planned to take these retarded children down to Orillia to enjoy a hockey match in the arena, to skate at the arena, to see the theatre and to enjoy the swimming pool at the YMCA.

None of these things was mentioned—cordwood, hazards, intolerable, terrible, that is all they had to say.

I say that it is nothing but destructive criticism. In other words, I am sorry to say that my hon. friend is a one-man demolition gang. As the hon. Prime Minister said in the House the other day, the hon. member for York South has done more to injure his own progress, in a political way, by his serious personal attacks on people and institutions than anything else.

Sir, if I were him, and had the ability he has, I would take some of those smartening-up pills, I think they would help him.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Letherby: In a minute.

The hon. member reminds me of a man who, if he were to set out to kill a fly, would not pick up a fly swatter to do the job, but would reach out for a 20-pound sledgehammer and do untold other destruction in the process of killing that simple little fly.

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. member for Simcoe East the man who is concerned about so-called personal attacks?

Mr. Letherby: Mr. Speaker, will you tell the hon. member for Woodbine to be quiet?

Mr. MacDonald: He does not want to hear from anyone.

Mr. Letherby: I have the floor and I will not surrender it to any hon. member in this House at the moment. I listened to the hon. member for York South for two hours like a mouse, so let him just be quiet.

Mr. MacDonald: I was just going to ask one question.

Mr. Letherby: Now, Mr. Speaker, while two newspapers and the hon. member for York South were pretty rough in their condemnation of the Ontario hospital at Orillia, 3 other newspapers—and one other hon. member of this House—were very kind and were very objective and constructive in their encouragement toward what we are doing.

I would like to say that that great metropolitan daily, the Toronto Globe and Mail, gave us a splendid editorial on the work which is being done up there. My newspapers in Orillia, the Orillia Packet and Times and the Orillia News Letter were loud in their encouraging praise of the great work we are doing there. That is because they live there, they know, they do not run in and just see some little incident or some situation at the moment and then run away.

I was very grateful to my good friend, the hon. member for Kenora, who wrote a leading article which appeared in the Globe and Mail, I think around January 11, which condemned the attitude, not only of the other newspapers, but the attitude of the hon. member for York South.

Now, sir, I would like to say, as I try to draw to a conclusion, that I am proud of the great work that hospital in Orillia is doing for our mentally retarded.

I am proud of the long years of public service which have been given to that hospital by my old friend Dr. Hamilton and his staff—the medical staff, the nursing and the attendant staff and The Department of Public Works.

I am proud of the leadership which is being given up there to this Department of Health by my friend and colleague, the hon. Minister of Health.

I am proud of the leadership of this government in the field of health and welfare and human betterment—with the greatest record, in my opinion, of any government on the North American continent.

This government is determined to go forward to meet the challenges of health problems and the other responsibilities of this great and growing province and, in the words of my hon. leader and the words of my hon. friend from Peel here the other day, we are going forward because, “even greater progress lies ahead.”

Let me say, in conclusion, that I have many matters of great interest to me and my riding which I would like to discuss at this time. But I do not think it is a good thing for any private hon. member to speak unduly or at any great length. I would rather hear an hon.

member speak for a short time and speak more often. So I will reserve those matters for a later occasion.

I would just close on a little more humorous vein, and tell a short story, and that, sir, concerns 4 professional men: a doctor, a dentist, a lawyer and a minister.

They were great old friends, great old cronies, who decided to retire. So they decided to build their cottages or their homes in a resort which was largely populated by Scots.

As is the custom of those Scots, many of them named their cottages with those heather-flavoured names such as Dunbrae, Dunkirk and so forth, so they decided they would pattern themselves after that fashion. So the doctor, when he finished his cottage, called it Dunkillin; the dentist called his Duncpullin; and the lawyer called his Dunrobbin; and the minister his Dunraven; and so, sir, I have, like the minister, “done raven” for the minute.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the hon. gentleman a question? The hon. member has questioned my sincerity in what I said following my visit there. Under the rules of the House I might become indignant about him but I like him and I shall not.

My question is this: If an organization like the Canadian mental health association commended the hon. member for Woodbine and I for our visit and what we said, commended the hon. Minister for his frank admission of just how bad the conditions were in the older wings, would it be legitimate to come to the conclusion that the Canadian mental health association is not sincere too? Because, after all, they commended us. What is the hon. member's view on that?

Mr. Letherby: Now, my great objection, my hon. friend from York South, was this. Basically he was right. We know the place is overcrowded, we know that those facilities are not adequate to look after those mentally retarded people.

But until such time as we do get new accommodation, I think it is wise to put up with it.

But here is the punch line—what I did not like, sir, was the hon. member coming up and saying: “Now listen, this is terrible, that is worse, this is disgraceful, that is intolerable,” then he gets headlines.

What I would have admired the hon. member for York South very much for having done, had he and his young hon. friend from

Woodbine come up to Orillia and made their thorough check and inspection of that hospital, and said: "Now listen, you are doing a good job up here, but you are overcrowded."

I would have appreciated his criticism very much, but the only part I did not like was that everything said about that great old institution was bad.

Mr. MacDonald: I will give the hon. member a copy of the release.

Mr. Letherby: I would appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

I must point out to the members that, in asking questions, they should be direct questions so they can be answered fairly well, yes or no, which is the nature of a question and not questions which actually sponsor another speech.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member answer a question for me, please? Does the institution in Orillia have any play area for the patients?

Mr. Letherby: I would say, sir, I could not just give the hon. member the exact acreage, but they have a lovely area there bordering on the lake, with lovely landscaped lawns and areas where they have ample room to play. I would say it consists of many acres.

Mr. Newman: The second question is in the same vein: Do they have a play area that can be used in inclement weather?

Mr. Letherby: Well, I would say the area would be just as good in inclement weather as any other area in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Newman: The third question, Mr. Speaker: Does the hospital have any physiotherapists?

Mr. Letherby: I understand they have. Yes, they have the most up-to-date facilities in every matter regarding health.

Mr. Newman: My understanding is there is not a single physiotherapist for certain branches, or certain divisions.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Since one of the hon. members in the other House said, "Well, how about them taking a trip up there?" I did.

I would like to know if they have removed that ugly thing that even a man in his right mind, when he comes out of the playground down cellar, has to look at—which is 6 vaults that they used to put the dead in, just outside of where the children play? Have they taken that vault out of there yet?

Mr. Letherby: I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Bukator: There is a vault that they used to store the dead in, just outside of the playroom for the youngsters, that has been abandoned for quite some time. Have they taken that one out of there?

Mr. Letherby: I cannot truthfully say, sir, but I would say to my hon. friend that this hospital, I think, has one of the lowest death rates of any hospital in the province. I was told last year, Mr. Speaker, they had only 50 deaths, or less—that is, one a week, for over 2,500 patients.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, the question I asked was, did they remove those vaults?

Mr. Letherby: How do I know? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Bukator: Can the hon. member imagine the effect that that would have on the children in the other room?

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I join with the others who have risen to speak to this House, to congratulate you on being raised to the high office which you hold.

Although as a new member I cannot talk of all the years I have known you, the very fact that you have been elected by all the hon. members of this House—a membership, that consists of many men of long and distinguished careers—is ample evidence of the high esteem in which you are held. I wish you great success in your high office.

Mr. Speaker, I know that it is quite common for a new member to speak of the riding which he represents. I represent the riding of Parkdale which is a part of this great city in which the Legislature is held.

So often, when one represents a riding that is part of a large city, it often loses its identity with the greater part. However, we in Parkdale have been fortunate in the many distinguished people who have come from that area and, as a result, we can always have our local pride, as well as pointing to the men who have served this province.

I might even point out that such things of music and beauty as the Leslie Bell Singers began in Parkdale high school, but I am more interested in pointing out to hon. members the careers of 3 men from Parkdale who have served this House even though they sat on the other side.

Parkdale has been known as a Tory stronghold and naturally I, as the first Liberal member from Parkdale to sit in this House, hope to keep it in the Liberal camp.

But, Mr. Speaker, whatever battles may lie before me in this House, I could not begin my work here without saying a few words of tribute to the 3 men who have been in my place in the years gone by, even though all 3 of them, and two of them are still living, are diehard Tories.

When Parkdale first became a riding in 1914, William H. Price was the man who was chosen by the people to sit for Parkdale in this House, and he sat from that time to 1937 until he retired undefeated. He had a very distinguished career in this House and for 3 years he was Treasurer of the province of Ontario and, from 1926 to 1934, he was Attorney-General.

He did leave the city for a while during World War I when he became a lieutenant-colonel, raised men and went overseas and fought. In World War II, one of his own sons was killed in action. Colonel Price, even though he is a man over 80 years old, is still a vigorous man whose sense of humour has remained unimpaired despite all the battles he had in this House.

Mr. and Mrs. Price still live in Parkdale, where they have lived most of their lives, and they are among our most distinguished citizens. We in Parkdale are grateful for their service and I am certainly glad to mention it here to hon. members today.

Fred McBrien succeeded Colonel Price as the member for Parkdale and, although I never knew Frederick McBrien, he was a man whose life and career is certainly worthy of note. At the age of 16 he began in the hardware business in west-end Toronto with his brother, William McBrien, who later became chairman of the TTC, and who was an ardent advocate of the subway which is now a fact.

Fred McBrien later became a lawyer, and for many years represented what was then called southwest Toronto, Seat B, and then for two years represented Parkdale.

Although he represented Parkdale only for a short term of two years, his whole career and his whole life was devoted to that area of Parkdale and west-end Toronto. He was a man who had vigour and enterprise, and I know from the many old-timers who knew him that he won a place of respect in their hearts. His wife still carries on the McBrien reputation for good public service as a member of the board of education in Ward 6.

Mr. Speaker, 21 years ago William J. Stewart was elected to represent the people of Parkdale, and no one could stand in William's Stewart's stead without calling to attention his great service to this city and to this province. He was an alderman of the city of Toronto, 5 times the mayor of the city of Toronto, Speaker of this House and, in the last House, he was government Whip. This is indeed an imposing record of public service.

Any disagreements that I may have had with Mr. Stewart have been strictly on party lines and, as I campaigned around Parkdale, I could not help but be impressed by the high esteem he was held in by people, no matter what their political party.

In fact, there were many good Liberals who told me that "Bill" Stewart was just so much a part of Toronto that I would never see the inside of this House. However, on election night, as it was obvious that the Tory tide in Parkdale had ebbed away, Mr. Stewart, good sportsman as he is, came and wished me luck, and gave me the good advice that I did not just represent the Liberal party, but that I represented all of Parkdale. It is advice that I intend to follow.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I have taken the time of this House so that I, as a Parkdalian, may place on record the outstanding service of 3 Parkdaliens with whose political party I disagree, but whose political and moral integrity and service, to this city and province, I am anxious to be a part and to follow.

Since the end of World War II, Canada's population has undergone great changes. We have gained over 3 million people, the greatest change ever to take place in a similar period in our history. In Toronto, one out of every 5 people has arrived since World War II. With Canada still producing more goods than she can sell, these people reduce materially our dependence on markets outside this country.

Instead of the goods in search of people, the people have come in search of the goods. These newcomers, spread across Canada, bring $1 billion annually into this country. One billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. It is equal to our combined annual trade with the United Kingdom and Europe. The newcomers who have come to Canada are the greatest single factor in our post-war expansion. A great number of these newcomers now live in Parkdale, and I feel that Parkdale is indeed fortunate.

In the true tradition of people who are on the move, they are the best, the most vigorous, the most active of their race. It is no easy thing for people to come to a new country, in some cases to learn a new language and to make their homes. It is not a job for the weak or the lazy.

As the people of England, centuries ago, were a mixture of various races and became strong, so I feel, Mr. Speaker, that Canada gains new strength from these people with their new varied bloods.

As a Canadian with 4 generations of his family who have pioneered in Ontario and Manitoba, I count it a privilege to be able to serve these new pioneers.

Many of these new pioneers, Mr. Speaker, have suffered grievously at the hands of the Reds, and have lost their homes from the evil gang that rules in Russia. I think we would do well to heed their warning of what could happen to us unless we are careful of our cherished freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot build a great nation in Canada unless we have more people. We have the natural resources, but we do not have the people. I am proud, as a Liberal, to point out that the great strides in nation building have been under Laurier, King, and St. Laurent. It was under them that Canada was an attraction to anyone who had a will to work, and it was a mecca for all those people who wanted to try for themselves new lives in this country.

May I point out to this House that 1959 is the lowest point in 9 years for immigration into this country? What a pity it is, Mr. Speaker, that now we have in Ottawa a government that is all talk and no action, and that we have slipped back into the old Tory lethargy.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): And in Ontario, too.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of Toronto, I could not help but pass a few words on the metropolitan set-up. I will speak on it very shortly because others have spoken on it, and they are far more expert on the subject than I.

But there is one thing in the set-up of Toronto that I feel neglects and ignores an underlying principle in democratic government. The ignoring of this principle can be blamed on the government of this province. They have created a chairman of the metropolitan council. It is a position whereby, no matter what or who the personality may be, he holds vast power over people, he controls vast sums of money, and he is not elected by the people.

Mr. Speaker, they tell me that Metropolitan Toronto could not be brought about unless they had somebody appointed, or that it could not continue unless they had somebody appointed. Oh, I know they tell one in council he is elected. But as far as going down and facing the people is concerned, such an election is nonsense. He should be elected by the people.

Yet we are told that this cannot be done unless that person is appointed. We built a nation from coast to coast of various breeds and creeds, and it was done by people who are not afraid to be elected by the people and to be voted in.

And I say, Mr. Speaker, that as long as a situation exists in Toronto, where a man holds vast power over people and public money, he should be directly elected, just as every hon. member in this House must face the people. Every man in the House of Commons must face the people, and of all the city councils and town and village councils throughout this country, these individuals must go down and face the people themselves.

Yet we have, in this great city of Toronto, a man with a vast power who is appointed. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is wrong, and that it is up to this government, here in office at the present time, to correct the situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one matter that has already been brought to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), but I would like to bring it to his attention again, to emphasize what I think is a dangerous situation taking place in our society today. It is symptomatic. It is just one of these things that we must watch.

There is the matter of these bailiffs who were found not guilty when they were charged with going into somebody's home.

Now, I am glad to hear that the hon. Attorney-General is investigating this matter, to try, I hope, to bring about a change in the law to protect our people.

I say this because it was brought to mind, when I read it in the paper and it was discussed in this House, what William Pitt the Elder said about an Englishman's home. Because we have assumed the law of England here, the common law, I think it should be emphasized again. We must never forget it, especially during an age and a time with so many regulations, with so many things, that seem to cover up basic principles.

No matter what reforms we try to bring about, there are certain essentials about the common law that must never be forgotten.

William Pitt the Elder over 200 years ago, when talking about—in this case—money matters, said of the Englishman's home:

The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown. It may be frail, its roof may shake, the wind may blow, the rain may enter, but the King of England cannot enter. All his force may not cross the threshold.

And yet, even in west-end Toronto today, Mr. Speaker, we find that people can come in and take what they feel is theirs without a court order. I feel that this is a point which the hon. Attorney-General can consider and take action upon, for it is only by being eternally vigilant that we are going to protect the ancient freedom of the common law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) was once quoted on his method of governing Ontario as saying:

Things in this old province of Ontario move very slowly. We do a little here and a little there, then wait for next year.

Such a lacklustre policy may seem to be good politics for the moment, but it can be dangerous in the long run for our province and for our country.

I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who feels that Ontario is still young. It is abounding with opportunities in many fields, and it is a real tragedy when we see Russian and Chinese Communists seizing the imagination of nations in other parts of the world, and we seem to follow along despite our immense wealth, despite our immense opportunities, on a little here and a little there.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Very little there.

Mr. Trotter: A sample of this "do as little as possible" policy is the present government approach to mental health.

Now I am glad that the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) talked about Orillia. I do not intend to argue with him the particular smell in some particular room at the Orillia hospital. But we have known from the press, and the government has known for many years, that a sad situation exists not only in Orillia but it exists throughout many hospitals in the province of Ontario. There is certainly overcrowding in the Toronto hospitals on Queen Street and in New Toronto. Shortages of bed space and trained personnel are the result of a long period of neglect and indifference by the government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in justice to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), he has pointed out that he is aware that there are these shortages. But no speech, no excuse, by that hon. Minister can excuse the many long years of neglect by the present government of this province.

Mental illness, Mr. Speaker, is crippling more people than cancer, heart disease, polio and all the other physical diseases combined. It is an amazing thing that on this type of illness, which is such a burden on this country, Canada loses $1 billion per year in direct and indirect costs from mental illness. Every day, it is estimated, approximately 150,000 Canadians are in hospital. Half of these people, Mr. Speaker, are there because of mental illness. It is simply amazing to see the long neglect that this problem has suffered, not only in all of Canada—but especially in Ontario.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there is a greater blame to be placed on Ontario because they have had far more opportunity. Ontario has more wealth and far more facilities in which to attack this problem.

The hon. member for Simcoe East said how alive and alert and active his government was in the case of Orillia, and he talked about the loving care which the patients receive. Mr. Speaker, in anything that I may say in criticism of the policies on mental health, I certainly do not criticize the staff. They are underfinanced, underpaid, and they must conduct their duties with loving care and have a real interest in their work or they just would not stay there. But I say it is a shame and a disgrace that they have not had more assistance and help in their work years ago.

Now, to give hon. members some idea of what other people think of mental health in Canada, Mr. Speaker, I have a document. It is a report on mental health treatment services in Canada, and it is from the world mental health organization. As I go over this, point by point, I would like to bring to hon. members' attention, some of the conditions that exist in Toronto and in Ontario in our mental hospitals—not only for the retarded children but the mental hospitals all over the province of Ontario.

This report from the world mental health organization said:

A large-scale development of mental health services and facilities is required now, in all parts of Canada, since present services are inadequate for either hospitalization or proper care, and then it goes on with recommendations and what should be done to give people in Canada proper mental health care.

It says as far as hospitals for mental illness in Canada are concerned, despite some notable exceptions, there is a tendency for development to lag behind essential need, or to continue along outmoded lines. How true that is when we examine the record of this government, or listen to excuses from the hon. member for Simcoe East.

It is obvious that he could not be acquainted with the conditions existing in hospitals throughout this province, or he would never have said that the government is alive, alert and active. It is nonsense.

This report goes on to say it is recommended that the overcrowding of present mental hospitals be carefully documented and emphasized across Canada. It is further recommended that this information be the basis of a concerned, public information programme. It is further recommended that no more large mental hospitals, or additions to existing large mental hospitals, be built in Canada.

Now, I would like to emphasize that again, Mr. Speaker, for what evidence I have of how the government has conducted its hospital building in this province. It completely ignores the information that has been available to it, and has been given to it, on how to build mental hospitals and how to care for the mentally ill.

It is recommended by mental health authorities throughout the world, Mr. Speaker, that hospitals for the mentally ill should be for between 300 to 500 even, let us take it, patients—on the outside, 500 patients—but the mental authorities, the health department here, and the hon. Minister must know that—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Well, why does the government not do something about it?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it was just, I believe, a year and a day from today, February 12, 1960, when the hon. Minister of Health made an excellent speech in regard to the approach to the building of mental hospitals. I compliment him for it, but he has one extreme difficulty. He is a member of the Tory party. I do not think in the present administration that he ever has a hope of bringing about what he would like to do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: The present government, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is why the hon. member is there and we are here.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, there have been, in many Throne speeches—as there was in the Throne speech that we heard in the opening of this Legislature—a lot about the building and opening of new hospitals. This government has a great habit of going about announcing and broadcasting the opening of hospitals which never seem to take place, or they just manage to get open the odd one just before election date. Now they had a year ago—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: How ridiculous can the hon. member get?

Mr. Trotter: A year ago, Mr. Speaker, it was announced by the government that there would be a new hospital opened, for the mentally ill in Toronto, of 1,000 beds. We have never heard anything more of it since. But even then, a year ago—and this is the point I would like to emphasize—how they ignored completely the up-to-date information that they had on hand. Why would they announce a 1,000-bed hospital when they are told that the proper way to build a hospital is for the maximum of 500 people?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Who is the hon. member's authority? Tell us his authority.

Mr. Trotter: Now, my authority comes from the experts on this matter, and I have no hesitation—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Liberal party?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to hon. members why the experts, and the men who have spent their lives in this type of work, have emphasized that there should be smaller hospitals. There is a greater possibility of curing the individuals who suffer from mental illness. This is something for us to remember, not only from economic and human values, but it is a tremendous help in the long run for the budget of this province to rehabilitate a person who is ill. Instead of leaving them in an institution, cure them and send them back earning their way and paying taxes.

Yet the policy is still ignored by the government.

On a number of occasions they have announced that a new mental hospital would be built in Goderich and in Palmerston. Indeed, last July they announced there would be another hospital built in Owen Sound, again with 1,000 beds.

We have heard nothing since about the new Toronto hospital, Goderich, Palmerston or Owen Sound, I do not think a shovel has gone to the ground. They just keep announcing something as they did in the Throne Speech.

This government keeps talking about building hospitals. I believe that the hon. Minister of Health really wants them to build the hospitals, but that he is in with a government that, as it has in the past, does not care and does not have the foggiest idea of what to do about it, and is not even going to try.

I quote from an editorial of December, 1959, from the Toronto Daily Star, it says:

We were reminded of it—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Do not get mixed up now.

Mr. Trotter: I continue with the Star editorial:

We were reminded this week by Dr. Dymond's announcement—and then they have in quotation marks the word announcement, —that a $6 million psychiatric hospital, the biggest and most modern in Canada, will be in the work programme for late next year or early in 1961.

This was news. It was also news on October 16, 1959. And the hon. Prime Minister confirmed—and that is in quotation marks—that a new psychiatric hospital was to be built.

It was also news on October 14 when the hon. Prime Minister announced plans for the same hospital to be built at a cost of $5 million. Somehow, within two days or so, it had jumped $1 million, but evidently, they were not taking it too seriously anyway, and $1 million here or there did not mean too much. "It was even better news," the editorial goes on, "eight months ago"—that would be in April, 1959, when the hon. Minister of Health first announced it. "On that occasion he said he hoped a start would be made on the hospital sometime this year." That was last year, of course, in 1959.

Milking the same announcement for the sake of headlines is, of course, an old pastime for politicians. It assumes unhappy overtones, however, when the subject is human suffering.

Mr. Speaker, on this question of mental hospitals, it is surprising how northern Ontario is neglected as well as other parts of the country.

Mr. Whicher: All Ontario.

Mr. Trotter: I have heard from many hon. members of this side of the House how neglected northern Ontario has been by the present government. If the way they have built mental hospitals is any indication, it is certainly a very neglected part of the country.

May I point out, that the government has announced and, in part, built hospitals at North Bay and Port Arthur. But they have never finished the surgical buildings, and I do not know what a hospital is without the surgical end of it, but certainly they remain uncompleted. And heaven knows when they will get around to completing it.

But in the north country they need at least 3 or 4 hospitals for retarded children. There are about 1,500 to 2,000 retarded children in that area.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Do they? Has the hon. member ever been up there?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, may I show hon. members how that area has been forgotten? If a family lives in Kenora, or the Lakehead, or North Bay, or Timmins, they must send their child all the way to Smiths Falls. It is pretty difficult for a workingman, who has to send his child all the way to Smiths Falls, to ever get down there to see the child. Yet, as the hon. member for Simcoe East pointed out: "The parents have loving care for their children."

Well, I believe they certainly have. I have never seen any indications to the contrary, no matter how sick these children are. But certainly there are people from that area—the Lakehead, North Bay, and Timmins—who have no opportunity to have their family close by.

In the city of Ottawa, a city of 200,000 people, the children must be sent to Brockville.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): He is wrong.

Mr. Trotter: No, I am sorry, it is the mental hospital, there is no mental hospital in Ottawa, an area with 200,000 people. If there is mental illness in Ottawa they must be sent to an area such as Brockville.

The reason, Mr. Speaker, why I point out that some of these hospitals are so far away is this: that one of the reasons, and one of the ways, one can cure people of mental illness is to have them close to their families. There are many opportunities where these people can be rehabilitated back to family life. But if they have no opportunity to be close to home, or even to be sent home for a week or a weekend, in the long run it costs this province more money by not having such a system of mental hospitals that will restore people to health.

An apt illustration to give hon. members, Mr. Speaker, of the neglect and the way they build hospitals is down at 999 Queen Street West. As I have gone by streetcar from Parkdale down to the centre of town, over the years, I have seen the building as it was a few years ago, a very old building looking like a fire trap and one would think, in fact, I remember saying at different times, they will probably tear that building down, and then turn that area into a park.

But what have they done? They built a new wing right up the front, and this new building—a good-looking building—of course, covers up the back part. One does not see the dirt and the grime at the back. But, in doing that, the government ignores two essential things.

One is rehabilitating people for mental health. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize the importance of rehabilitation. We save money in the long run. We save human values in the long run, by rehabilitating these people.

But they have this new wing and, instead of having smaller hospitals as recommended, they make them all the bigger, and then there is another danger.

If someone goes into the hospital, and they are emotionally and mentally disturbed, but not too seriously, they are put into the new wing and then there is an undercurrent of talk among the patients. The new patient, who has gone into the new wing, learns from the others who say: "You had better get better in a hurry or they will put you back in the old wing."

There is a situation where they are dealing with somebody already mentally disturbed who is under this pressure. Of course, the authorities of the hospital do not mean it to happen. They cannot help it, it is not their fault. They are simply not given the facilities in which to rehabilitate the patient.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Was the hon. member in there? Is that hearsay evidence?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I know of one instance of a doctor practicing in Parkdale. One of his patients had to be assigned to the hospital on Queen Street. In October, 1958, he got a telephone call that this patient of his, in Queen Street, had pneumonia and was dying and they thought the patient would die. He said: "Well, put her in an oxygen tent." They discussed what should be done, and the reply came back: "We do not have an oxygen tent."

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): That is ridiculous in the extreme. That is absolutely false.

Mr. Trotter: Now, I do not know if it has changed since October, 1958, but certainly that is what that doctor told me, and I do not doubt him for one moment.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, will the hon. member document that evidence?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, I will be glad to give it to the hon. Minister privately. Unquestionably it is correct.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, that is all I ask.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parkdale is going on hearsay evidence. Did he examine the rooms where the care is being given?

Mr. Trotter: My statement, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. Minister of Transport, in all probability, has never been in the institution. This hon. member has.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He is quoting—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. Minister of Health in order when he says that what the hon. member from Parkdale said in this House was absolutely false, or an absolute falsehood?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I stated that the information which the hon. member was putting before this House is false, and I stand by that statement. I am not saying that this hon. member is guilty of a falsehood, I am simply stating that the information which he has put before this House as factual is completely and totally false.

Mr. Speaker: The member has agreed, I understand, to send the information to the Minister and I think we can let it go at that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I insist that the situation be clarified. If the hon. Minister now says that the information is incorrect or false, I think that is his privilege. But I think originally the hon. Minister said that what the hon. member is saying was completely false and that the hon. member is telling a falsehood.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The information that he is repeating is hearsay evidence.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that there has been some misconception here, and the member has agreed to submit the evidence which he has been given to the Minister. I do not see how anybody could say it is false at this time until it is checked.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Then he should withdraw the statement, Mr. Speaker. If that be your ruling, I agree with it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Minister is smearing.

Mr. Speaker: If the Minister would care to withdraw his statement, I think he can, but I do not see enough in it to have a ruling. He did not accuse the member of a falsehood.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would just like to point out, at this moment, that I would ask all of the members, when they are speaking, to address the chair. That includes those who wish to ask questions. I will add the observation that, in my opinion, the members need no assistance in making their speeches. Will the member proceed?

Mr. Trotter: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest that one of the difficulties that The Department of Health may have—in carrying out a desire that the hon. Minister from his speech of a year ago showed—of improving the health facilities in this province, is caused by two things.

First of all, these hospitals are put up by The Department of Public Works. A department should construct and give the orders itself, and make its own plans, because after all, the building of hospitals for the province of Ontario is not just a matter of bricks and mortar, but it is really a social plan. It is a scheme to rehabilitate people to health.

So I feel that this could be done more efficiently if the department itself, The Department of Health, had the power to issue the contract, and to really decide how big that building is going to be.

But The Department of Public Works seems to be having control of this—they pretty well do, I believe—and it would seem for the record to suit their own purposes.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): The hon. member had better stick to facts.

Mr. Singer: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Trotter: I was hoping to find some explanation of why the hon. Minister seemed to have, as he showed a year ago, such a progressive view on building hospitals, yet the government continues to announce—and to seem as if it were going to go ahead eventually to build—these large hospitals. Their announcements are against all the modern theory of mental illness and the rehabilitation of mental patients, and I feel—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Trotter: I feel, Mr. Speaker, as this mental illness is such a great expense, a great cost to this country, that more should be done in the way of research. In all of Canada, only about $750,000 is spent per year in research, mostly from federal sources, and I might say even these had their beginnings under a Liberal government when hon. Paul Martin was Minister of Welfare.

It is an amazing thing, Mr. Speaker, when here is an illness that is costing this country $1 billion a year, that nothing, or very little, seems to be done in order to do the research to find out what can cure it.

Years ago, if someone had diabetes, he just got sick and died. Today, we have found cures in this very city. We have used the brains of men in this city that have been of service to the world. The people who are diabetics can live normal lives, and some of them can become very outstanding citizens. They produce, they live good lives instead of dying—and, while they are dying, being an expense to themselves, their families and to the country.

We spend, Mr. Speaker, on the average of 5 cents per person per year on the research of mental illness. This is about what it costs us to keep the mentally ill in Canada for 7 days. It is just about one-fifth of the amount we spend in Canada in one day on liquor.

This great disease is an increasing threat to the economy of the country. Modern society aggravates tension. Because it is an increasing illness, the result is an increasing danger. Yet, its increase is strictly because of the lack of money that is made available to combat it. There are people willing to work, but they are hampered by the lack of money in this country put to the purposes of research.

The Americans spend 2.5 times as much per person as we do in mental research. They have at least 10 major centres devoted solely to psychiatric research, and several more are being built in the United States. But here in Canada there is not a single building, large or small, that is devoted to psychiatric research. People who want to do research in mental health must do their work in an attic, or in a cellar, or in some room borrowed from somebody else—

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would like the hon. member to stick with facts.

Mr. Singer: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Trotter: For the benefit of the hon. Provincial Secretary who stood up, I have gleaned this by word of mouth and from documents—some that I have right in front of me now—these very words are by men who devote their lives to this profession of curing mental illness. I do not question their good faith in what they have said or what they have written.

I suppose it is an indication, the way the hon. members from the government's side have spoken up, that they obviously have been unaware of what has been going on. It is, therefore—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: It is, therefore, Mr. Speaker, not surprising that psychiatric research in this country has been suffering because of the lack of attention it has received from the government. The tragedy of it is that the men who are trained, the men who have ability, are attracted to the United States when they see that they are neglected here and have opportunities elsewhere. That is why it hits their morale—and we have much difficulty in this province in getting proper personnel to man our hospitals, not only for those who are already ill, but to get the men to work who can possibly stop people from getting mentally ill in the first place.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that, in the policy toward mental health, there should be two things emphasized.

First, we need a tremendous increase in personnel, even before the buildings go up, to properly man what we already have now, we need also to expand the buildings in order to properly take care of those who are ill now, and to restore them to health, and then, also, do the tremendous work that is needed in research.

In point of human values, in point of economic values, it is far wiser for governments to take energetic steps for the cure and prevention of mental illness now, so that thousands of people in the future can be well adjusted and tax-paying citizens of this province.

On Dundas Street, just outside my riding, Mr. Speaker, a new liquor store has gone up. It is all modern construction. It has drapes, a mosaic wall on it, which is rather fancy. It is always an amazing thing to me that we can put up that type of building and yet, we hear these ghastly stories from Orillia and other hospitals. I think it is high time that the government reassessed its values, and made up its mind that it is going to do more in this most necessary field.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Liberals are calling for more outlets.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I would at this point like to say a few words regarding a comprehensive prepaid health plan for this province. I think that this is something that is long overdue and even by the words—

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ascertain how long the hon. member—

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I still have quite a bit to say.

I would like to break at this point if you intend to call on me in the near future. I could go at least half or three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. members that the session will begin at 2 of the clock on Monday.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Provincial Treasurer say whether or not the energy bills will be taken up on Monday?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I think that is likely. I do not have a programme for Monday.

The House adjourned at 3:50 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome, as guests of the Legislature, pupils from Levack high school, Levack; Greenacres school, Stoney Creek; Wexford public school, Scarborough; and Bloor Collegiate of Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I have here a series of motions arising out of discussions which I had with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), relative to allocating certain boards and commissions to certain committees.

I think perhaps it would be better if I move one motion, and then explain to the House all of the motions. If my hon. friend would like these to be given as notice, they could be printed on the order paper. I could move them and they could be taken as notice and put on the order paper.

On the other hand, committees may be meeting tomorrow, and perhaps they would want to get on with their business.

I think, sir, that these motions are according to agreement. But I would say to my hon. friend that, if it is felt that some of these items should be on some other committee, we could meet and that could be arranged.

However, with that explanation, I may say I have a dozen or more motions, but I will read this first one, and this will give us the opportunity to make the explanation and to discuss all of these motions.

I move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that in order to promote economy, efficiency and improved service in the operation of Crown agencies—that wording will be familiar to hon. members of the House—it is deemed advisable to invite the observations of the committee on agriculture on the present organization and methods of procedure of the undernoted Crown agencies, with a view to determining whether the procedures, methods and organization generally are well adapted for the most economical operation as is possible, consistent with the efficient and comprehensive conduct of the affairs of the respective Crown agencies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Crown agencies mentioned in this motion are:

1. Advanced registry board for beef cattle.
2. Advisory board for conjoint administration of Ontario agricultural college, Ontario veterinary college and Macdonald institute.
3. Artificial insemination board.
4. Milk industry advisory committee of Ontario.
5. Milk producers co-ordinating board.
6. Ontario fertilizer board.
7. Stallion enrolment board.
8. Ontario telephone authority.
9. Ontario telephone development corporation.
10. Ontario junior farmer establishment loan corporation.
11. Co-operative loans board of Ontario.
12. Ontario agricultural college.
13. Ontario veterinary college.
14. Macdonald institute.
15. Ontario food terminal board.
16. Ontario stock yards board.
17. Milk industry board of Ontario.
18. Farm products marketing board and local marketing boards.

Further, I move that there be referred, to the said committee on agriculture, the most current annual reports and their accompanying audited statements of the Crown agencies mentioned in this resolution.

Now, I discussed this matter with the provincial auditor as did the hon. leader of the Opposition. We are of this opinion, that those words being added to it place these boards and commissions in the same relationship to the committee as does the placing of the public accounts with the public accounts committee. Now, sir, after this resolution is read, if the question is not put—I do not think it should be put at this moment—I will give the gist of the other resolutions, so that it will give the way the matter has been broken down.

Mr. Speaker: Would the members require this whole motion read? We will dispense with the reading.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, Mr. Speaker, the other motions are as follows:

There is a motion referred to the committee on education on identically the same terms. The Crown agencies mentioned are:

1. Training schools advisory board.
2. Defence training board.
3. Teachers' superannuation commission.
4. Board of parole.

The board of parole, of course, emanates from The Department of Reform Institutions and I think we determined that we would let the reform institutions run with the education committee.

The next motion refers to the committee on energy. The committee on energy, sir, would deal with:

1. Ontario fuel board.
2. Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Now, in relation to the matter discussed here last Thursday, regarding the Samia lands, that requires a separate motion because it is dealt with outside of the area of this reference.

However, I will discuss it with the hon. leader of the Opposition, and I would propose to place that before the House tomorrow.

The next resolution is in relation to the committee on government commissions. The agencies referred to this committee would be:

1. Ontario research foundation.
2. Ontario-St. Lawrence development commission.
3. Soldiers' aid commission.
4. Ontario northland transportation commission.
5. Ontario water resources commission.
6. Ontario racing commission.
7. Liquor control board of Ontario.
8. Liquor licence board.
9. Alcoholism research foundation—which previously, as I discussed with my hon. friend, felt it would be better in this committee.
10. Civil service commission.
11. Public service superannuation board.

12. Ontario parks integration board.

13. Ontario securities commission.

Now, we were referring the Niagara parks commission to public accounts and it might be better to put all of the parks commission in public accounts, instead of on the committee having to do with government commissions, but that can be determined.

The next motion deals with the committee on health and welfare:

1. Cemeteries advisory board.
2. Commission for the investigating of cancer remedies.
3. Council of nursing.
4. Board of review.
5. Medical advisory board.
6. Ontario cancer institute (Princess Margaret hospital).
7. Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation.
8. Ontario hospital services commission.
9. Board of directors of chiropractors and, 10 to 17, boards of drugless therapy, masseurs, osteopathy, physiotherapy, embalmers and funeral directors, optometry, chiropody, and dental technicians.

Now, sir, the next committee is that of highways and highway safety. Referred to these are:

1. Research advisory board.
2. Ontario highway transport board.

To the committee on labour would be referred: 1. Committee for designated building trades, and, 2 to 5, the same for the trade of barber, trade of hairdresser, trade of motor vehicle repairs, trade of worker in servicing and installing air-conditioning and refrigerating equipment.

6. Ontario anti-discrimination commission.
7. Industry and labour board.
8. Board of examiners of operating engineers.
9. Ontario labour relations board.
10. Workmen's compensation board.

To the committee on lands and forests would be referred simply the Lake of the Woods control board.

To the committee on legal bills:

1. Accountant of the supreme court of Ontario.
2. Commissioner of police for Ontario.
3. Office of the fire marshal.
4. Office of the official guardian.
5. Public trustee.

To the committee on mining:

1. Sulphur dioxide committee.
2. Mining commissioner.
3. Sulphur fumes arbitrator.

To the committee on municipal law:

1. Municipal advisory committee.
2. Ontario municipal board.

To the committee on public accounts:

1. Civil service board of review.
2. Joint advisory council (re civil service).
3. Ontario municipal improvement corporation.
4. Province of Ontario savings office.
5. Housing Corporation Limited.
6. Niagara parks commission.

Now, I did suggest, sir, in reference to one of the other committees, that perhaps the other parks committees could go into that board so that they would all be under the one committee. But that is not very fundamental.

To the committee on travel and publicity:

1. Ontario archaeological and historic sites advisory board.
2. Board of censors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the disposition we felt would be most satisfactory. What it does, of course, is this. Instead of having all these boards and commissions come before the one committee, they are divided up in the form that the committee that would be closest to it would be dealing with the departments concerned, and would be dealing with the committees that were related to those departments. Now, sir, I have moved the first motion, these other motions I shall hold pending the viewpoint of the House. Now, they could go on the order paper if so desired as notice of motion, so that they could be considered tomorrow.

Tomorrow, I propose to move a motion in connection with the Hydro matter that was discussed here last Thursday and on other days, and I think that, sir, would bring matters up to date.

As far as the Niagara parks matter is concerned, a motion did not seem to be necessary, it seemed to be all covered in the motion that involved the other matters.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister did, as he said, discuss this with me. As far as how I am personally concerned, I have no objections to proceeding with the motions at this very time.

I think the primary purpose is simply to allocate the various boards and agencies to respective standing committees. It may be that one particular board or commission can be argued to be the responsibility of one or more standing committees. But I certainly think this is a step in the right direction, and I have no objection to proceeding.

However, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister one question, and that is in respect to public accounts. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Niagara problem will be referred to that particular committee. Now, does the phraseology that has been included in the motion assure that witnesses can be called on that particular occasion? Does it mean witnesses, other than witnesses who are employed by the commission?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, there is no question of that.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We certainly would have no objection to the division which the hon. Prime Minister has indicated. It may be that experience will suggest a shuffling of some of these boards to other committees, but experience can be our guide.

There is just one other aspect, with regard to the Niagara parks commission, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to raise. It is that, if the Niagara parks commission is being referred to the public accounts committee, normally this committee would deal only with public accounts.

Now, there are other aspects of the operation of the commission that would not fall directly within the term "accounts." Are we to assume that these other aspects of the commission's operations can legitimately be considered by the public accounts committee—or just accounts?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, this is a very broad reference. This reference gives the committee the power to look into the whole organization and methods, hon. members will understand, of the Niagara parks commission. Now, that would include such things as tendering, and letting of contracts, and the way they do business. That is a very broad reference.

In addition to that, it refers the most current annual report, so that places the committee in identically the same position as the public accounts committee. My authority for that is the provincial auditor, who discussed that matter with the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself.

Mr. Speaker: We will deal with this main motion as submitted, and as we have heard it read. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to read this, although someone has to read it. Perhaps it might be better, sir, if I did it myself and relieved you of that heavy onerous burden.

I would move, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that, in order to promote economy, efficiency and improved service in the operation of Crown agencies, it is deemed advisable to invite the observations of the committee on legal bills, on the present organization and method of procedure of the undernoted Crown agencies, with a view to determining whether the procedures, methods, and organization generally are well adapted for the most economical operation as is possible, consistent with the efficient and comprehensive conduct of the affairs of the respective Crown agencies.

Now, with this I have taken the liberty, sir, of making one change at the request of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). I have put the Ontario securities commission on the legal bills committee where it might more properly be than on one of the other committees.

Now the concluding paragraph is this:

Further, that there be referred to the said committee on legal bills the most current annual reports and their accompanying audited statement of Crown agencies mentioned in this resolution which, as I say, takes the place of the public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, sir, this resolution I can abbreviate further.

Moved by myself, and seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that certain commissions be referred to the committee on government commissions.

Now, they are identically as I read them, sir, with the exception that the Ontario securities commission is removed from this because it is in the other resolution.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, sir, the resolution relating to the committee on education, which is identically as explained.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Moved by myself, and seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, the reference in connection with the committee on energy.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to make reference to the passing of the mother of the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. Parry). Now, Mrs. Parry passed away yesterday, I think, at the age of 97 years.

Her son has been an hon. member of this House since 1945, and I take this opportunity of saying that the hon. member for Kent West has, I believe, only been absent from this House 11 times in the last 15 years. He is a very constant attender of this House. I mention that at this time because, of course, he is absent from his seat.

Now, I know, sir, that all of the hon. members of this House, of all sides and of all parties, would want me to extend to him, sir, through you, our deepest sympathy in the passing of his mother.

I had the opportunity one time of meeting her when she was not quite 97, but she was well over 90. Actually in the compass of her lifetime, of course, tremendous things have happened. If we go back to the year of her birth in 1863, it was a very much different world.

At this time, in the year 1863, the United States was torn by strife and civil war, the Battle of Caspar Hill still had to be fought. If we went back to 1863, at this time Gettysburg and the other battles which had such a profound effect on the history of the world were still in the future.

At that time, it was before Confederation, everything concerning Canada's growth since Confederation and Confederation itself was in the future. The Quebec Resolution of 1864, of course, had not even been considered. The visit to Charlottetown, I think, was still in the future.

So, sir, in the passing of one person there is all of the compass of our history. She was a very grand old person, and I know that the hon. members of the House would want me to extend to the hon. member for Kent West, and the members of his family, and all of her friends, our deepest sympathy.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have before me a note written by yourself, Mr. Speaker, to two hon. members of our party advising them that certain questions that they submitted to you in writing have been refused. It has been suggested by yourself that those particular questions should be written out and submitted to the clerk to be put on the order paper, as questions by members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have just had an opportunity to look at these, and both of them seem to me to be matters of policy which, I understand, are the proper prerogatives of the oral questions, provided that that question is in writing and submitted to yourself. I would ask you for your explanation of refusal in these particular instances.

Mr. Speaker: On Thursday last, February 11, there was some discussion relative to the procedure on questions and statements before the orders of the day. I, therefore, felt it desirable to review the rules and customs of the House applicable.

Firstly, with respect to questions, I should point out, at the outset, that the proper way to ask questions is to give notice thereof to the clerk at the table and have them placed on the order paper as inquiries of the Ministry, as provided in rule 37.

The only questions that may be asked orally before the orders of the day are those where some urgency is evident. In such cases, oral questions are permitted if they are submitted to the Speaker in writing before noon and approved by him. The question must then be asked in the words in which it has been approved by the Speaker, no preamble being admissible.

This is the normal rule as to any question as provided in rule 37. Of course, adequate notice of such questions must also be given to the Minister concerned in order that he may prepare his answer.

Secondly, as to statements made before the orders of the day. By the custom of the House, Ministers of the Crown are not only permitted but, indeed, are expected to report to the House, from time to time, on matters within their purview, which they deem to be of particular interest and concern to the House. A reasonable number of questions in clarification of such statements are customarily permitted.

However, should a private member wish to direct the attention of the House to some matter which he considers to be a definite matter of urgent public importance, he may only do so by complying with rule 38, which provides that a motion before the orders of the day to discuss such a matter may be moved if it "has previously been submitted to, and approved by, the Speaker."

If the Speaker considers that the matter is not definite or not urgent, or not of public importance, or could adequately be discussed on some other early opportunity, such as the Throne or the Budget debate, he will not approve and the motion cannot be moved. If the Speaker does approve the motion, the member moving it, and any other member, may speak to such motion for not more than 10 minutes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what you have just said is debatable, but I think this is a matter of considerable interest to the House and maybe you would permit some discussion.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that, if we are to follow your ruling, what in effect you have said is that, unless a matter is of urgent public importance and comes in within the purview of rule 38, all questions will be required to be submitted in writing to the clerk and put on the order paper under the heading of questions by members.

This will have the effect of completely destroying the opportunity to ask verbal questions in the fashion that we have been accustomed to.

I do not think that you differentiated at all between rule 38—that is, the rule of urgent public importance—and the observation that you have made now that, unless a matter is urgent, you will not permit it to be asked verbally.

I suggest to you that this is a change in the procedure of this House that I, personally, do not like. I think that the opportunity to ask questions on matters of public interest should be given to the hon. members in the widest possible fashion.

Obviously, the hon. members are required to submit these questions in writing.

You are given the opportunity to submit them to the hon. Minister of whom the question is asked, and he has an opportunity to prepare his answer, and if you are going to curtail the opportunity of the procedure of this House in that fashion, I suggest that you are doing something that is detrimental to the legitimate activity of the House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself might discuss this matter with you if there are any changes required in the rules of the House, then they could be considered by the House.

I would say personally I have no objections to questions, provided there is reasonable notice of the question. And then again, and I know the hon. leader of the Opposition will agree with this, there must be control over a question period. Otherwise, we would never conduct any business at all.

My recollection of the British House of Commons is that questions there are printed, and they are then asked by the questioner, and the Speaker permits that question to be answered.

Then, if there is any refinement of the question that some nimble-witted member may ask that is within the ambit of the question, then the Speaker may allow that question or questions to be asked.

Subject to this, the whole control of the matter is in the hands of the Speaker and the Speaker himself determines when, in his opinion, enough questions have been asked. He also determines when the question period shall be over. I think that is very reasonable and very desirable.

I would not question your Honour's ruling on the terms of the rules, in relation to the question that has been propounded here. On the other hand, I think, perhaps we might look at that as I do not want to modernize the rules if they do not need it.

Personally I have no objection to questions provided there are certain safeguards. So I think perhaps the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself might discuss this matter with you after looking at the rule book, if that would be satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot quarrel with the observations of the hon. Prime Minister right now. My understanding is that, in the British House, a special question period is set aside, and I am sure the hon. members would be quite happy about such an arrangement.

But what I am very much concerned about is the refusal to accept the type of question that has been submitted, one of which was a question of the legality of the liquor advertisements.

This particular matter is a matter of, I think, urgency, in any sense. It is a request for an observation about whether or not a particular policy of the government is legal. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in this connection we must have some clarification.

I would be prepared to sit down with the hon. Prime Minister, and I only make this one suggestion publicly. That is my suggestion to him that we might be well advised to follow the procedure in the British House where, I understand, a special specific period is set aside wherein questions in writing will be answered.

Now, any such arrangement is acceptable. But I am very much concerned about the effect of your immediate ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: These, I think, are on the order paper—

Mr. Wintermeyer: That may be, but there is a special time given for answering.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Of course, at Ottawa—

Mr. Speaker: I think the discussion has probably gone far enough.

I would like to point out that I could see difficulties arising with the increasing number of questions, and I could see difficulties arising with the questions coming at a late hour prior to the opening of the House.

Certainly the mechanics are not available for handling this, and I thought that I would review the ruling so that we would understand the proper procedure. But I can assure the members that there will not be too much strict procedure followed and I am quite happy to let it go with the suggestion that the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition made.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, will these questions be allowed tomorrow? Is that your suggestion, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let us look at them, and we will decide.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Prime Minister when we are likely to get any answers to the 39 written questions that are now standing on the order paper? None of these has been answered as yet.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say to my hon. friend, in answer to that question, that perhaps I could reply to it this way: They will be answered in the fullness of time.

However, I would point out to my hon. friend that, in regard to questions on the order paper, there is not really any actual obligation to answer them at all. Personally, over the years, I have endeavoured to answer these questions meticulously, and I can assure the hon. member that, very shortly, the mill of answering these questions will start grinding, if I can put it that way.

I point out that there are many questions that involve the use of departmental officials. Pressure of other work makes it very difficult to answer them. But I assure the hon. member that we will try to answer every question as soon as possible, and certainly before the termination of the session.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): There are some old ones still unanswered.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I think I answered them all.

Mr. Thomas: No, I do not think the hon. Prime Minister did.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I cannot understand that. I worked night and day to answer the hon. members' questions.

(second reading, continued)

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned last week, I had just begun to make my remarks, and was in the process of documenting what I feel is a fairly conclusive case with regard to the failure of the fuel board, in the past, to administer what were believed to be the rules with regard to rate base and the supervision of companies in the field.

As a result, in my opinion, consumers in this province were being overcharged.

Now, I want to come back to this point in a concluding part of my remarks because, having had an opportunity in the past week to consider the bills more fully, and particularly to consider them in light of the observations that were made by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay), there are other even more fundamental aspects of this energy board bill which disturbed me greatly.

The first point that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, with regard to this bill, is that it is desperately difficult for a layman to come to any dogmatic conclusions with regard to the powers that are now being suggested for this board—their adequacy or their inadequacy. To be frank, I suspect there is no hon. member of this House who is really competent, from first-hand experience, to list the observations that should be made here.

I imagine that the hon. Minister himself would confess, apart from his attempt to "swat up" on the details of this whole issue in the last few months, that he, along with the rest of us, is not in any sense an expert in this field.

In other words, we find ourselves in the position of laymen who have to go to the views, the writings, of people who are experts in the field, and try to come to our own conclusions as to whether or not the powers set forth in this Act are going to be adequate to meet the objectives that should be laid out for a new energy board.

My own conclusion, in light of what I hope will be convincing representations to the House, are that the powers of this board are not adequate. In fact, I conclude that they are vague, that they are permissive where they should be mandatory, and that they are seriously inadequate for providing protection for the consumers in the province of Ontario.

The basic point that disturbs me, with regard to the set-up which has been proposed by the hon. Minister, is in the division of responsibility as between the board itself and what is known as the energy returns officer. The board has been set up as a quasi-judicial body, and is to operate at a level somewhat aloof from the industry. The responsibility for digging up the facts, with regard to the capital structure of any one of the companies whose operations are being surveyed, or with regard to their operating expenses, is left, not with the board itself, but with this energy returns officer.

Now, who is this energy returns officer, Mr. Speaker? He is not an official of the board. He is an official in The Department of Energy Resources. It is going to be, for the most part, his responsibility to take the initiative as to what investigations are going to be made, to bring the facts before the board.

Then the board, having been presented with these facts, will render its judicial decision.

Now, why was this done? Why is there this separation of the functions and the responsibilities of the energy returns officer and the board?

Well, the explanation of the hon. Minister was this: That the board should not be an administrator or investigator as well as judge. In other words, it is invidious to have the same people investigate vigorously, and having secured the facts, then render judgment on those facts. Therefore, as the hon. Minister explained to the House, it was his view that they should remove these investigatory responsibilities from the board, so that they could be aloof and could render their judgment, presumably without prejudice.

After listening to the hon. Minister's explanation, I was interested to discover that there is some precedence for this kind of officer. For example, in the United States, in some of the jurisdictions, they have established what are known as consumer counsellors, or public counsellors. It is the responsibility of these officials to dig out the facts and bring them to the board.

But, I think I am correct, Mr. Speaker—and if perchance I am wrong and the hon. Minister with his staff has had an opportunity to survey all of the various jurisdictions in the United States, he perhaps can correct me—but I think I am correct in stating that, in every instance where they have resorted to the establishment of what are known as consumer counsellors, or public counsellors, that this official is an official of the board.

In other words, he is, in effect, in the same position as the counsel for a commission set up under The Public Inquiries Act.

He works very closely with the board; he works under the direction of the board. And there is not this division of responsibilities, this detachment, of having him off under the direction of another of the departments.

I would like to make just one other comment with regard to this effort, of the hon. Minister, to separate the judicial functions from the continuing investigatory functions of the board.

From our experience with this kind of body, or others roughly analogous to it, I am not certain that we seriously prejudice the judicial capacities and the impartiality of a board because we give it the right to do investigations itself.

I would remind the House, for example, when a commission is set up under The Public Inquiries Act, or a Royal commission is set up, that counsel is appointed to work for either of these commissions, and that this counsel, under the immediate direction of the commission, goes and gets the information and presents it to the commission. There is a close liaison. In fact, the counsel for the commission is, in effect, a servant working under the direction of the commission, and this close working relationship does not in any way cast doubts on the impartiality of the judicial decision that must ultimately be made by this board.

Now, I would like to document my case from people who are regarded to be experts and have done some writing in this field. I was rather interested, for example, to find that a gentleman by the name of Wilson, one of the authors of what is considered to be a basic text in this field, entitled Public Utilities Regulation in the United States, had this comment to make:

It is a recognized part of the duty of a commission to pass judgment upon the rates and practices of public utility companies, but for the commission merely to sit as a court throws burdens of prosecution upon the consumers which they are not able to support.

In other words, he points out that this detached approach of the commission, sitting aloof and letting somebody else bring the facts without taking the initiative themselves in getting the facts, places an undue burden upon consumers to go out and protect their own interests.

I say this because, obviously, consumers collectively do not have the means, they do not have the detailed knowledge that the counsel of the public utilities company would have in coming and presenting their case before the board.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Would my hon. friend say from what page he is reading?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, I have this quotation in some notes that have been prepared for me. I am sorry I do not have the actual page number, but I can get it for the hon. Minister.

Now, I come to a second quotation that I think is of considerable interest—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That observation is valid if one does not have an energy returns officer. That is how we have tried to get around it.

Mr. MacDonald: I said to the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, that the energy returns officer is going to fulfil some of the functions of getting it. But I am trying to address my remarks to what seems to me to be a weakness in having the energy returns officer not an officer of the board but detached, as an officer of the department. Quite frankly, I cannot see the validity of this kind of detachment.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, the hon. member has heard the argument. Does he mean he just does not accept it? Is that not what he means?

Mr. MacDonald: I agree, and I am trying to present some arguments to the contrary.

For example, another American expert in this field, by the name of Burton Behling, in a book entitled, Competition and Monopoly in the Public Utilities Industry, has made this observation:

The ascendancy of monopoly has placed increasing stress on the necessity for continuous and vigorous regulation of rights and services. Mandatory state commission regulations have no doubt achieved the above in greater measure than any preceding regulatory experiment. Nevertheless, the results have not been completely satisfactory.

The fundamental merit of providing continuous regulation has been offset by inclination of the commissions to neglect their duties as fact-finding bodies and champions of the consumers and to degenerate into boards of arbitration.

In other words, here again is the basic criticism that the board is standing aloof, listening to the presentations of both sides and presumably accepting those presentations as complete, without taking any initiative on their own, and then acting as a referee between the two representations that have been made. This may result in a situation in which the very competent and highly trained counsel for a company presents its case, which in a particular instance may be much better prepared than that presented in opposition to it, and the net result is that the board is going to come to a decision without having secured all of the facts.

As a matter of fact, in this same connection, it is interesting to note that the natural gas inquiry commission in the province of Manitoba, on page 72 of its report, makes this observation:

The Manitoba municipal and public utilities board, in its operation with respect to utilities, tends to take up more of a position of referee in the matter of disputes between public utilities and the public which they must serve—

Again, there is this basic fear that the board is not being vigorous and continuous enough in its digging into the facts so that all of the information will be before it.

I acknowledge the point that the hon. Minister made a moment ago, that the energy returns officer in The Department of Energy Resources is going to be involved in all cases that come before the board. But is he going to be a servant of the board to the point that they can, in effect, say to him: "We are not satisfied with the case that you have presented here. We want you to go and dig up more information"?

Is he going to be a servant of the board? If he is not going to be a servant of the board, then I suggest that the board is not competent to do the kind of job that is necessary in protecting the welfare of the consumers in the province. If he is going to be a servant of the board, why have him over in The Department of Energy Resources? Why this division of responsibility?

This is a basic point that I raise before getting down to considering some of the principles of the Act itself.

In doing that, Mr. Speaker, again I am going to take refuge in the observations of an acknowledged expert in the subject, because I lay no claim to detailed information or competence in this field. But there is an American by the name of John Bauer, PhD, LL.D, formerly a lecturer in public utilities regulation at Cornell University, at Princeton University and at Columbia University.

Dr. Bauer is director of the American public utilities bureau. In other words, he has become the key person in what is the co-ordinating body in this field for study and improvement of regulations all across the United States.

Back in the year 1950, Dr. Bauer was author of a book called Transforming Public Utilities Regulations, published by Harper Brothers. In chapter 17 of this book, he presents what I think should be a very useful guide. I do not know whether the hon. Minister happens to have seen this. If he has seen it—fine. If he has not seen it, I would be glad to lend him my copy. For the moment, all I have is photostated copies of that particular chapter.

But what Dr. Bauer presents in this chapter is a model utility regulatory bill. In other words, out of all of his experience, drawing upon the whole experience of the American jurisdiction, the 48—or now the 50—states, this is what he presents as a model bill.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that, as a layman, the best that we can do is to take a look at this model bill, born of this wide experience on the North American continent, and compare it with the Act we have before us, then come to our own conclusions as to whether or not the Act is satisfactory.

The first two sections, or clauses, of this model bill have to do with objectives and definitions. We do not need to go into that. The third one, however, gets down to a basic point. It deals with “reasonable rates.”

Now, let me read a couple of sections in this model bill that he proposes. I am quoting from page 331:

The utility commission shall proceed as rapidly as possible to establish, for every utility under its jurisdiction, a definite financial structure for rate making and to fix rates so as to cover the total cost of service, including:

- (1) all reasonable operating expenses incurred under efficient and economical management;
- (2) current depreciation due to physical and functional causes—

If I may interrupt myself for a moment, in this reference to “functional causes” they get at these assets that have ceased to have any function and make any contribution, like the old manufactured gas plants that have been discarded. I continue with the quote:

(3) taxes paid to federal, state and local governments; and,

(4) the protected returns to which the investors are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, if hon. members will read this later—because I recognize the difficulty in grasping it at one reading—it seems to me that here is set out, clearly and unequivocally, the kind of approach by which we are going to get reasonable rates. There is no guessing about it. It is not vague. It is specific in every detail.

But when I turn to the Act that we have before us here, by comparison there is nothing, virtually nothing, set out.

True there is something in the powers and regulations given to the energy returns officer in The Department of Energy Resources. But there is nothing spelled out in the bill with regard to the energy board—certainly nothing in comparison with the explicitness of this clause of Dr. Bauer's.

Then Dr. Bauer has a (b) section under “reasonable rates”:

The consumers as a whole shall pay the total cost of the service (and no more) through the rates fixed for service, and the utility shall be entitled to total operating revenues, equal to the total cost of the service (and no more):

The relative rights and obligations of the investors and consumers as a whole shall be precisely established and maintained and duly protected through appropriate accounting methods and administrative procedures.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the thing that is so obvious here is that it is explicit what the board is to do. We have had, in the instance of the fuel board—and whether or not the energy board is going to act in the same way in the future, we can only guess—a reluctance for years to hold a public hearing on rates. Certain newspapers editorially have been asking the question: “Why, why, why, for 3 or 4 years, does a company like Consumers' Gas get away without having a hearing as to whether their rates are justified?”

Now, if our Act laid procedures down, as does this model bill, there would be no possibility for our board drifting along without holding rate hearings. If the hon. Minister thinks that we are unduly suspicious, I remind him that, on the basis of past experience, this is the kind of thing that has happened. Is it going to continue to happen?

I submit that if it were to be laid down in the energy bill, instead of the vagueness that characterizes the bill, there would be no doubt as to what this energy board should do. They would have to act, and act very quickly.

Before I leave this, I would like to note that, not only with reference to this particular section, but with the whole Act, the word "may" predominates. By contrast, in this model bill, the word "shall" is the rule. Almost always, throughout, the powers and the instructions are mandatory.

If hon. members will examine the bill which has been presented to the House by the hon. Minister, they will see that, in almost every instance, it is "may"—may do this, instead of shall do this.

Now, I am a little curious to know, if this is what the hon. Minister feels should be done—vague as his proposals are, with regard to the powers—why the additional vagueness of permissive powers?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, with great respect to the hon. member who is now speaking, is not the question of whether phraseology shall be "may", or shall be "shall", is that not special phraseology that should be referred to in the committee of the whole House? Are not a number of my hon. friend's observations really directed toward specific phraseology and not principles of the bill? Should we not be debating principles? I point this out because, with great respect, I would say firstly, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to get in to the fineness of language on every second reading, first of all it precludes the sense of doing it in the committee of the whole House; and secondly, I do not know how we will get through the procedure to get these in the committee of the whole House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not interrupt the hon. Minister when he took about an hour and half to present his introduction of this bill. I do not propose, at the moment, to go into the details. I have never yet referred to a single section. If he thinks I have gone into the details, he will find out, when we get into committee, that we will really examine the details of this.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: With reference to "may" or "shall", is not that a detail?

Mr. MacDonald: Let the hon. Minister please not hang his hat on this one reference. I was just citing this as an indication of the vagueness throughout the bill. I was asking the general question why, if these are the powers that the hon. Minister wants to give, does he qualify once again by saying that it "may" be, instead of it "shall" be? This is a characteristic of the whole bill.

However, let me go on.

The third section of this model bill deals with reasonable rates, which I just covered. The fourth section refers to the rate base. Just let me read a paragraph or two here:

For the purpose of ascertaining and protecting the returns to which the investors are entitled, the commission shall establish and maintain the prudent investment rate base, and shall be in a position to determine promptly at any time, from any utility, the amount of investment on which returns are currently predicated.

Now, the interesting thing there is that, apart from the fact that it is explicit as to what shall be done once again, we now get into an issue which is unresolved in this bill before us.

Last year, when I raised this question of the base upon which the companies were having their rates fixed, we had considerable discussion as to whether it should be a "fair assessment," or this American terminology, "prudent investment," which I think is roughly the same thing; whether we should move into the Borden commission formula; or whether we should move into the field of trended costs.

When I raised this matter in the House last spring, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) entered the debate and he was very explicit on one point. When we were talking about trended costs, and the growing practice in some of these companies to inflate their capital base, the hon. Prime Minister left no doubt at all that this was the kind of thing that the government was not going to tolerate. This is what he said:

Now let me say to him—referring to myself, —that we do not accept trended costs as the answer. We are not going to accept a revaluation made by the companies holus-bolus on the basis of some formula devised by the companies.

Well, having said that, Mr. Speaker, what I am puzzled about is why the hon. Minister is not coming into the House with some clear picture as to calling a halt to this procedure? We have had no indication, for example, that the hon. Minister has heeded the hon. Prime Minister's warning of a year ago—that anything has been done, or is going to be done, about this kind of thing.

Union Gas Company buys Dominion Gas Company. They buy it for $15 million, and they immediately write it into their books as $25 million. Now, are the rates of Union Gas going to be based on this trended cost, or inflated cost, that they have written into their books?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would like to say to my hon. friend, if I may, just for his own information, that he made a statement to the House last year, I think it was that assets of Dominion Gas were purchased at about $15 million and written up to $25 million.

Is that a statement my hon. friend is making again? I ask because the rate base does not include $25 million. The rate base includes the original cost they paid for them, and that is what their rate is based on. It is not based on any other figure.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I am interested—at this late date, some 12 or 15 months later—to have this explanation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, my hon. friend cannot surely complain that I did not give it last year, when I had no responsibility for it. An additional fact that I would draw to my hon. friend's attention is that they paid $15 million for the assets, and added another $10 million to bring it up to $25 million, an out-of-pocket expense. Now that certainly should be included at $25 million. My hon. friend is assuming that they took it at $15 million, wrote it up to $25 million, but that is not what happened, in fact. I am advised thus by Ormsby and Ormsby, who are the accountants for the fuel board.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, let us take another case. Consumers' Gas Company gets an American firm, Price Waterhouse and Company, to examine the whole capital structure of the company, which is a very old company and, as a result of the report of Price Waterhouse and Company, they write up their capital investment by some $39 million.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Even that is wrong. It was Stone and Webster. It was not Price Waterhouse and Company.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, let us deal with the relevant point. The hon. Minister is right as to the company, and I am glad to be corrected. But did they write up their capital investment by $39 million? That is the point.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The rate base is not based on it. However, they have tried to arrive at a replacement cost because it happens that some of their assets, as I understand it—and that is one of the reasons why we have this rate study group, or this energy study group, in The Department of Energy Resources, if this House approves of it, is to go into these kind of matters—but apparently Consumers' Gas, if what I understand is correct, have a number of assets, the historical cost of which they are no longer able to trace. Some of these have therefore had to be valued from their point of view.

That is one of the things that a rate hearing will bring out. It will not be accepted incidentally. A trend in costs will not be acceptable to the government's policy in relation to rate base—a trend in costs or replacement costs.

Mr. MacDonald: We are making some progress. In this very important aspect of regulation, after a great deal of discussion last year, we got only a general protest from the hon. Prime Minister, plus the observation that the government was going to look into it. Certainly, in presenting this bill the other day, this was not made explicit.

But there is another aspect of it that interests me, Mr. Speaker. When we were debating this last year, the then hon. Minister on whom responsibility of the fuel board fell—now, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner)—made this comment:

I think it would be very wise for us to wait on the findings of the Borden commission before we definitely set down what our policy will be with respect to rate fixing procedures, and we ourselves are conducting studies. As I said in my few remarks a moment ago, we have engaged a firm of well-known chartered accountants who are doing some work for us on this subject.

And later, when I got into a pretty serious give-and-take, with the hon. Prime Minister, as to whether or not trended costs or the Borden formula were going to be discussed, the hon. Prime Minister made this observation on page 1497 of Hansard:

It would take some auditors to look at that, and that is what we are arranging right now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what puzzles me is that if a year ago the department, under which the fuel board then came, had hired a firm of auditors to take a look at the Borden commission formula, and make up its mind as to whether or not we were going to continue to operate on a "fair assessment" base, or as the hon. Minister now comes to the House and says perhaps fair assessment combined with the Borden commission formula, why, one full year later, with a firm of chartered accountants presumably on the job, do we have a bill in which this issue is not clarified?

This is just another indication of how we are still moving along without laying down the ground rules by which we are going to operate in this whole field.

The hon. Minister states that it is going to be fair assessment but, after a full year with a certain chartered accountant company studying the problem, he is not in a position to state specifically what compromise he is going to make between the fair assessment and the Borden commission formula.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh yes, I said—if I may be permitted—I said specifically to the hon. member, when this was up for second reading the first time, the policy of the government and the board in relation to the rate to be fixed is historical cost less depreciation, and has been since 1919. It will continue to be so until such time as we see—from an energy study, examination of these things, and from actual rate hearings, and an assessment as to how the Borden formula would have worked out—whether it might not be fairer to obtain the 3 objectives: a fair rate of return to the company, a sufficient rate of return to attract new capital for expansion, and sufficient to guarantee a fair rate to the consumer.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is all very fine, but having hired a firm of chartered accountants to try to come to a decision on this a full year ago—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There is no evidence yet on which they can come to any conclusion. We cannot do it until there are rate bases, or until the legislation is passed and rate hearings are held. I tried to explain to the hon. member why we needed these two Acts before we launch into full-scale hearings, and I think the hon. member thinks that is a fair explanation.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a fair explanation except that—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): He did not mean—

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has said we are going to continue on the same basis upon which we have been operating, namely, historical costs less depreciation.

In other words, he has a great backlog of experience upon which to come to a conclusion. He does not have to wait for the energy board to accumulate a backlog of experience. He has it. The energy board is going to be the successor, so to speak, to the fuel board.

It seems to me that this is once again a straight case of procrastination. Why do we have to wait to get some experience from the energy board? Are we suddenly going to cut ourselves off from all past experience, and forget all about the experience of the fuel board?

As a matter of fact, on second thought, that might be wise, because I think the fuel board has not implemented some of the basic principles that allegedly we have been operating on, namely historical costs and the 7 per cent. profit maximum.

However, I hope I have made my point here, and I shall leave it.

But there are one or two other observations in connection with rate base, which are spelled out in this model bill, that I would like to quote. In doing so, I draw to the attention of the House, once again, how clearly it is spelled out—so that the companies know what is involved, the consumer knows what is involved, the energy board knows what is involved—everybody in the picture knows exactly what the rules are that they must live up to.

The second point, with regard to rate base, is this, and I quote:

To establish the prudent investment rate base, the commission shall ascertain for each utility the original cost of construction or installation of all the physical properties used in the public service.

So far as possible, the costs shall be derived from the accounts and records of the utility; otherwise they shall be estimated in reasonable amounts, consistent with conditions at the time of construction or installation.

When they have been determined for the various classes of property, the commission shall order them to be entered in the plant and equipment accounts of the utility, to replace, for subsequent rate-making and all regulatory purposes, the amounts theretofore reported in the accounts.

Thereafter, the utility shall charge, or add to the account, the actual or reasonable cost of all new property installations to be used in the public service, and shall credit or deduct the original cost of the property unit retired from service, so that the account shall show, at any time, the original cost of the physical property then used in the service.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: But that is a prudent investment method of arriving at a rate base, that is not historical cost less depreciation.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister, just a moment ago, cited the case of a company that has lost its historical costs, they do not know where they are, they cannot be ascertained.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Not altogether, but some assets, as I am advised.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. Let the hon. Minister please not interrupt me. If we have lost the original historical costs and cannot ascertain them in full, what is the only alternative? The only alternative is to come to some decision with regard to what is known as prudent investment, a fair assessment of the value.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is not what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: So let us not say that the two of them are sort of contradictory, or that the two of them are mutually exclusive. It seems to me, in some instances, we have to combine the concept of prudent investment along with the actual historical costs.

However, here is part (c) of this clause:

Along with the original cost determination for every utility, the commission shall ascertain also the amount of depreciation that has been incurred by the various classes of property due to the physical wear or deterioration and to obsolescence, inadequacy or other functional factors that have impaired.

In other words, without reading the next 8 or 10 lines, Mr. Speaker, this model bill spells out specifically what the commission, or what our board, would have to do on this question of depreciation.

Here is another point from the model bill, in connection with rate base:

Besides the determination of original costs and accrued depreciation, the commission shall determine also, for each utility, the amount of working capital used in the public service. The amount shall consist of the cash, the bank balances, the materials and supplies and such other current assets used in furnishing public service, less all current liabilities and operating reserves.

Let me cut the quotation there—for the point is clear that, in this model bill, in light of American experience, they suggest it should be a function of the board to examine not only the historical cost or the prudent investment cost; not only to spell out the depreciation, specifically how it should be calculated; but, finally, that the board should examine very carefully the working capital of this company; and that this working capital shall become part of the rate base.

Now, I am not familiar with the detailed operations of the fuel board. But I would be very, very surprised if our fuel board in the past has operated with that degree of investigation and scrutiny of the operations of, say, Consumers' and Union Gas Company. And I am curious to know whether the energy board is going to continue this superficial approach, or whether it is going to be vigorous and continuous in its investigation in the fashion that is suggested here.

Now, the next section in this model bill, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the rate of return. It says, in connection with the initial findings, as to the rate base and the adjustment of rates:

The commission shall determine for each utility the proper rate of return that shall be applied to the rate base, in deriving the total protected return to the investor as a whole or in title.

And the second point—

In fixing such rates of return for each utility, the commission shall adopt such an overall percentage as upon due inquiry and experienced judgment will be required by investors to furnish a capital sum equal to the rate base under conditions of an established and stable volume of business and a duly protected return to the investor.

In other words, once again, they operate here with the flexibility that the hon. Minister was calling for the other day when he claimed that perhaps 7 per cent. would not be adequate; they suggest in this that one might have a different rate base granted to one company than to another.

But it is specifically laid down as to how they are to ascertain this rate base, and what rules they must follow in coming to a conclusion regarding a fair rate return.

Another clause in the model bill—and, on this, I see no suggestion that, in our bill, we are going to attempt this kind of job. It has to do with the adjustment of capitalization and accounts, I am quoting:

When the initial finding as to the rate base and rate of return have been made, and the protected returns have been embodied in systematic rate control, the commission shall order such adjustments in the accounts and records of each utility as to segregate completely the utility from other interests of the concern, and to show correctly the facts relating to the utility investment, capitalization, rates of return, and to all property balance sheets of income items.

And a second point:

The commission shall require each utility to divest itself of all interests other than the regular public service, and to recapitalize or reissue its securities outstanding and in conformity of the rate base, and the returns as found, so that the returns could be protected, may be derived directly from the accounts and records relating to the securities outstanding.

And another interesting observation:

The commission shall not permit inclusion in the utility balance sheet accounts of any purported investment item which does not constitute a recognized part of the rate base, or does not have a direct relation to the rate base in the form of securities, reserves or otherwise.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, once again, here is an indication of how, in this model bill, it is suggested that the regulatory body—in other words, our board—should meticulously examine the capital structure of the company to see whether or not they are involving, in this capital structure, assets of subsidiaries that do not legitimately bear a relation to the public utility, and if so, that they should be definitely segregated.

Is this going to be done—I am curious to know—with regard to our energy board? Is this going to be a vigorous, continuous kind of investigation and regulation of the internal financing of the company?

Then, there is another clause in this model bill: Control over operating expenses. This, Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, is not something that has never been looked into with any degree of thoroughness by the fuel board, and I see no suggestion in the bill that the energy board is going to operate any differently, namely, control over operating expenses. This is what the model bill indicates:

Inasmuch as every utility has the inherent duty to furnish proper service as economically as possible, under proper organization and efficient management, the commission shall currently examine and scrutinize the operating expenses so as to preclude unreasonable costs to be paid by the consumer through rates fixed for service. While the management will have the right to agree on wages, salary and other expenses, the commission shall, nevertheless, exclude from the cost of services, payments that are not justified for efficient and economical operation.

Now, what are some of those? They are spelled out—there is no vagueness about it:

The commission shall keep under particular scrutiny the overhead type of expenses commonly included under commercial business promotion and general administrative accounts, and shall exclude from the recognized costs of service all such expenses that are not in fact warranted for efficient and economical operation.

Such exclusion applies especially to advertising, to public relations, and to like activities which often not only do not contribute to the economy of the operation, but are, in fact, directed against the public interest.

Now, the hon. Minister may recall a little episode, two or three weeks ago, when some of the members of the national energy board drew attention publicly—with obvious surprise—to the fact that one of the companies before the board had spent well over $1 million for their presentation to the board.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Before the Alberta conservation board.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, the hon. Minister is right. It was before the Alberta conservation board.

As a matter of fact, one of the members of the national energy board, Mr. Douglas Fraser, even drew attention to the fact that they had claimed this as a deduction on taxes for a previous year, even before they had made their representation to the board.

In other words, it just underlines what is spelled out here—namely, that if we were going to have a guaranteed assurance that the consumers' welfare is protected in a company that is admittedly being brought under regulation, then the operating expenses of the company have to be examined very, very thoroughly.

I am certain that this has not been the case with the gas distribution companies in the province of Ontario, up to now, under the fuel board, and I raise the question: In light of this extensive American experience that it is considered necessary, are we going to have it in the energy board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. MacDonald: No, the hon. Minister will have an opportunity to answer these questions later.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, would the hon. member tell us in what jurisdiction this model code has been adopted?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I explained that this model code is written by a man who is today director of the American public utilities bureau and it draws from his experience and knowledge, from all of the jurisdictions, and so, therefore, it is not in any one. It is a model bill.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It is so model that nobody has adopted it.

Mr. MacDonald: All right. Why does the hon. Minister of Resources not make a precedent?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying to the hon. Minister is that, when I examine his bill in light of what is regarded as a necessity in this model bill, I can come to no other conclusion but that this bill should be thrown out completely. The hon. Minister should start from the very beginning, and write it over again. I say this because if what is in this model bill is required to protect the interests of the Ontario consumer, then the hon. Minister's bill is seriously inadequate—to indulge in an understatement.

However, one other thing that is not even mentioned in the bill at all—and this is something that I, quite frankly, had not been aware of, and it strikes me as being an exceedingly important factor that should be included in our bill—is described under the heading of rate equalization reserve. Just let me quote:

To add assurance to the protection of the returns to which the investors are entitled, and to prevent frequent and undesirable changes in rates paid by consumers, also for adjustment of returns in regard to general business fluctuation, the commission shall require each utility to create a rate equalization reserve.

The rates, as fixed after the initial findings as to rate base and rate of return, shall be adequate, not only to cover the total cost of the service, but also to build up a proper rate equalization reserve.

The annual revenues above the total cost of the services shall be credited to the reserve, and when the proper total balance has been reached, it is found adequate and reasonable, the rates shall be reduced as may be justified in accordance with the judgment of the commission.

Thereafter, any excess revenue, above the total cost of the service, shall be added to the reserve, and any deficiency shall be deducted therefrom, and rates in general shall be reduced or increased only when the balance of the reserve shall reach a maximum or a minimum amount as prescribed by the commission for the purpose of safeguarding the returns to which the investors are entitled.

In other words, this is something like a balance wheel set in the rate structure to cope with business fluctuations, to avoid the necessity of frequent changes in rate basis—a reserve to which one can add, in years when there is a surplus, and into which one can dip to meet deficits in the years in which one happens to have deficits.

I commend this to the consideration of the House and the hon. Minister, because there is nothing in his bill to suggest that this worthy feature has even been considered.

Now, another clause has to do with control of the public interest:

Subject to safeguarding the returns to which the investors are entitled, the commission shall constitute a responsible planning agency of the state for the purpose of obtaining, for all communities and localities in the state, proper utility service at minimum cost under efficient and economical management.

Is there going to be anything like this in the energy board in Ontario?

The commission's duties will include surveys to determine needed and desirable plant improvements and extensions, interconnections and co-ordination between utility systems, reorganizations and consolidations, methods and facilities of operation, and any change that will produce better service or reduced costs.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, let me ask this question:

If one does not have this kind of planning function, specifically fixing the board with the responsibility of assuring that the public welfare is being met fully, what is there to stop a company that has a monopoly franchise in a certain area from putting its distribution lines into the areas where they can cream off a profit, and ignore putting in distribution lines in areas where it will not be profitable?

What assurance is there that we shall have this kind of planned distribution—that in the distribution of gas we will achieve what we have achieved through the distribution of hydro—the provision of power to everybody in the province of Ontario?

This is what we had done in Hydro, partly because it was a public utility that could plow back its surpluses—in fact, we have even supplemented the surpluses from the provincial treasury to make certain that we got out into the rural areas. There is no guarantee in this energy board bill that public welfare is going to be met.

Now, I am not going into any more detail than that, Mr. Speaker, because I hope I have made the point clear that, if this model bill is what is required to meet the needs of the consumers, to protect the interests of the investor—in short to do a well-rounded job on behalf of a regulated utility—then I submit to the hon. Minister that the bill he has presented to the House is hopelessly inadequate to do this job.

Not only does it fail to tackle some of the essentials as laid out in this model bill, but even when it does spell out some of the powers, it does it in this vague and permissive fashion instead of in the mandatory fashion.

Now, finally, I want to return to the point that I was dealing with when we adjourned the debate last week, and that is my contention that, as a result of the half-regulation, or failure to regulate, that we have experienced under the fuel board, and which I am fearful is going to continue under the energy board, the net result in the province of Ontario is that the consumer has been paying more for gas than he needs to.

I had covered—and I will just review it, for I do not propose to go into the detail again—the instance with regard to Consumers' Gas. Consumers' Gas now are seeking the right to export gas, through one of their own subsidiaries, to another subsidiary in the United States. They are proposing to sell that gas in the United States at less than they are charging the consumers in the province of Ontario.

The hon. Minister disputed my figures, although my figures had been taken from his own brief, and he argues now that the margin between what is going to be charged in the United States and in Canada is not 40 per cent., he says it is only 12 per cent. Well, for the moment, the point I am making is that Canadian gas, handled by the subsidiary of a Canadian company—handled in the United States by that company—is going to be sold for less than it is going to be sold to the consumer in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: But why does the hon. member not mention why? I told the hon. member why the other day. I gave him the 4 reasons.

Mr. MacDonald: The only reason that might conceivably have some validity is that the hon. Minister said that there was a different balance in consumer and industrial selling of the gas in the area over there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I told the hon. member that the average consumption in Ontario for Consumers' Gas was 80,000 cubic feet a year; and in this area, for the residential consumer, it will be 170,000 cubic feet.

Mr. MacDonald: And that is what?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is double the amount of consumption, and the hon. member can understand, therefore, there may very well be justified difference in price, but that is one of the things that the energy control board or energy board in Ontario is going to have to go into.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I should think that they should go into it because—for I will concede this to the hon. Minister—these problems are so complex that, quite frankly, it would not take a very good lawyer, and the hon. Minister is a very good one, to be able to come up with some rationalization that would appear to explain the situation.

But the point I am making is this, Mr. Speaker, that we may give all the reasons we want, but we cannot argue away what is not only true in this case, but in other cases that came before the Borden commission when it was investigating all across the country. This, namely, is the tendency for Canadian gas to be sold by these companies, dominated to a considerable extent by American capital, over the line cheaper than it is available to our own people.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are opposed to that and I said so—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if we are opposed to it, I trust that we are going to be a little tougher in our investigations to make certain that it does not happen.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Now let us be sensible. How can we do anything about the price that the national energy board permits gas to be sold, on a retail basis, to the United States? Now what can we do about that?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister can do something about what they are charging consumers in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: And I intend to do so.

Mr. MacDonald: If they can bring the price down 12 per cent.—let me, for the moment, accept the hon. Minister's figure—12 per cent. lower in the United States, I suggest that we could reduce it in the province of Ontario, if we had a hearing with regard to consumer rates—really come to grips with the problem. Instead, we have drifted for years—with the government not laying down the rules, except in very vague terms and with the fuel board not even having rate hearings—so that for year after year we have had no public investigation of what is a monopoly franchise.

Now, in the instance of Union Gas, Mr. Speaker, I recalled the occasion back in 1948, where, for a variety of reasons, Union Gas Company had been granted approximately 25 cents per 1,000 cubic feet increase in their rates—from about 80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to something over $1 per 1,000 cubic feet. They got it partly because of an emergency situation in Windsor, partly because they had not yet started to use extensively the storage basins, partly because they had not obtained this American gas at off-peak prices, and partly because they were faced with the heavy expense of manufactured gas through auxiliary plants integrated with their system. All this was the situation in 1948.

By 1952, Mr. Speaker, all these conditions had changed. By 1952, Union Gas cut off their auxiliary plants so that they got rid of this extra heavy cost of manufactured gas. By 1952, they had developed the storage basins, they had developed the use of gas produced in the province of Ontario, they had extensive contracts with Americans which enabled them to buy gas at off-peak prices and store it.

In other words, they had eliminated all of these factors that had, to a great extent, justified their rate increase in 1948.

Yet, from 1952 until the present year, they have continued on with no further examination of what I believe to be their excessive charges.

I give to the House another example. I have, in my hand here, the industrial rates that are charged in the city of Sarnia, and in Port Huron in the United States, just across the river. In Sarnia, for example, for 100,000 cubic feet of gas the price charged is $99.64. The price in Port Huron is $75.25.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member call that an industrial rate? Why, people cook with more than that—that is some industry indeed.

Mr. MacDonald: This is not the quantity, this is their rate schedule.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member means a day. Is he talking about a day, or an hour, or a year?

Mr. MacDonald: I am talking about the cost for 100,000 cubic feet.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, but the contract—

Mr. MacDonald: For 500,000 cubic feet, the figure is $479.64 in Sarnia; it is $355.25 in Port Huron. When we get up into the larger amounts for industrial gas, for 14 million cubic feet, it is $11,292.64 in Sarnia and $7,380.25 in Port Huron—in other words, about two-thirds of the price.

Beyond the 14 million cubic feet, the figure is 70 cents per 1,000 cubic feet in Sarnia; it is 50 cents per 1,000 cubic feet in Port Huron.

Therefore, this documents the general case that I am attempting to make here, for, in this instance, we have pretty specific proof of a difference ranging from one-quarter to one-third lower prices on the American side, at Port Huron, as compared with the prices charged—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The difference may very well be the same as in this consumer problem. The hon. member is quoting the unit price, but he is not talking about the load factor, and he simply cannot compare unequals, and that is what he is doing.

Mr. MacDonald: I am talking about a schedule. It is comparable to both.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, my hon. friend, not unless one shows what the average load factor is, there is no point in comparing. But why cite a case where a fellow, say, buys 10 apples, how much they are per apple? One fellow may buy 100,000 apples, and he will get a better price per apple than the fellow who buys only 50.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, these are figures which have been calculated by the Lambton gas storage association, made up of people who are thoroughly familiar with the field, who got their figures on the American side as well as on the Canadian side. These people are not novices in the handling of gas.

And I have every reason to believe that these are comparative figures.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Then let the hon. member tell me what he is citing from, so I can make a check.

Mr. MacDonald: I am citing from this document that was given to me. I think that the hon. Minister will find—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Would the hon. member be kind enough to let me have a copy of it?

Mr. MacDonald: Surely. Now, there is a final point I would like to make, to try to document my general observations. I am having difficulty convincing the hon. Minister on this, but maybe this will help to convince him.

We have been told that gas prices must be competitive with other fuel. In fact, I remember when the first statement of policy was made, back in 1954, by the then Minister in charge (hon. Dana Porter). It was even suggested that it would be unfair for gas to be sold in the province of Ontario at a price that would be unduly competitive with existing fuels.

I was interested in reading the submission of the Consumers' Gas Company to the Royal commission on energy, that they even say that the whole position is so relative in its competition that it would be unfair to gas if there was an arbitrary and a sharp drop in the price of other fuels.

Well, against the background of that, let me present to the House this anomaly.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Would my hon. friend tell me what page of Hansard he is referring to? I understood my hon. friend to say that he was quoting or—

Mr. MacDonald: That was away back in the year 1954, and I will have to go back and look it up. I will do so for the hon. Minister if he has forgotten that little nugget in there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, I think I have it and I think our interpretations differ.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is conceivable. When the hon. Minister spoke the other day, we found that people on two sides of the issue can come up with fantastically different interpretations on quite a succession of occasions.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Quite correct.

Mr. MacDonald: But during the last election I happened to be watching the hon. Minister of Energy Resources on a television programme during which he was explaining to the people of the province of Ontario the bounties of this government. One of the points he made, which I thought was extremely interesting, was this:

In Ontario, the per capita consumption of electricity is twice the per capita consumption of hydro energy in the United States. This is a very interesting figure. He went on to state that one of the reasons for this is that the price of hydro energy in the United States is close to twice what it is in Ontario.

I was a little puzzled as to why he did not draw the obvious conclusion from this—that we have a high per capita consumption of electricity in Ontario because it is publicly owned and is, therefore, available at cost. But, being something of a doctrinaire free enterpriser—when it relates to gas distribution—he did not draw this conclusion.

However, the thing that puzzles me is this, Mr. Speaker, if gas is competitive in Canada, is it not competitive in the United States? And if it is competitive in the United States, how do we explain the fact that gas prices generally are lower in the United States, in spite of the fact that their hydro-electric costs are close to double what we have in Ontario?

I ask the hon. Minister to reflect on this. I suggest that it is convincing proof of the fact that, in the province of Ontario, gas could be supplied to the people at much lower prices.

But what this government has done, and what clearly it has no intention of departing from, is to fritter away the natural advantage of this prime new kind of fuel, which should be cheaper than any other fuel. It is frittering that advantage away so that it will not be unduly competitive with other fuels in the field. It is frittering it away, partly by handling it as a private utility rather than a public utility.

The hon. Minister can talk as long as he wants, but, on the basis of his own analogy on that telecast at election time, he has to explain away that, when gas and electricity are competitive, gas in the United States is selling at less than Ontario's, while their hydro prices are almost twice ours.

This brings me back to my general observations with regard to the energy board. The energy board has all the appearance, Mr. Speaker, of operating on much the same pattern as the fuel board. And I submit to hon. members that the fuel board, partly because this government has not laid down the ground rules, partly because it has not been vigorous and continuous enough in its investigation, has not really been regulating these companies at all.

As a result of it, the fuel board has become not really the guardian of the public interest of this province. It has become—inadvertently, at least—a servant of these companies. And this Act has to be seriously changed if the energy board, that the hon. Minister proposes now to establish, is really going to become a guardian of the interest of our consumers.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with this question, frankly, I think there is a lot of opportunity for strict analysis of this particular bill. I expressed the observation the other day that, personally, I think it is too vague. I think some substantial defining must be subjected into the bill.

But I am concerned whether or not we can accomplish it here, and I am inclined to think a committee where we had experts would be better.

Now, personally, I must say this: I like the idea of discussing rates. But very frankly, except possibly for the hon. Minister who has had the opportunity to talk to experts, I doubt whether there are very many hon. members who are in any intelligible position to take a definite stand with respect to rates.

One of the things I do hope of the committee is that the opportunity will be provided to talk to experts who know something about this. I for one—and I would hope everybody in this House—will expect that this bill is going to define the rate structure in some specific fashion, and I would—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

One of the rules of this House is that an hon. member, on second reading, may not speak more than once, and I have indicated to the House, Mr. Speaker, that I would send this bill to the committee on energy and—

Mr. Wintermeyer: The hon. Minister told me the other day that he would allow me to speak the second time, and he did not even have the bill printed. He did not have Bill No.—what is it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are not on to the other bill, yet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I thought the hon. Minister was discussing both bills together, and certainly both bills were discussed by the hon. member for York South.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are discussing Bill No. 38.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, we have to discuss both together. Now, if the hon. Minister wants to do it that way, then fine. But there is little use in taking up the time of this House by talking about various things—frankly mine was intended to be a constructive suggestion. I am very much interested in what the hon. member for York South has said. I think he makes a lot of good points. But I just wonder whether they cannot be made more effectively with experts before us.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is right, my hon. friend, and I indicated the other day that is what I am hopeful of doing.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I believe there may be merit in what the hon. leader of the Opposition says, that the place to deal with some of these points with regard to rate structures is not here. But, I would call to the attention of this House that, in this bill as it now stands, there is no place where they can ever be dealt with. That is the main reason why I feel impelled to rise in this debate on the second reading of the bill.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to refer to some comments of the Gordon committee regarding the Ontario fuel board, as it is now known, and the Ontario energy board, as it will become known, if this bill passes. As the hon. Minister himself pointed out, the Gordon committee recommended that there should be a division between the judicial functions, on the one hand, which should be assigned to the energy board, and the administrative and regulatory functions, which should go to the department.

As far as I can see, without having gone into every conceivable detail relating to the two bills that are now before us, that particular recommendation is carried out to some considerable degree. I will put it stronger than that, I think it is pretty well carried out.

Actually, however, I cannot see, as far as The Ontario Energy Board Act is concerned, that—apart from the fact that there has been this division of function—there is any real difference from the old Act.

I would point out to the House that the Gordon committee had another important recommendation to make with regard to this board. The hon. Minister read the recommendation out to the House when he was submitting the bill but, as far as I can see, he really has not paid any attention to it.

It appears on page 75 in the last sentence of a paragraph which the hon. Minister read in full to the House.

The first two or three sentences of that paragraph deal with the matter of division of function between the board and the department, and then the Gordon committee goes on to say:

We further recommend, with particular reference to the determination of retail rates for natural gas, that the basic standards of policy to be applied by the board be established either by statute or by order-in-council.

That is one of two recommendations on the fuel or energy board made by the committee.

It may be suggested that, since this was just tucked in at the end of a paragraph, perhaps the Gordon committee did not attach too much importance to it.

But I think, Mr. Speaker, if we read this in the context of the report as a whole, we will see that the committee actually attached very great importance to it. I would like to make a couple of references to the report, out of many that could be made.

First of all, on page 17 of the report, I would like to read this sentence. At this point, the committee is talking in general terms about the problems inherent in the delegation of power, and it says:

Parliament itself can reduce the risks inherent in the delegation of legislative powers if details of policy are included wherever possible in the governing statute.

Now, it is quite true that there the committee says "wherever possible," which, I assume, recognizes that there may be cases where it is not possible.

It goes on to elaborate on this point on page 49, where it is talking about some of the different reasons why boards or commissions may be set up. It says one of the reasons why the government and the Legislature may see fit to set up a board or commission is because their own policy is still not clarified and, in the period of clarification, they want a board or commission in existence to assist in that process.

The committee refers specifically to the case of the hospital services commission. But it does make what I consider a very significant statement on this particular type of procedure. It says here:

Accountability to the government and the Legislature should be retained, but initially it may not be considered necessary for this to extend to detail. As the situation clarifies, the Legislature should be asked to define the duties and responsibilities of the new agency more precisely.

In other words, the committee does—which I think is reasonable—recognize the possibility that, to begin with, when we are entering a new field, we may not be able to set down responsibilities precisely. But it suggested that, after we have had some experience in the field the government should be able to do so.

Mr. Speaker, this Ontario energy board will have a new name but it is not a new board. The board has existed for some substantial time. It would seem to me that this period of, shall we say, jelling a policy should be completed by now. Both the hon. leader of the Opposition and my own hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald) have referred to this point. Both of them, if I understood them aright, have taken the stand that this bill, which the hon. Minister is now submitting to us, should lay down what the Gordon committee recommended—basic standards of policy to be applied by the board in fixing rates.

I believe that both the hon. leader of the Opposition and my own hon. leader have taken the position that those standards should be in the statute.

Mr. Speaker, I myself am a very easy fellow to get along with, and I would not take quite as strict a position as those other two hon. gentlemen. But I would say this, that I would like to see the standards laid down in this statute. I believe that it should now be possible, after a good long period of experience, for the government to lay down standards in the statute.

But since the hon. Minister has indicated to us that the government is not yet ready, notwithstanding a very long lapse of time, to lay down principles—either in a statute or anywhere else—then I would certainly say that at least we should subscribe to the alternative suggested by the Gordon committee, which is that these principles should be laid down in order-in-council just as soon as is possible.

Perhaps some time this year they could be laid down by order-in-council, and be incorporated into the statute at a later time, when they could be debated in the Legislature.

However, there is another matter about which I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and that is that, even if the government finally makes up its mind on the principles it wants applied—and I trust that it will do so fairly soon, not in the fullness of time but reasonably soon—even if it makes up its mind about that, there is no method whatsoever in the proposed bill whereby the government can direct that the board shall follow those standards.

Being quite concerned about this matter, I read through the bill a number of times. I decided that there must be something I was missing in the bill. So I asked the hon. Minister of Energy Resources a question about it just as he concluded his remarks the other day. My question appears on page 206 of Hansard of February 8:

When the government ultimately decides on the principle that it wishes to apply in the fixing of rates for natural gas, what is the procedure provided in the bills that are now before us, whereby those principles—as laid down by the government—will be communicated to the board?

Now, I had to repeat this question about 3 times before I got across to the hon. Minister what I was talking about, and then according to page 207 of the same Hansard the hon. Minister replied:

I would think, to be perfectly fair, that the normal procedure in any jurisdiction is for the Minister, to whom the board is responsible, to communicate—either by letter or by verbal instruction—to the board what the policy of the government in that connection would be, and this is what I would intend to do.

Mr. Speaker, I have read that answer over—I heard it, I could not believe my ears, I have read it over a couple of times in the cold print of Hansard and, frankly, I cannot believe my eyes. I cannot believe that the hon. Minister means what he says there. I presume he does, but it is hard for me to believe it.

Is he stating to us that important matters of policy, governing the basic operation of a board, would be communicated to the board either orally or at most, by letter?

I submit to you, sir, that matters of that kind should be laid down in a legislative instrument, preferably in the statute. But if that is not possible, then at least it should be by order-in-council where they become public information, where everybody knows exactly what they are—all the people appearing before the board and everyone else. But the hon. Minister says that he is going to do it by letter or even by verbal communication.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it should be envisaged, and that provision should be made in the bill, whereby, at the very minimum, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council will have authority to lay these matters down by regulation for the instruction of the board.

Moreover, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that under the bill as it now stands, if we assume that the hon. Minister writes a letter to the board or has a talk with the chairman, the board would be quite within its power—and I would say, would be acting quite properly—if they told him, in a nice way, to go jump in the lake.

I do not think that under this bill, if it is passed, the hon. Minister can lay down any principles for the board, and I do not think he should be entitled to.

If I can refer to a couple of sections in the bill in order to illustrate this point, without the hon. Minister suggesting to me that I should wait for committee, I would like to refer to section 12, subsection 3, which says:

The board has exclusive jurisdiction in all cases, and in respect of all matters in which jurisdiction is conferred on it by this or any other Act.

Jurisdiction is conferred on it by section 17(1):

to approve or fix such rates and other charges as are required by the regulation.

All that the regulations are going to say, according to the authority granted for the issuing of regulations, is merely to indicate to the board the kind of rates that are to be fixed—nothing about principles to be applied, just the general area in which the board is to operate.

Once the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council has laid that down, then the board has complete jurisdiction to fix rates. It does not have to pay any attention, whatsoever, to the hon. Minister. Furthermore, I do not think it should pay any attention to him.

This is surely a quasi-judicial board. The whole reason for giving it this type of authority is so that it will be removed from executive intervention. I was going to use the word interference, but I think a better word is intervention because it may not necessarily be interference.

I think that once this board is operating, if it is to retain its independence, it should not be subject to the influence of the hon. Minister or to any other individual, either on general matters of policy or on specific sense. The whole purpose, surely, of the board is that it will hear cases and decide them on their merits, without reference to anyone, within the framework laid down for it.

Under this bill, as it now stands, the framework is a carte blanche, if one can call a carte blanche a framework. The board has complete and unlimited authority to act according to any principles it feels like acting on, and to notify, or not notify, the public as to what those principles are.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is not good enough. It is certainly not in accordance with the recommendations of the Gordon committee.

Therefore, I am hoping that the hon. Minister may reconsider this matter, which I believe to be of fundamental importance. Perhaps at the committee stage he can bring in an amendment which at least will give the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council power to lay down standards. That seems to be the most we can hope for at this session at any rate.

If such an amendment is adopted, I trust that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council will proceed with all due speed—I am not quite sure what the expression is—but all due speed, let us put it that way, to lay down standards.

We are not going to, I understand, have them presented to us at this session. So be it—it is unfortunate, but there it is.

But surely, in the reasonably near future, standards can be laid down publicly and by legislative instrument, governing the conduct of this board in this very wide power of fixing gas rates.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that not only should the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council be given authority to do that, but that this authority should be exercised in the very near future so that the board will, at least, be subject to some basic principles in exercising the wide discretion which is given to it under the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that with this discussion, which has been very ample and upon which I can recognize there are a great many differences of point of view, that this bill should be referred to the committee on energy. At the committee stage the whole matter, as the hon. leader of the Opposition says, can be considered, and witnesses and experts can, at the discretion of the committee, be called to hear these various points.

There are, of course, as I say, many points of view; one of them deals with the matter of the rate base fixing the rates.

I am bound to say that I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for Woodbine has just said in relation to that. As a matter of fact I do not think, and I think my hon. friend will agree—as a matter of fact he has said—that it would be a very unwise thing to freeze the rate base into the statute at the present time if, in fact, ever. But certainly it would be unwise at the present time.

If it were to be frozen into the statute now, of course, it would be on the basis of our experience which goes back to 1919 and which is, I think, original cost less depreciation, which method is followed by a very great many jurisdictions in North America.

As a matter of fact, original cost less depreciation may not be the best method to follow. I would not for a moment say that it is, and I think that is the position which has been taken by the hon. Minister in relation to this. He has said: "Here is what we have done over these years." Now, as a matter of fact, I think, there are many things that perhaps were not done over those years. I do not think, perhaps, over those 40 years, that reports were kept as to the basis of decisions and so on. Even if they were, they probably are not in the shape in which anyone can lay their hands on them very quickly.

I think the idea hereafter will be to do that, and probably to take and sort out the decisions and the various bases of decisions over the years, so that they would be available for people to see.

Now, the hon. Minister has referred to the matter of setting up a study committee that would study these matters and come forward with something which—to us at least, and to the people of this province—would seem the logical thing to do. I think that that is what the Gordon committee means when it says only after experience should certain things be done.

Actually speaking, it may be very desirable to put that in the form of regulation, and I think that section 28B gives the authority to do that. If I am incorrect in that, someone can correct me.

In any event, if the matter is referred to the committee, it can be sorted out there. When it comes back to this House, every section will be subject to consideration again, and it would seem to me that, by that time, we ought to have the opportunity of having heard the viewpoint, not only of the hon. members of the House, but of others who might be called by the committee on energy, in its wisdom.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that might be the best method to follow. So, I would suggest that we commit the bill to go on to the committee with the reservation that has been expressed here. I would say also with the reservations of the hon. Minister himself, who has said that this is not put forward in any dogmatic sense, but is put forward with the idea of striving for the best type of bill we can get.

I have come to the conclusion that there is not any model legislation in effect anywhere in relation to this matter. As a matter of fact, after these deliberations I have suggested, we here may come up with the model legislation. I am very optimistic of that in any event.

Mr. MacDonald: Not with the bill the hon. Minister has presented.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

AN ACT RESPECTING ENERGY

Hon. R. Macaulay moves second reading of Bill No. 39, "An Act respecting energy."

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments, and not at nearly the length I did in relation to The Energy Board Act, in moving second reading of An Act respecting energy in this province—known, by the short form, as The Energy Act.

I would say to this House that, in general terms, it can be described this way.

Section 1 is a general section which offers to the Act a number of definitions. Then follows what is known as part 1 of the Act, which deals generally with matters such as inspection of pipe lines, transmission lines, distribution systems, inspectors, tagging lines and so forth.

The second part of the Act deals generally with the provisions that were formerly contained in The Pipe Lines Act which this Act will now replace.

The third part of the Act deals, generally speaking, with matters which my hon. friend from York South and I have been discussing this afternoon in this House, namely, the energy returns officer, and the type of returns that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council may, by regulation, require companies governed by this Act to file.

The fourth part deals with what could be called miscellaneous and transitional sections dealing with the name of the Act when it comes into force, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to deal at any length with this Act other than to say that again, in connection with this Act, it may contain a number of imperfections as with the other Act. We are more than anxious, in committee of the whole House and equally when the bill goes before the committee on energy, for study by the hon. members of this House. We wish to have the recommendations of both committees, and to implement those that it would seem reasonable and possible to implement.

For example, dealing just for a moment with the detail under section 1, subsection 11, there is a provision that hydro-carbon means any chemical compound of carbon and hydrogen, which includes any gas to be used as a fuel. It is conceivable that that subsection is wide enough, broad enough, to cover the retail or wholesale price of gasoline, for example.

Now, it was never the intention of the department, in drafting this Act, to include that type of legislation. On the other hand, a number of these definitions and provisions will have to be fairly carefully gone into, and I know that this House and the committee on energy can be counted on to do that.

Generally speaking, this Act completes the dual purpose in mind, as I envisage it, of the Gordon committee's report with reference to the transfer, from the old fuel board, of certain duties and jurisdictions to the Ontario energy board, and the balance of these duties to The Department of Energy Resources. Therefore, such portions of the Ontario fuel board jurisdiction which dealt with the inspection of transmission lines, distribution lines, appointment of inspectors and their obligations, safety codes, emergency measures, drilling and production procedures, and matters of like intent, are transferred by this Act from the Ontario fuel board to The Department of Energy Resources.

The other chief change involved in the Act is a matter to which the hon. member for York South has made reference today, and to which I made reference the other day. That change is in connection with section 21, and following, dealing with the establishment of an energy returns officer, who will have a supporting staff with reference to the material and returns to be filed by supply companies that are governed by the Act, with a view to analyzing them and culling out the information that is necessary so that, upon a proper application, either a rehearing of a former hearing can be held or had, or a new rate hearing itself can be had.

I do not think that I will advance the prospects or the matter this afternoon by taking the time of the House in going deeply into any of the details of this principle.

Actually, my hon. friend this afternoon referred to—the exact name of which I have forgotten, consumer—what did he call it?

Mr. MacDonald: Consumer counsellor?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Consumer counsellor.

Actually, I have not looked at legislation in that connection, and it may very well be that there is a type of analogy to that. But the best analogy that I was able to turn up was one that is used in The Federal Power Commission Act, where they have a rates examiner—this is the closest analogy I think that there is to that person.

Again, without attempting to repeat unduly the concern of the government in relation to an energy returns officer by making him a member of the board, it puts the board in a position where it has weighed evidence, before a hearing is had, by determining when the hearing should be had, and has looked at the evidence as it comes in. The feeling—I certainly know of the Bar association, and of most lawyers and I think of many others—is that the fuel board or energy board, working under circumstances such as those, has prejudged or is put in a position to weigh evidence which is not before it before a case is heard, upon which rates or in which rates are determined.

Now, that is the basic reason for attempting to place a system such as this with the department rather than with the board.

The second advantage that I pointed out to the House some days ago, on second reading of Bill No. 38, was that such a person's responsibilities will be to see that all the evidence which is available is put before the board. Thus, although not taking part as standing on one side or the other, namely, the producer or consumer side, he will see that what evidence there is available, as a result of whatever returns are required, is presented to the board. This, we hope, will insure that the decisions of the board are—not that they have not been in the past, but I want to insure them completely in the future—fair and just and equitable, and that the board has all the evidence that it needs upon which to come to a determination. This procedure will insure that the day will not be won just by those who have the best counsel, but will favour the most equitable and fair position.

I do not think other than that, Mr. Speaker, that, in terms of general principles, I can perhaps usefully say anything more at this time, and I would move second reading.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Will the hon. Minister take a minute to answer just one question? I observe that Bill No. 38, section 11(3), provides, and I read:

The Regulations Act does not apply to the orders of the board.

And then I go to Bill No. 39 and I observe no such—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, my hon. friend. What section was that he first referred to?

Mr. Gould: Bill No. 38, section 11(3).

Provision has been made, if I may go back to The Regulations Act, which provides that every order and every regulation must first be filed with the registrar and then gazetted. In other words, the public must be given notice.

Now, Bill No. 38 provides, by section 11(3), that The Regulations Act does not apply to the orders of the board. In other words, I gather from that, Mr. Speaker, that under Bill No. 38, any order of the board is not required to be filed, or the public given notice therefor.

Now, going to Bill No. 39, I observe there is no such section provided for in Bill No. 39. May I legitimately draw from this that all orders of the board under Bill No. 39 are to be filed and gazetted? If that be so, why is there this difference between Bill No. 38 and Bill No. 39, as to the filing and non-filing of the orders of the board?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would say to the hon. member that, in relation to that particular subsection, that subsection 3 of section 11 is as was contained in The Ontario Fuel Board Act itself. This is continued forward. Now the hon. member has referred to section what in Bill No. 39?

Mr. Gould: I say that Bill No. 39 makes no similar provision. Why?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am happy to have the suggestion of the hon. member in this connection. As I said the other day in the House, it is our intention that all of the decisions of the fuel board or the Ontario energy board will be made public. They will all be in writing, and if it is best to obtain publication of these to file them under The Regulations Act, that would be the procedure that would be followed.

As I indicated to the House, the Gordon committee recommends that decisions be in writing, that they be made available to the public, and that is my intention. If, through some slip, I have continued a section in the earlier Act that should not now be in, we will amend that and take it out. I thank the hon. member for having drawn it to our attention.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I may make some references to the Act respecting energy in terms of principle, I would appreciate the opportunity to ask some general questions of the hon. Minister.

Mr. Speaker, firstly, it does seem to me that, on reading the bill, one gets the impression that the draftsman had in mind giving, or at least centralizing, the authority with respect to energy in Ontario, either in the hon. Minister or the board, and that this effort has been pursued in the ultimate. The definition section would suggest that all conceivable control over energy is to be centralized in either the hon. Minister or the board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that critically. It may well be that this is a desirable thing and that is the purpose of the legislation. If so, I think it spells it out very effectively.

But I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that there is room for some doubt as to whether or not that theoretical concept is, in fact, to be pursued in Ontario.

For example, I can find no reference to the control that this particular piece of legislation will have on the operation of Hydro. So I would ask the hon. Minister whether it is his intent, in proposing this legislation, that the House, by virtue of the legislation, shall have any control over Hydro, other than what it has at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, in response to the question, that this Bill No. 39 does not include, in its definitions of energy or any source of it, any words which would be wide enough to include the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the second question I would ask of the hon. Minister is whether or not the Act intends to control atomic and uranium energy?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would think atomic energy—

Mr. Wintermeyer: There is one section, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would think not.

Atomic energy is produced from uranium, and creates electricity. If we leave electricity out of the Act it strikes me that atomic energy would be out of the Act. I will point out where we ultimately may assume some responsibility in this connection, if the hon. leader of the Opposition would permit me just to say this.

When I said a moment ago that hydrocarbons went so far perhaps as to include gasoline, it may very well be, and I think it is, that this Act would not be intended to control the price of gasoline.

Yet it might very well be that we should have, in The Department of Energy Resources, some control over the transportation of gasoline, from a safety factor. That is to say, we include the safety factor in transporting natural gas. It may very well be that this House should feel, as far as safety is concerned in relation to the transportation of gasoline, that the same should be so. So it may very well be in atomic energy that the generation of electricity from uranium—natural uranium or refined uranium, as a reactor—should be dealt with in some other way.

I would take the view that it is not included in this Act except perhaps as a safety measure where we might ultimately come to it.

Could I just say, however, that if the hon. leader of the Opposition would look at section 9, subsection 1, subsection 39—

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is the only reference I can find to uranium.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes. That is regulating the acquisition, storing, transportation, distribution, sale, processing, preparation and use of uranium.

Now, that may be far too wide, I do not know what the wishes of the House will be in that connection. But this is a grey area, if the hon. leader of the Opposition knows to what I refer, not black or white.

I mean that the federal government has certain responsibilities, and we have certain responsibilities. The difficulty is we have had no experience in relation to safety. The only people who really have are The Department of Trade and Commerce and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The question is, where should we go in this grey area, over what aspects do we have jurisdiction?

But, as far as the generation of electricity from uranium is concerned, I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that it is not envisaged in this Act that that should be covered.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate these observations, because I think that this is the essence of the particular bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I merely suggest that I personally have felt for a long while that an energy board in Ontario is an absolute necessity. I think that I am simply saying what everybody knows when I say that the control of energy in Ontario is one of the most fundamental economic controls that we can exercise, and that it must be done with great wisdom and diligence. Therefore, when we heard that a Department of Energy Resources was to be set up and this legislation was to be passed, I think all of us were very enthusiastic.

Very frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am now greatly disturbed. I personally think that we have before us nothing more than a gas and oil bill. I do not think we have an energy bill before us at all. I suggest that one of our primary responsibilities is to control all forms of energy. That can be the only essence, that can be the only purpose, of energy control in Ontario.

The only reason that I personally am opposed to the nationalization of the gas distributing line is in the fact, firstly, that we have no control over the source. But more primarily—more primarily by far—is the simple proposition that nationalization of gas will work only if we distribute gas in large measure throughout all of the provinces.

Gas is economical only if we have something like 60 per cent. of concentration in any given area, and I say to hon. members it will be successful in that operation only if we underscore Hydro—in other words, if we cut the pinnings from under Hydro.

I personally feel that the very essence of this Act is to bring all forms of energy under the control of this particular department.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find with great regret, and I say to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources—who is a very capable Minister, the type of Minister who I think can pull together the necessary faceting in our economic set-up to use our energy forces as efficiently for the public good as possible—that we have obvious loopholes.

Firstly, there will be no further control over Hydro and, secondly, there is doubt for control over atomic energy.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you, with great regret, that I am disappointed. I thought this department was going to serve a very, very efficient and commendable purpose in our economic development. But now I find that we have nothing more, as I said a few moments ago, than a gas and oil bill. We have nothing more than we have had heretofore. There is great doubt whether or not these bills that have been suggested are too vague, whether they are going to hand over to boards and commissions authority that we should exercise.

Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the promising advance notices and the abilities—and I say that very frankly, the hon. Minister is a man of great ability, a man that I think could do this job very effectively—in spite of all that, I suggest to hon. members that when we get down to brass tacks, we have nothing more than we had last year or two years or 5 years ago, nothing more than this particular Legislature can put its teeth into.

Now that is my first observation.

The second observation, Mr. Speaker, is that there are references the hon. Minister has made to the appointment of inspectors in part I of the bill. Now, herein, I would simply, at this time, draw to the attention of the House the fact that these inspectors will not be under the control of the department.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, they will.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will they? Now, excuse me. Are they to be licenced by the department? Are they to be paid by—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: A number of inspectors, those on our own inspection force, will be on our staff and will be inspected by us. There are two or three kinds of inspection which we will outline, if I may say this to my hon. friend, when we come before the committee and also when I am reporting to the House.

Certain inspections will be carried on by the company. There are certain inspections which are carried on and must be reported to, and certified to, under a new system in relation to the installing.

There are also inspections which are made by the department. In relation to those made by the department, the inspectors are paid by the department, and are in our civil service.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I think the hon. Minister makes a valid point that it might be wise to wait until he goes to the committee.

The next observation that I would make, Mr. Speaker, is with reference to the matter of appeal. As I understand this particular bill, and I commend it in one respect—the matter of expropriation proceedings. The opportunity of a person to test the validity of the amount of money that he is to be paid for land that will be taken away from him is, firstly, in his opportunity to negotiate with the department, the feeling of favourable disposition. He can appeal to the municipal board and from there to the court of appeal.

Frankly, I commend the hon. Minister in this respect. I think it is as good a set-up as one would want.

But I am concerned about licences and permits, Mr. Speaker. As I read the Act, there are no appeals from the decision of the hon. Minister in that respect. That is, having made the determination that a licence should be granted, there is no appeal from the hon. Minister's decision and—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: But, my hon. friend, I would think, would be not objecting to the appeal where a licence has been granted, but where a licence has been refused or withdrawn.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am sorry, yes. Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am certainly happy to discuss that in the House, my hon. friend. It certainly has concerned me. When we discuss it in committee, and before the committee on energy, I would like to have the benefit of the opinion of the hon. members. There are problems on both sides of it and I try to weigh them. I knew it would focus the attention of the House on the matter and, if the House is of the opinion there is a better way of dealing with it, we will—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate these comments that the hon. Minister has made in effect, that he is certainly quite cognizant of this. This is one thing we are certainly going to have to think about and talk about. Very frankly, I am inclined to think that the committee may be a better place in which to do these things than this particular House right now.

There are just two other questions that I would submit, Mr. Speaker. The last two are these: I rather regretted, again, the fact that the Ontario water resources commission obviously is not within the purview of this particular legislation. It has been assigned to The Department of Municipal Affairs. I question the wisdom of that particular move. I frankly think that here again—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are two sides to this problem, there may be three.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I know, I think, after the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) has had the opportunity to address this House, that nobody will be in any doubt as to whether or not we should move forward in this particular area of water resources. I am confident that he will suggest that we do so, and do so in the form of a public utility.

It would seem to me that then there would be less reason and justification for including that particular commission in The Department of Municipal Affairs. I think it rightly belongs here.

Mr. Speaker, my last observation is that maybe we should consider the advisability of assuring that the legislation require that all applications for rate increases—and I may be a little out of order here in going back to them—be opposed. I suggest that there should be no opportunity to grant any rate increase unless there be formal opposition to it, that we should somehow artificially create the opportunity to formally oppose it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That, of course—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I make this in the form of a suggestion—I think it may be one of the mechanical devices that we are looking for to try to assist us in this very complicated area.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I say this to my hon. friend? There are two problems in that connection, the one I hope we have covered—that is sometimes the municipalities, and individual municipalities, want a rate change and there may be, therefore, no opposition to it. However, the hon. leader of the Opposition's point is a valid one, and we should discuss it.

I tried to get around the other problem by creating an energy returns officer, who shall be a party to every application. He will, in effect, be in opposition even when the municipality is consenting. Strictly speaking, he may not be in opposition but he will bring out all of the relevant facts.

May I just mention one further matter that my hon. friend made reference to, and that is that the Minister may withdraw a licence.

Frankly, this is not anything that appeals to me at all—withdrawing licences or granting them—and I hope I will never have to withdraw them.

On the other hand, I think this House would expect me to do so where somebody obviously was not doing a good job. Therefore, to get around this, I tried to provide that, if the Minister, or whoever it was, turned down a licence or withdrew a licence, the person could then go before the energy board for a full hearing. This would give him, in effect, an appeal from the Minister to the board and the Minister would then receive the board's recommendation.

But now we are getting into the problem of trying to carry out government policy, or legislative policy. However, we can deal with that.

I am just showing my hon. friend that I did try, under section 83, to enable a person to go from the Minister to the board, which then would have a full hearing of things and make a recommendation to the Minister. I am confident that he would accept it.

I want to meet my hon. friend's objections because he feels about these things as I do.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In conclusion, those are the observations that I wanted to make.

I must emphasize again my primary objection to the entire bill. I think all of us anticipated that we were moving in the right direction by creating, or setting up, a Department of Energy Resources that would control, for the benefit of all people in all industry in Ontario, all forms of energy of whatsoever kind in nature. But we now find that we have, as I said at the outset, nothing more than a bill which will control, basically, gas and oil—and there is no control over even coal. I supposed there would be—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Hydro-carbons would include everything.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, that may be questionable. Certainly if there is no control over Hydro, and seriously doubtful control over atomic energy. I think this is a fatal shortcoming in the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I ask my hon. friend this? I think that atomic energy would really come under the Hydro, and the safety aspect of plutonium and other radiated products would come under this control Act. But would my hon. friend advocate that this Act include Hydro under energy resources?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, yes. Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am happy to have my hon. friend's advice, in that connection, because my hon. friend put the position the other day, as I recall, that he felt that Hydro should report to the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Wait a minute, now. I am talking right now, if you will, philosophically. I was talking about a specific problem heretofore, and I think my hon. friend knows it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition be politically against putting Hydro under energy resources?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, now I will rise above politics on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I am trying to talk, as I said, philosophically, and philosophically I have no hesitancy at all, in this world, in saying that if the energy board, under the Act, is to do the job that should be done, fundamentally Hydro must be under the jurisdiction of the legislation.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are two points I would like to deal with very briefly. The hon. Minister touched on the definition of hydro-carbons and, at one stage, in reference to the previous bill, he suggested that it had been drawn to his attention that perhaps the definition was wide enough to control the retail distribution of gasoline.

Then, when he got over to this bill, he said that perhaps there was some merit in leaving the definition as wide as it is, because—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes?

Mr. Singer: Because there might be a reason to deal with safety in transporting gasoline.

Now, the first point that I want to make sure of with the hon. Minister is this: Is there any intention of controlling the retail distribution of gasoline, either in Bill No. 38 or Bill No. 39? If not, is that going to be dealt with in committee by making the definition more exact, and making the government's intentions abundantly clear on this point?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, the government's intention is not to include the retail price of gasoline.

Mr. Singer: Will that be taken care of?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, I would think it will require an amendment. It might be better to exclude some other things, too, my hon. friend. Well, we will go into the problems when we come to them. My hon. friend is a lawyer, and he knows the difficulties of drawing definitions. But we will deal with these things in the committee, and I am looking forward to receiving some assistance in this connection.

Mr. Singer: There is a second point, Mr. Speaker, which I want to draw to the hon. Minister's attention.

These are the provisions of section 6 of Bill No. 39.

Now, as I read that section, I hope I am mistaken, but it seems to me to indicate a brand new departure in labour relations in this province. It seem to indicate that, in the gas industry, regulations may be made when the Minister decides it is necessary to maintain the supply of gas to the public.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Where is that, my hon. friend?

Mr. Singer: Section 6 of Bill No. 39, yes.

Now, as I read this, it would seem to indicate that if the Minister considers it necessary, and if there is a labour dispute here—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, no. No.

Mr. Singer: Well, that may not be the hon. Minister's intention, and I hope it is not. But as I read it, I suggest to the hon. Minister, that is what it appears to mean.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is a very valid comment to make, and my hon. friend's interpretation is one that was not intended. I am grateful to him for pointing this out. Actually, this section was directed to this problem:

Just outside of Toronto, let us say, on a very cold afternoon, in the middle of the winter, when a subdivision is being cleared, a bulldozer goes through a pipe line. Perhaps the operator gets out to light a match to see what he hit, and in so doing blows up a long section of the line.

As a matter of fact, a mere spark caused by collision with the metal pipe might be enough to blow up the line. This is indeed possible, for I discussed the matter with the companies.

What would subsequently happen? There would be no back pack on the line if it is broken outside of the city. Therefore, how would the gas service be maintained if some of the companies who had gas in storage did not want to distribute it?

Fortunately, I think none of the companies feel that way about it, and they have a kind of plan to maintain service. It is a good plan in fact, but I wanted it reduced in writing so it would merely be a matter of ringing a bell to get the general service back in operation. This is really what I had in mind, and I thank my hon. friend for drawing my attention to the wording.

Mr. Singer: Well, just a small addendum. This is not a bill, Mr. Speaker, in which we should set a new policy in labour relations.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member is quite right.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to revert to some of the comments that were made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, to expand upon them, perhaps in a way that he will not necessarily agree with.

Like him, I was somewhat intrigued when I first saw notice being given of an Act respecting energy. I must say I waited somewhat impatiently to see this bill. When we finally got the printed copy of it, I must say I was very disappointed in it.

I would suggest that the title of the bill is a complete misnomer. It is not an Act respecting energy. It does not deal with the broad problems of the efficient use of energy in the province. It deals instead with a number of subsidiary matters.

I wrote down 4 main topics that it seems to me the bill deals with.

First is the conservation of gas and oil; second is the safe handling, mainly of gas; third is the matter of construction of pipe lines, particularly with regard to the expropriation of land for pipe lines; and, finally, the matter of the powers and duties of the energy returns officer.

I am not suggesting that any of these things are not important matters, Mr. Speaker. I believe they are all important. But I do suggest that they are very definitely subsidiary matters.

I believe the hon. Minister has stated, on a number of occasions, that he considers the provision of energy to be of vital importance to the future economic development of this province. I hope I am summarizing in a fair way what I think I have heard him say. At any rate, whether he has said it or not, I certainly believe that myself. I think that fundamental to all economic developments are our sources of energy.

This province has enjoyed a very high degree of industrial development, and one of the fundamental reasons is that, over the last half-century, we have had a very cheap source of energy in the form of hydro-electric power.

We are now reaching the situation where cheap sources of electrical power are no longer available unless, at some time in the future, atomic energy becomes a substitute for hydro type. But in our present situation, atomic energy is not competitive even with power generated from steam—and from other sources such as coal or gas. At any rate, that is my understanding.

So we are facing, in this province, a new era when we can expect energy costs to increase.

Into this situation has come a new factor—which has come fortuitously—and that is natural gas. Most of it is admittedly not produced in this province, but here it is, coming to us and available for our use.

As I understand it, natural gas is, after electricity, perhaps the most flexible source of energy that is available. It is available for a good many different purposes. So I think we have an opportunity—and it is very important that we should take advantage of the opportunity—to now use gas to fill the gap being created by the fact that we have run out of cheap sources of electrical power.

There is certainly no indication in this bill that the government has any policy along that line. As far as I know, there is no indication of policy anywhere. I think that somewhere there should be an indication of the government's policy along that line.

On the integrated use of all forms of energy, I am just going to say this. I believe that we should have co-ordinated planning of all sources of energy—of the uses of all sources of energy within the province—to insure that all types of energy are used for the purposes for which they are most efficient. I do not necessarily mean for the purposes out of which somebody producing some form of energy can make a profit, but for the purposes for which they are most efficient in the basic economic sense of using our resources in the best possible way.

I believe there should be an overall policy and an overall plan along that line. But we certainly cannot have any overall planning of the use and development of energy resources in this province if we do not have some means of co-ordinating the use of hydro-electric power, or electrical power from other sources for that matter, and natural gas, because they are really the two most important sources of energy.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Do we not really do that?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would say that it will be done most inadequately, if at all. But I would—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member not think the hon. Minister is pretty adequate?

Mr. Bryden: I think he is very adequate. But the government policies under which he has to operate are most inadequate indeed, in my opinion.

I will even give a suggestion of what I think the policy should be. I am quite ready to give my ideas on the matter free of charge.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member does not know whether—

Mr. Bryden: Well, maybe the hon. Prime Minister will consider they are expensive, even at that low price. However, I will offer them to him in any case.

In my opinion, it certainly would be most ridiculous to permit a situation to develop in this province whereby we were having hydro and gas competing, with duplication of facilities for the same function. That cannot help but inflate the basic cost of energy in this province, make all our industrial processes more expensive, and thereby slow down the further industrial development of the province.

It seems to me that these two major sources of energy should be treated as complementary items, and that there should be plans to use them in a way whereby each one is available for the purpose for which it is best adapted.

I also believe that we should have a policy whereby gas can become available to underdeveloped areas of the province. We speak a great deal about underdeveloped areas of the world, in talking about foreign countries, but the fact remains there are many underdeveloped areas right in this province, if we are talking about general economic development. They are behind some other areas.

I think it is desirable that everything possible should be done to encourage development in those areas, and the provision of power, as inexpensively as possible, is most important to their development.

Northern Ontario very likely is going to benefit to a very great degree from the fact that natural gas is available in substantial parts of it now. That, however, is purely accidental, Mr. Speaker. It would certainly not have come about through the normal operation of the market, if one wants to put it that way. It came about only because, in order to get the gas down to Toronto and Montreal, they just had to bring it through northern Ontario. So those communities in northern Ontario which are reasonably close to the main trans-Canada trunk line will benefit.

But then there are many other areas, for example in eastern Ontario, that are not so fortunately situated. I suspect that, failing some positive government planning, those particular areas are going to be out of luck as far as this very important source of energy is concerned.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is only one way in which gas can be economically and efficiently provided to this province in a way that will make possible maximum development of the province generally, and specific areas thereof. That way is through a system of public distribution similar to Hydro, along the same principle—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member mean public ownership?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I was just coming to that.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. What my hon. friend is now saying is a reflection on a vote earlier taken in this House last year, or the year before, to which public distribution was voted against. The rules of this House provide that an hon. member cannot speak in a way which will be a reflection upon an earlier vote unless he has a motion before him at the time.

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Minister seriously trying to suggest that, once a matter has been voted on in this House, it is forever out of order to speak of it again?

Mr. MacDonald: In the same session.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, no.

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am saying that the hon. member may not reflect upon an earlier vote taken in this House unless he puts, on the order paper, an Act or a resolution which would rescind the earlier decision to which he can speak. That is a rule of this House.

Mr. Bryden: I will be guided by what Mr. Speaker rules on this matter, if the hon. Minister is pressing the point.

I would submit, however, Mr. Speaker, that if this is applied in this way, it will certainly very seriously restrict debate. I certainly do not reflect on the decision that this House made on previous occasions though I disagree with it. But I do believe that matters related to it have a direct bearing on any bill respecting energy, and if I cannot discuss matters of energy under a bill respecting energy, then I am afraid that debate is going to be very circumscribed in this House. Have I your permission to continue, sir?

Well then, I would like to state my own firm conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the only way in which we can provide for efficient use of natural gas in this province, and for efficient co-ordination of gas resources and Hydro resources, is through a system of public distribution similar to that which we now have with regard to Hydro.

There is this difference, of course, that most hydro-electric power is produced within the province, and most gas is produced outside the province. But I do not think that fact basically affects my proposition.

The main supply of gas for this province comes in through northern Ontario, through the trans-Canada pipe line, and once it gets here it is in our hands to use in such way as appears efficient.

I submit that we should have a system or grid, similar to the Hydro grid, of pipe lines—of secondary pipe lines—from the trans-Canada line and other sources, involving the very important storage areas in Lambton county, and that those should be provided by some provincially owned corporation.

Then the municipalities should do much the same thing as they do with Hydro. They should have their own local distribution systems, and they should be responsible for local distribution, buying the gas in bulk from the provincial corporation which, in turn, buys it from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and other sources.

I submit that is the only way whereby we can secure efficient utilization of gas, or efficient co-ordination of the use of gas and electrical power.

I would like to remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that 40 or 50 years ago we had, in this province, some men who were Ministers of a Conservative government, let it be said, who were faced with a new and vital source of power. These men could see that this new source of power was vital to the future development of the province. So they decided, and I think quite properly, that the way to make sure that that power was to be used in the best interests of the province, was to distribute it through a public system, a co-operative provincial-municipal system.

These men founded the hydro-electric power system that we now have in this province.

Many of us may have many points on which we disagree with Hydro policy. Indeed, I would doubt if there will ever be a corporation in the history of this world which will be perfect in all its operations. Many of us may have many points of disagreement and many points where we think policy should be changed, but I would doubt very much if there is any hon. member of this House who would say that the basic concept of Hydro is not a sound concept.

We have, many times, paid tribute to these men of 40 or 50 years ago who settled this basic policy for us. I said they were Conservatives. I would imagine—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: If any credit is coming to hon. members for their actions, I am glad to give it to them, and they were Conservatives.

I would imagine that they would have objected most vehemently if anybody had suggested to them that they were socialists. But it has always intrigued me, Mr. Speaker, when intelligent and devoted men deal in an intelligent way with a problem of basic importance about which they are fully informed and with which they are very concerned, how often in those circumstances such men come up with socialist answers to the problems concerned.

That is what happened with these gentlemen of 40 or 50 years ago, who were members of a Conservative administration. They came up with a socialist answer on a basic problem, and they were not frightened by suggestions that I believe were made at the time that this was socialism. They did not let words bother them. They saw a problem and they saw an answer to it, and they had enough vision to accept the answer that logic and common sense dictated.

I regret very much that there are no longer such men of vision in the Conservative administration in this province. We now have a situation where we are in very much the same position as those men were 40 or 50 years ago. They were faced with this basic and important new source of energy in the province, and we are faced with a basic and important new source of energy. Our old source of energy, that they arranged to be available to us in such an efficient way, is now less available on a low-cost basis. Here we have a new opportunity and we have failed to take advantage of that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that, in the bill on energy, we would have at least some indication of government policy. I have considered this matter myself, and I am firmly convinced that we cannot have proper coordination and planning unless we have public ownership. Other hon. members have suggested that they think we can. Well, if they think we can, I think they ought to show us how we can do it.

I had hoped that, in this bill which is now before us, Bill No. 39, the government would be laying down its ideas on how we could handle this problem. Far from having done that, they give no indication even that they are aware that the problem exists.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not they are aware if it exists, but I can say this much, that circumstances over the next few years will bring it very, very vigorously to their attention. They will not be able to escape the problem, because it exists and it is inescapable.

I would hope very much that they will not, shall I say, back into this very important matter in the same way that they backed into the matter of safety control, where we had to have people killed in this province before we had any proper regulations affecting the safe handling of gas. That was a very serious problem, and there were some very regrettable incidents.

The problem that I am calling to hon. members' attention is even more serious, and I hope that there will be some government policy.

Failing public ownership, which the government has rejected, for the present at any rate, I cannot for the life of me see what the policy will be. But if they do have a policy, why do they not lay it down before us where we can discuss it? This problem is of fundamental importance to the entire future development of our province.

So far, I have been talking about matters that are not in the bill, Mr. Speaker, because I think they are more important than the matters that are in there. As far as the items that are in there are concerned, I would agree with the hon. Minister's proposition that they are very detailed, technical matters which probably can best be discussed in committee.

I want to make it clear that I am not trying to suggest that the matters dealt with in this bill are unimportant—they certainly have to be dealt with in legislation. But, compared to the fundamental question that has not been dealt with at all, I do submit that they pale into insignificance.

Mr. MacDonald: There are two points that I want to deal with, in speaking to the principle of this bill. The first one flows directly out of the remarks of the hon.

member for Woodbine, and the earlier comments of the hon. leader of the Opposition, with regard to the inadequacies of this bill in coming to grips with the overall field of energy and the necessity for some integrated co-ordinated approach.

My first comment, if I may suggest it for the hon. leader of the Opposition's consideration, is that once again he reiterated his opposition to public ownership of the distribution of gas. He claimed that if we have this we would have to have a 60 per cent. concentration and this in competition with Hydro.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In order to get below Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I just draw to his attention that this kind of problem has been faced up to in those areas of the province of British Columbia where the publicly owned hydro-electric system is distributing not only hydro-electric power, but gas. I submit to him that we cannot have a co-ordinated and integrated approach to the use of these sources of power unless they come under the same direction.

Now, I mention British Columbia, but if hon. members want to see a really effective co-ordination let us go to Saskatchewan.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Do not just pooh pooh this reference. The fact of the matter is that Saskatchewan does have a co-ordinated and integrated use of these two fuels, under the same board, and the challenge of the hon. member of Woodbine stands:

If this government believes that we should have some planned use of energy, how are we going to do it if we have not public ownership? This government has not indicated one iota—in fact, the complete inadequacy of this bill proves that they have no policy.

Now, let me give hon. members another illustration.

I was very intrigued when I read the brief that was presented to the national energy board by this government with regard to gas storage. Just let me read a paragraph or so here. The context in which these comments should be considered, Mr. Speaker, is this: That the brief was, in effect, arguing that until we were storing as much gas as the storage capacity in this province permitted, we should look very carefully at the proposition of exporting, particularly on an interruptable basis.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The brief said no such thing. I wrote it. I hope my hon. friend will accept my interpretation of what I meant.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me read this then. I am quoting from page 6 of the brief:

The possibility that much greater quantities of gas could be stored in Ontario through the development of potential storage areas, not now in use, should be fully examined. The present working storage in Ontario is estimated at 22.5 billion cubic feet. However, the potential storage which could be developed, over a period of years, is estimated to be 85 billion cubic feet, or almost 4 times the present working storage.

We believe that storage in Ontario is a superior use of Canadian gas to export on an interruptable basis—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: That, in essence, is just what I said, or at least what I intended to say. I think that if hon. members examine what is in the record, they will find it is what I said.

The brief goes on:

In fact, it is no exaggeration to say that gas storage areas are as valuable a resource to this province as our natural gas reserve—

The point I have reiterated many times in this House.

However, the brief concludes:

As long as interruptable gas can easily spill over into the export market, there is little incentive to develop the full potential of the gas storage areas in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the thing that intrigues me about the hon. Minister arguing this in his brief to the natural energy board, is that he should have stayed at home and had a talk with himself. The national energy board cannot do anything about developing, to the full, the use of gas storage in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We cannot stop export.

Mr. MacDonald: So they export. Well, just a minute now. The hon. Minister would have been in a much stronger position if he had gone up to the national energy board and said: "We have done everything possible to use the full capacity of gas storage in this province. In fact, we are now using it.

Therefore, this extra can spill over, but this is the kind—"

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If I may say so, that is exactly the case today.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I refer back to a debate a year ago or so in this House. I asked this government what it was going to do, since it refused to build a publicly owned, wholly integrated gas distribution system, integrating the gas storage into that system so that in effect we would have the equivalent of Hydro's grid in the province of Ontario.

The hon. Prime Minister interrupted to state that this integration might be achieved between private companies.

Well, what has happened? Consumers' Gas came to an arrangement with Union Gas so that, when they have built the line from the Dawn Valley over to north of Hamilton—making the pipe line a little bigger than originally planned by Union—Consumers' take the extra. But how much does it amount to? This past year they are using only 3 billion cubic feet—3 billion cubic feet of stored gas.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: From the Dawn area?

Mr. MacDonald: Right, and I understand that the maximum in the contract is 7 billion cubic feet.

Now, the latest annual report of the Union Gas Company indicates that last year they used 8 billion cubic feet of stored gas. So what have we, Mr. Speaker? We have Union using 8 billion cubic feet, and we have Consumers' using 3 billion cubic feet—a total of 11 billion cubic feet of gas when we have a potential of 85 billion cubic feet.

Now, if the hon. Minister had done something, either by making these private companies get together to use the storage basins more fully, then let us hear about it. But I suggest this is going to be difficult.

The really efficient answer to it would have been a publicly owned, fully integrated distribution system. But if the hon. Minister had done something on this, then he would have been in a stronger position to have gone to the national energy board and say: "Before we export on an interruptable basis, we should use our full storage capacity."

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I never said that we should use our full storage capacity. To fill up gas reserves, to take gas out of one hole and pump it down into another without markets to use it, is just uneconomic. Furthermore, my hon. friend is allowing nothing for gas caps, which is about half the capacity of the gas storage.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister wants to elaborate, or to clarify a point I am trying to make, I have no objections at all. He does not like other people to interrupt to clarify a point, but I have no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We were not dealing with a slander today, as we were the other day.

Mr. MacDonald: But the hon. Minister is confusing the issue, which is simply this, Mr. Speaker, that the responsibility for the full use of our storage capacity in Ontario rests with the provincial government. Therefore, the provincial government is in a weak position to go to the national energy board and say we should not sell gas, on an interruptable basis, to the United States until we do have this full capacity.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We never said that. Now how many times do I have to say this to the hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: Let the hon. Minister read his brief. He did say it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is this discussion in order?

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly it is.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What relationship to this bill has this brief we filed with the national energy board? I do not think this is relative at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I will inform the hon. Prime Minister where it is in order. The hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Woodbine have pointed to the pathetic inadequacies of this so-called energy bill. It is not an energy bill, it is a bill to regulate gas and oil. It offers nothing by way of a co-ordinated approach.

I am suggesting that if we had a co-ordinated approach, one of the things we would have to take a look at is the full use of our storage areas which, as the hon. Minister says, are more valuable than the reserves of gas themselves. This government is doing nothing to see that they are used to the full.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They may be more valuable, depending on where they are and on the economic conditions under which they exist.

Mr. MacDonald: Now the hon. Minister has changed it because in his brief he said they are more valuable.

However, I want finally to turn to one other small but very, very exasperating set of problems. I should leave this to the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Janes) because he has raised this in the House many times, and I know he has discussed it with the hon. Minister many times.

This energy bill is now going to have regulation and direction over the production of oil and gas. The hon. Minister knows—because we have discussed this privately—that there are many very frustrating, thorny problems faced by the farmers who have oil and gas wells on their farms, notably in Lambton county. There have been investigations of some kind by experts that the government hired to look into these problems and find a solution. But I see nothing in this bill that indicates that the government is going to move to regularizing the procedures down there—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We have appointed a committee of some of the best experts in Canada to study that very problem, headed by Dr. George Langford.

Mr. MacDonald: When was this committee appointed?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It was appointed in January.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this going to follow-up on the committee that was appointed two years ago and reported—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There was no committee appointed two years ago on this particular matter. Apparently the problem the hon. member is referring to has something to do with the Lambton storage area people.

Mr. MacDonald: Partly, partly.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Not only partly, my hon. friend. When I deal with this on the estimates, I will show the hon. member the terms of reference.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it was not a committee, the hon. Minister is right, it was a—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well then, why say it was a committee?

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute now. The hon. Minister can correct himself on occasion, just let me correct myself. There was one American expert who was brought up, not a committee, but one of many who were brought up.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: By whom, and for whom?

Mr. MacDonald: By the government.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is that so? We will see.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I hope we will see. But the problems, Mr. Speaker, that I submit this government should give some consideration to, are of this kind. The hon. member for Lambton East pointed to the ruthless and roughshod fashion in which some of the companies operate in dealing with the farmers.

For example, in most other jurisdictions—in western Canada and the United States—there is a standard royalty that is paid to the people with producing wells. It is one-eighth of the price at the well head. Yet these companies continue to play one farmer against another. They will try to bargain and get some old farmer who is not familiar with the details, to sign for something less. I submit that we have reached the point where we should lay down rules so that all of this is taken out of the feuding stage which has gone on for too many years already.

There is another aspect of the problem. I will concede in advance that, from the legal point of view, this is difficult. Some of these contracts that the farmers have in the south-western part of the province are contracts that were signed by their grandfathers. They were signed at a time when the conditions we faced today were not even anticipated. Others were signed in recent years when a smart operator came in and, in effect, high-pressured a contract when a man did not know what his own interests were. In other words they are not fair contracts.

I know the legal problem, and lawyers react to this much more sensitively than, quite frankly, I do. If one has a contract, he has to live up to it.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that many of these contracts have been seriously altered to a degree because of actions that this government itself has taken. Because this government has stepped in and regulated, I think that there is a very valid case for the government setting up some procedure to renegotiate these contracts—to fix standard royalty rates, to rescue these farmers from all this confusion and conflict that is going on where companies are trying to play off one producer against another.

Now, at the risk of producing some catcalls again from the back benches, I would like to suggest that the hon. Minister examine what has been done in western Canada. In western Canada what happened was that many of the oil companies came in and signed contracts, sometimes by a bit of high-pressure selling. When farmers had an opportunity to study the contracts, they concluded, to use the vernacular, that they had been "skinned in the deal."

In the province of Saskatchewan, they have established what is known as a mineral contract renegotiation board, in which it is possible for the contract to come before the board and to be renegotiated if the interests of the farmer have not been protected.

If the answer to this is that these were grown men who walked into the contracts and they deserve to live with them—that the contracts are sacrosanct—I submit to this government that they take a look at their own actions.

This government signed a contract to contribute $35 million to the building of a pipe line in northern Ontario and, for a variety of reasons, because they thought it was not a very good contract, a year later they got out of it.

I will not go into the details now as to why they got out of it. But I warned in this House that it was a bad contract.

In other words, if one has a bad contract and he happens to be sitting in the driver's seat like the hon. Prime Minister, then he can get out. But if a lot of little people are stuck with bad contracts, from which they are not getting a fair royalty, they can do little about it by themselves.

I submit it is within the jurisdiction of this government to step in and assist in regularizing this whole procedure. I see nothing in the Act to suggest that the government intends to do this. I would hope that, when we get into further discussion of it in the committee stage, the hon. Minister can give us some assurance that there will be action in this area.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I just clarify the position a little bit in relation to government policy?

First of all, I would just like to say this in relation to the reference of the hon. member for Woodbine to competition. I would say to him that competition is not altogether a bad thing.

Mr. Bryden: I did not imply that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, listen, I listen to these radio programmes, "living electrically" and so on, and I never heard any of those programmes before gas came into this province. It is a great thing, I am all in favour of that.

Now, in the community that I come from, actually Hydro had a monopoly there. Since the introduction of gas, the Hydro fellows have become really thoughtful. They are thoughtful of people. I am all in favour of competition myself. The people generally are, and I think it is a very good thing.

However, to get down to the question of general policy: I think that probably we would admit that this bill is largely a gas and oil bill, insofar as it relates to energy.

First might I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I certainly would hesitate to interfere with the traditional relationships that have been built up at Hydro in relation to the municipalities, their interest and ownership in Hydro, and its relationships to the government.

I found that last year, in introducing a very brief bill in relation to the creation of the new department, I had a large number of municipalities, including the municipal electrical association, coming and asking that these traditional relationships should not be interfered with. They had worked over the period of time, over 50 years, they had found the set-up satisfactory, and they asked us not to interfere with it.

Now they even went so far—and the hon. Minister knows this—even so far as asking us not to take a Minister from their board as a vice-chairman. Now these are very real and tangible things, and I would say that we would have a great deal of hesitation on any grounds—philosophical or otherwise—

An hon. member: Or even good.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that the best grounds, after all, are what the people think. The overwhelming consensus of opinion, expressed by the Hydro municipalities, was that we should not disturb that relationship. Now that is the first thing.

The second thing is, as regards a comprehensive picture. Now, my hon. friends opposite did not use that expression, but I use it here now—a comprehensive picture. Where the comprehensive picture really comes, and is really taken in, is by the executive council. That is where it is taken in under this bill. It is not presumed that this bill should deal with Hydro. As a matter of fact, I will be quite frank with hon.

members and say that we clearly and intentionally avoided that because the Hydro municipalities felt it interfered with their rights and was disturbing the old traditional arrangements which they had found to be extremely satisfactory.

Now the point is this: Here we have the hon. Minister of Energy Resources who, through Hydro, is able to take the view of our energy requirements from the standpoint of electricity, of both water-developed power and thermally-developed power, either by uranium, or by coal or gas. He is able to give that picture to the cabinet council and to the treasury board—which is dealing with the billions or hundreds of millions of dollars involved and are going to be involved in the next 20 years. I have used the figure, I think, of about something over $2 billion, and they tell me that the revised figure would show something like $4.7 billion.

Therefore we have to take a comprehensive view of that problem. Added to that we have the effects of this legislation and the other legislation passed here today which, for the first time, enables the government and government agencies to deal with this tremendous problem in one picture. That, I think, is the answer to the hon. member for York South and the hon. leader of the Opposition and the other hon. members who have spoken.

It is true that this bill itself, if one wants to use the expression, is essentially a gas and oil bill. Nevertheless, in the set-up with the department itself, Hydro's vast plans and vast powers, that have been given to it over very many years, it is a good thing to tie these in with the government that has suited the partner municipalities. These municipalities are tied in with the head of the provincial government through a representative of the cabinet council.

Actually speaking, we now have, for the first time, through this legislation, the possibility and the ability to form an integrated picture of the tremendous requirements of this province for energy in the days to come.

I would say that this legislation is not the last word. Of course it is not. It is a very substantial step towards treating that problem in an intelligent way, in view of the many hundreds of millions of dollars we are going to have to use in power development in the years to come.

I think when this bill, like its predecessor, is referred to the committee on energy, a lot of these matters that have been referred to can be ironed out. I have no doubt that very many of them will be refined and changed. There have been very many points brought up here today that are worthy of great consideration, and I am sure that the committee will give it that consideration.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two observations on this particular bill. I will not speak very long because, well, I am not a very good lawyer, not being a lawyer.

There is one thing, though, that I would definitely like to point out, and that is that I feel that, although Hydro has spent a tremendous amount of money and has possibly done a great lot of good and will continue to spend an awful lot of money—millions, billions—that does not necessarily mean that there should not be some sort of control somewhere at some time in the future.

I feel that if the government is going to control at all, the government should not only control, one might say, a free enterprise, but should also control something that is government-owned or government-operated. They should be controlled from both sides.

In other words, this House should have control on the overall. It should be that if the rates go too high, or the expenditures go too high, then we should be able to do something about it. If these rates are too low when it comes to gas and oil, then over the years they should be either raised or lowered according to the requisite of the costs of operation. The way in which the energy board is operating should enable it to handle it that way.

I personally would like to think that we could get along without control. But apparently we cannot, because of the nature of the energy that we are handling, in all types of energy—atomic energy, electrical energy, gas and oil. Now, I think, that should be definitely in the back of the minds of the government, regardless of the marvellous job that Hydro has done.

I know Hydro has done a marvellous job. I have read it in the newspapers. I have read it in all kinds of publications. I hear it on TV—so it must be doing a very, very marvellous job. But, regardless of that job, being public ownership, many things can and possibly will develop within that organization, and I think already have, and I think that now is the time for the setting up of proper bills so that we can run it across the line.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before motion is put, I would add just a few words to the discussion that has taken place.

I agree with my hon. leader, and others, it has been a move forward to set up The Department of Energy Resources. But with him I agree also that there is an element of regret in the restricted application of the new department over the fields of energy of this province. I want to mention one in particular, and deal with it perhaps more extensively than the others.

The hon. Prime Minister has suggested that it would be unwise to place Hydro under the jurisdiction of The Department of Energy Resources. He felt that his fundamental reason is the fact that Hydro has relationships with the municipalities that would be interfered with, perhaps jeopardized, according to his view, by Hydro's inclusion in the new department.

I imagine that, Mr. Speaker, if we wanted to argue that point, we could suggest that ways could be found so that Hydro and its relationships with the municipalities could be preserved in the manner in which it is presently set up, and Hydro could still be included in The Department of Energy Resources. I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that that could be done. I would say to hon. members, to the hon. Prime Minister and to the hon. Minister who guides this bill, that I am more concerned about another particular energy, and that is, of course, atomic energy.

Now, my hon. friend has suggested that atomic energy does not at the moment, at least, come under this bill and will not be a part of or subject to The Department of Energy Resources. Now, I say to hon. members that it certainly should. Perhaps there are reasons why Hydro as an entity should not come under The Department of Energy Resources. But there certainly is no legitimate reason that I can see why atomic energy should not come under The Department of Energy Resources even though it is related somewhat with Hydro. Surely that would be one aspect of Hydro that we could take away and put under The Department of Energy Resources.

It has not any relationship, so to speak, with a municipality. There is not that fundamental reason that the hon. Prime Minister spoke about as to why atomic energy should not be under The Department of Energy Resources. We who stand in this House today have no perception of what atomic energy may mean, even in our lifetime, as a source of power. Certainly, for the life of me, I cannot see, if we are going to set up a Department of Energy Resources to take all these things into their proper relationship, there is no reason under the sun that I can see, Mr. Speaker, why atomic energy should not be under the direction of The Department of Energy Resources.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills here that will all go to the committee on lands and forests, and that would enable those of the committee to get on with the work.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT, 1952

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 2, "An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act, 1952."

He said: The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, was to provide our Act with a little clearer wording in connection with the term Crown timber, and I think that the bill is self-explanatory.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LAKES AND RIVERS IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 3, "An Act to amend The Lakes and Rivers Improvement Act."

He said: The purpose of this amendment is to broaden the Minister's authority in dealing with the matter of clearing flooded areas where water has been impounded for power development or storage purposes.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WILD RICE HARVESTING ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 4, "An Act to provide for the harvesting of wild rice."

He said: This is new legislation, Mr. Speaker, which we feel is desirable in that it would provide the department—which is after all, the department most closely concerned with the natural resources of this province, including the game and fisheries—with certain authority to deal with the harvesting of wild rice which, in some parts of the province, is developing into a rather important industry. I might say that the revenue from the harvesting of wild rice is worth from $500,000 to $1 million a year to some 600 or 800 Indian families. Our people are aware of certain needs in that regard, and we feel that this is a desirable piece of legislation.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Will we feed Red China?

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, in relation to that bill, this is legislation, not for the Indians, but it is legislation for someone who is going to go in there and take over certain areas of Crown land with a licence possibly, and make it so that they may hire Indians to do the job. This does not necessarily improve the lot of the Indians.

I think that The Department of Lands and Forests should go ahead and develop these beds where wild rice grows to the greatest possible extent so that the Indians can use them. I think that the department has a real obligation here, and that the Indians should not be licenced so much. There should not be a licence issued; the Indians should be allotted these areas so that they can go in and harvest this wild rice and collect money for the sale of the wild rice so that their revenue can be greatly improved.

Now, although we try to integrate the the Indians into our way of life, they do not necessarily go into our way of life. Because they are in that part of the country—north-western Ontario—they are shy, they are in bands, they travel for miles, and they only have certain revenues at their disposal.

Another revenue they may have at their disposal is the picking and selling of blueberries up and down the railway tracks. Well, are we going to licence the Indians as far as blueberries are concerned?

I think they should be allowed to sell the blueberries and the wild rice and everything else on Crown lands, and have the allotted areas not under a licence. I say this because, once we licence a thing, then we control it. Once we control it, then we are in a position where the advantage goes to the person who is actually handling it rather than the person who the job is done for.

I think the department has a real service to offer here, but I do not think licencing is the answer.

I do not think there should be any licencing because those areas that are licenced are no longer under the control of the government, and they should be under control not for the government, not for people who can come in and spend a year there and get allocation, but for the Indians themselves who should be looked after. That is one way in which that The Department of Lands and Forests can do a good job.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): May I allay the fears of the hon. member for Fort William? Our purpose in promoting this deal is exactly to do what the hon. member from Fort William has said.

We, in this bill, can again continue to do a job among the Indian population of this province. I think that every hon. member of this House, including the hon. member for Fort William, will agree that The Department of Lands and Forests probably does as much, if not more, for these Indian people of Ontario than the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration which is the one department primarily concerned with the Indians.

We have no intention, my hon. friends, of taking away anything from the Indian population. Indeed by licencing, or by other means of regulation, we hope to achieve a result that will be still more advantageous to the Indian population than the present set-up.

By being able to set aside, in the same way as we have managed the trapping areas of this province, by having areas set aside for wild rice harvesting, we will see that the waste, which now exists, will be reduced to a very minimum.

I myself have had some experience in this regard, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure hon. members that, without this control which we desire, the situation is not going to be improved, whereas with this control we will be able to see that a better job is done for the people and by the people of this industry.

I can tell hon. members of one instance where wild rice was harvested, when it should not have been harvested, because two or three bands or groups were interested in harvesting wild rice in the same area, with the result that they improperly harvested 60 bags of wild rice and it was spoiled.

We would see to it through our district offices and our representatives—our conservation officers—that such conditions will not continue to exist.

Mr. Chapple: Mr. Speaker, the Indian is not mentioned here. The Indian is not covered in this bill. It is not specifically laid out and there is no protection for the Indian here in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I make no differentiation or discrimination with regard to anybody. I do not care whether a person is an Indian or a white man.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would announce a night session for tomorrow night. I might explain to the House the reason for that. First of all, in the order of business, I would like to go ahead with the remainder—there are 4 bills still standing in the name of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) that could be referred or considered by the House, and if the House so determined, we would refer them to the committee that would deal with them.

I would like to take as our target and objective Thursday, February 25, for the introduction of the budget.

Actually it might not be necessary to hold night sessions, but I think it is preferable to keep the debate under such control, that is as regards the numbers who are going to speak, to give those who want the opportunity of speaking on the Throne speech the full opportunity of doing so. It would seem to me, rather than perhaps at this time next week running into very late hours in dealing with the Throne debate, it might be better to hold a night session or two now, and not sit too late. So I would give that notice now, and we will proceed with the Throne debate tomorrow.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE TRAINING SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Training Schools Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Minister explain the purpose of the bill?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): I would prefer to do it on the second reading, Mr. Speaker. But if my hon. friend wishes an explanation, I might say the amendment has 3 parts to it:

The first one will give us the authority to collect from the parents of children from age 16 to 18 who are in our training schools. We do not have that authority now. The second will allow us to remove the word "incorrigible" from the Act, and the third one will allow us to bring back children to our training school for certain offences that are not conducive to good conduct after their release.

That is the essence of the bill.

THE EXTRAMURAL EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS UNDER SENTENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to repeal The Extramural Employment of Persons Under Sentence Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICES COMMISSION ACT, 1957

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act, 1957."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to bring the terms of the Act into line with federal-provincial arrangements.

THE NURSING ACT, 1951

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Nursing Act, 1951."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to repeal all the provisions, regulations, and so on, as they relate to The Department of Health in regards to the training courses for practical nurses. This is now being transferred to The Department of Education.

THE SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to repeal an obsolete section of the Act which provides for the establishment of special treatment units in sanatoria for chest surgery not associated with tuberculosis. This is not now being done exclusively in sanatoria.

AN ACT TO FACILITATE CORNEA TRANSPLANTS

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to facilitate cornea transplants from the bodies of deceased persons to living persons."

Motion agreed to, first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide proper and expeditious procedures to facilitate the functioning of eye banks, and to remove any uncertainties and strictures in the common law in this field.

THE REFORMATORIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Reformatories Act."

Motion agreed to, first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister explain the purpose of this bill, please?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, this is rather a lengthy bill similar to The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act. It is to bring into line an Act that has been unchanged for the past 30 years. It is a change in the appellation of the officers who are entrusted with the responsibilities of the department. It has to do with the changing of prisoners from one reformatory to another, and also to the handling of mentally defective patients who have been found defective when they are ready for release, and several things of that kind.

I would be glad to give the hon. members a very full explanation on second reading, and then if, from there, they wish it to go to the committee, why that would be quite all right with me, if that is satisfactory to the hon. member at the moment.

THE TIME ACT, 1958

Mr. R. Whicher moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Time Act, 1958."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

RE URANIUM INDUSTRY

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make a statement in relation to a matter of considerable public importance. Last evening the press approached me to make a statement in connection with something that was this morning to be carried in the newspapers with reference to Elliot Lake and the uranium industry.

I indicated to the press at that time that, in view of the fact that the House was in session, I thought it far more proper that the statement be held until today, and that it be delivered to the Legislature where I felt it most properly belonged.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is one of great public importance and of considerable urgency. So I want, if I may, to make a statement this afternoon in relation to the uranium industry and the stretch-out programme with particular reference to Elliot Lake, the Blind River area, and the Bancroft area.

In January of 1960, this government, through The Department of Energy Resources, convened a conference, the first of its kind in North America, in relation to uranium and nuclear energy. I had thought that this afternoon I would give to this House a little bit of the background of the uranium contract. But I felt, when I looked at some of the papers which had been delivered at that conference, that I might more usefully make some use of the statements which had been given, and to save some of the time of this House.

Therefore, if I might, I would like to make reference to a statement which was presented to the first conference on uranium and nuclear energy in Toronto in January of this year. The statement deals with the background of the uranium contracts, who let them, why they were let, how they came to be let, and under what conditions. The statement is to this effect, that it was known in the late 1930's that fission was possible—that is, the splitting of an atom. In the early years of the war the Manhattan project was initiated to make the bomb a reality. The United States, the United Kingdom and Canada contributed, to the project, men and money approximately in proportion to their capacity.

At that time there were only two developed sources of uranium, a mine in the Belgian Congo and the Eldorado mine on Great Bear Lake in the Canadian Northwest Territories.

Of the material required for the Manhattan project, the Belgian Congo mine produced the greater proportion, but the Canadian effort in this respect was not inconsiderable.

It was not long before it was realized that these two sources were limited, and that their output would have to be closely controlled and, if possible, new sources developed. These objectives became the responsibility of the combined development agency which was set up in 1944. This board, on which the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada were represented, was actually a subcommittee of the combined policy committee which came into being under the Quebec agreement. Canada was also represented on the combined policy committee.

Not a great deal was accomplished in the way of developing new sources, and there was perhaps no great urgency until the United Nations failed in its attempt to control atomic weapons in 1947 and the arms race was on. New sources of uranium had to be found at once.

The only known source which could hope to provide the quantities required were the gold ores of the South African Rand, which contained from .25 pound to 1 pound of U_3O_8 per ton, and there was the great advantage of having mining already well-established there. Many of the shales of the western hemisphere contained small quantities, but the per-pound production cost of this source was, and is, extremely high. A few small deposits were also known to exist in the western United States.

It was decided to bring the South African deposits into production as quickly as possible, with the United Kingdom and the United States putting up the money, and the combined development agency acting as the administrative body. As it had been realized at an early date that this source might have to be utilized, metallurgical research had been started in 1946. It was possible to begin construction almost immediately, and the first production was received in 1952.

Meanwhile, exploration was pressed elsewhere. The United States atomic energy commission underwrote exploration programmes in the western United States, and both the United Kingdom and the United States, through the combined development agency, did some work in Australia. But due to the high production costs, the United States withdrew from a large part of this effort at an early stage. The United Kingdom, however, continued with the Australian project. The combined development agency took no part in either the internal United States activity or the Canadian effort.

Canada, through Eldorado, pressed exploration and development in the northwest, and brought in the Beaver Lodge field and attempted, in the late 1940's and early 1950's, to interest the Canadian mining industry with the published price schedule. This was not effective, and it was not until the special price formula was established in 1953 that the public became interested. This interest resulted in the discovery and development of the Blind River and Bancroft areas. Serious work in these fields started in late 1953 and early 1954.

Then, unfortunately for the Canadian uranium industry, the exploration in the western states of the United States began to get results. The Ambrosia Lake field in New Mexico came in, in 1955 and 1956; and the Shirley basin in Wyoming about 18 months later.

With the finding of the Blind River deposits, an adequate supply of uranium for the western world was assured, and with the development of the Ambrosia Lake field and the Shirley basin, the world's proven ability to produce will exceed the estimated requirements until the late 1960's or early 1970's. I would like to point out here that we were adequately warned that a condition of oversupply was certain to develop by a series of public statements as follows:

An excerpt from an address by Mr. W. J. Bennett, at that time as I recall, president of Eldorado, to the Toronto board of trade in January, 1955. And this is what Mr. Bennett said:

It is impossible to say at this time what the demand for uranium will be after March 31, 1962, the present expiry date of the guaranteed market.

Mr. Bennett went on to say:

The military demand may continue at the present rate or may cease altogether. On the other hand, we may have a situation in which there is still government buying but on a reduced scale. Whatever happens, it can be safely predicted that there will be some requirement for uranium for use in atomic power programmes in the early 1960's.

It is evident, however, that the demand for uranium in the early stages of Canadian atomic power programme will take up only a small part of our potential production. Consequently, if the military requirement ceases, or is cut back substantially, Canadian producers may have to look to export markets, and should expect to meet the same conditions which avail in the case of other base metals which are not in short supply.

Then Rt. hon. C. D. Howe made a statement in this matter in August, 1955. Mr. Howe said:

Because of the end-use of uranium which is being supplied to the United States atomic energy commission, it is not possible for security reasons to make public the quantity of uranium which Eldorado will be able to purchase under the special price arrangements, beyond existing contracts. However, I am now able to state that there is a limit on the amount of uranium which will be purchased under the special arrangement.

Mr. Howe said again in March, 1956:

In the circumstances, it seemed desirable that the mining industry and the public should be informed as to the future policy with respect to purchases under the special price arrangement. I stated that the uranium purchased under the special price arrangement was being supplied to United States atomic energy commission, and that there was a limit on the amount of uranium which would be purchased.

Then Mr. W. J. Bennett, in March, 1956, said this, in speaking to the prospectors' and developers' association:

The present information we have, as to the limitation of military requirements through the period up to March 31, 1962, and the uncertainty as to the amount of those requirements, if any, after March 1962, suggests strongly that we should now examine the probable demand for uranium for peaceful purposes at home and abroad, and this I propose to do today.

Our knowledge of uranium requirements has now gone somewhat beyond March of 1962. Both the United Kingdom atomic energy authority and the United States atomic energy commission are at present stockpiling, and existing firm commitments to buy will meet estimated requirements until well into 1967, in the case of the United Kingdom atomic energy authority and, early in 1965, in the case of the United States atomic energy commission.

Again, the military requirement is indefinite after 1965, but where it was about evenly divided before, now the great weight is on the side of a reduction. Due to the uncertainty that all requirements are amply provided until 1965, and the uncertainty of the military requirements thereafter, the United Kingdom and the United States governments decided that they could not justify any additional stockpiling. The options on the Canadian production between March 31, 1962 and December 31, 1966 were dropped.

I would like to point out here that many of the early contracts did not have the option clause, and there was no demand for it. Later, amendments to these contracts were authorized, which included the option clause.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make reference to two other papers which were delivered at the same time on the afternoon of the closing session of this uranium and nuclear energy conference. The closing session was devoted to this one specific subject: "Canadian Uranium Producers and the Future."

In this discussion, there was a panel consisting of some of the most important men in the uranium industry on this continent, and they addressed their remarks to this conference. At this time Dr. D. L. Derry, who is the vice-president of the Rio Tinto Mining Company of Canada Limited, made a statement, to one page of which I would like to make reference if I may. Referring to the announcements of the governments of the United States and Great Britain, he said:

The simultaneous announcement in Ottawa and Washington, on November 6, that the United States would not exercise the options they held on Canadian uranium production, in the years 1962 to 1966, came as a severe blow to the Canadian producers. This was particularly so because the government doubtless, for what they consider to be the best of reasons, had not kept the producers informed after the negotiations with the United States until the final decision was reached. The industry did expect a partial exercise of the options which would have enabled a smoother transition to the period of healthier demand, which is hoped and expected toward the end of the 1960's and the early 1970's.

The short 5-year period of the original contract, compared with those arranged with South Africa, Australia and United States producers, is one of the causes of the present problem, one of which, in looking back, might have been avoided.

In fairness to all, we have to realize that the Canadian contracts were signed in an atmosphere completely different to that in which we now find ourselves. It was an atmosphere in which the problem was one of supply and not of demand, and the United States reserves were 30 million tons of ore coming 4 to 5 pounds per ton instead of the 89 million tons estimated now.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, in relation to that same conference, I would like to refer this House to the estimates which were made by Mr. Mullenbach, who is vice-president of a number of companies in the United States and a consultant on nuclear energy.

Mr. Mullenbach discussed at some length the United States' need for uranium, and pointed out that the supplies of uranium in the United States were being stockpiled, and that they had more than they needed, without mining anything more, to carry them well into the 1960's.

He pointed out that the world demand even by 1970, as I recall, would only be about 30,000 tons.

Mr. Mullenbach pointed out that he felt that that was optimistic by about a third, and his estimate was that by 1970 there would be a need for about 20,000 tons of uranium, of which about 15,000 tons are mined in Canada, and of which 75 per cent., or thereabouts, are mined in Ontario.

Of the 15,000 tons coming from this country, there is added to that another 18,000 or 19,000 tons from the United States, and another 6,000 or 10,000 tons from other places in the world, meaning a very large supply and a much shrinking demand.

I am going to table these documents for the House to consider at its leisure. The 4 documents—no, there are 5 of them—are all with reference to the future of the Canadian uranium industry.

One is an address by Mr. Gilchrist, president of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited; one is by Dr. D. L. Derry, vice-president of Rio Tinto; the third is by Philip Mullenbach who is a consultant on nuclear energy in the United States; the fourth was a statement by Mr. Bongard of Bongard and Company, Toronto; and the last one was by Mr. Aston Johnson, president of Faraday Uranium Mines Limited.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to speak just for a moment about the future of the uranium industry in relation to Ontario Hydro, so that these matters can be put into perspective.

At the present time Ontario Hydro has available about 6 million kilowatts of electricity. By 1980, it will require about 21 million kilowatts of electricity. By 1980, we anticipate that Ontario Hydro will be producing 21 million kilowatts of electricity, one-third from water, one-third from coal, and one-third from nuclear energy.

That means that, of the 21 million kilowatts produced by Hydro and used as we estimate by 1980, 7 million kilowatts will be produced from uranium by way of nuclear energy. We expect that this will cost about $300 a kilowatt, or $2.1 billion, to produce 7 million kilowatts.

Seven million kilowatts will only consume about 800 to 1,000 tons of uranium a year. The total production of Canadian uranium is in the neighbourhood of 15,000 tons and if 7 million kilowatts were to be produced by nuclear energy from uranium, even today—that is, 7 million kilowatts and we already have 6 million and we have a surplus of about 8 to 10 per cent. at the moment—if we were to produce 7 million kilowatts more, we would use up about 800 tons of uranium. That is something like 6 per cent. of the total production of uranium in Canada.

The most important aspect of this matter is that, even if the year 1980 were here today, and we were able to produce 7 million kilowatts of electricity from nuclear energy and thereby consume 800 tons of uranium, nevertheless, this would cost about $2.1 billion. More, we would have no demand for the power which it would create, and it would mean that the present rates of Ontario Hydro, which are bearing up under a debt load of nearly $2 billion, would be asked to assume an additional debt load of another $2 billion. This would make it impossible to have a reasonable rate—I suggest it would be almost treble the present rate—in order to carry a debt of that size without a demand for the electricity which would be produced.

The simple essence of peaceful uses of nuclear energy from Ontario Hydro's point of view is this, that one would produce nuclear energy or electricity from uranium, if it were cheaper to produce it in that way, than to produce it in some other way. But development of nuclear energy must be done on some other basis—on a national basis and in a national way.

The suggestion that one should undertake a programme to develop great quantities of nuclear energy by Hydro at this time, I think, can clearly be seen to be an impossibility because, as I say, we already have an 8 or 10 per cent. surplus of power. If we were to produce 7 million kilowatts more of power, which is more than we already have altogether, it would cost us about $2.1 billion, and it would only use 800 to 1,000 tons of uranium. This is not an insignificant contribution by any means to the uranium industry, but it is clear that this is not the solution of the problem.

In any event, it would be virtually impossible from a scientific, a contracting, or an engineering point of view to undertake a programme of producing 7 million kilowatts of electricity at this time.

This is true for many reasons. For instance, we are presently experimenting and working with heavy water—a cooled, heavy water moderated, reactor—on the Ottawa River, and we will be commencing the construction of one of the largest reactors of its type in the world on Lake Huron. The difficulty with nuclear reactors, or one of the many difficulties, is the unpredictability of its operation. Scientific teams can spend years in research as to problems that are likely to happen, and succeed in whipping them, and instead of those problems being eliminated, a new set of problems develop that they had never anticipated.

One of the great problems in addition to unanticipated development is the problem of cost involved in these things. The programme on Lake Huron is going to cost this province, through Ontario Hydro, approximately $60 million, and it is to be hoped it is going to produce power at as cheap a rate as coal. Whether, in fact, it will or not is impossible yet to say, but the people at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Hydro are highly hopeful that this will be so.

At the moment, Canada is experimenting basically with, and building basically, a heavy water cooled, heavy water moderated, natural uranium-fired reactor. There are other countries in the world which are dealing with organically cooled, heavy water moderated, highly enriched uranium reactors. Some of them are working with liquid metal coolers, some of them with sodium, potassium sodium. A number of others, such as Great Britain, are experimenting with graphite and gas.

One of the great advantages that the reactor, which we are working with in this country, has—as far as this country is concerned—is that it avoids the enrichment of uranium. It can use our uranium in its natural condition, and this has a psychological national effect on sovereign nations throughout this world. This is so because, if we succeed in pioneering successfully—as we are hopeful we will—the development and efficient operation of a heavy water cooled, heavy water moderated, natural uranium reactor, then we expect that we should be able to sell this reactor to other countries in the world who wish to be freed from one source of supply of their fuel.

There is only one country in the world which sells, commercially, enriched uranium, and that is the United States. Anyone who buys a reactor which can be fuelled only by enriched uranium is quite logically tied to the source of the fuel supply, namely the country which supplies it, the United States.

One of the many advantages that the reactor, with which this country is working at the moment, has is that, if a country in Europe or any other country in the world purchases it, it will enable that country to use its own resources of uranium to fuel the reactor. There is some uranium to be found in almost every country of the world.

In addition to this, it should be said that this particular reactor is designed for our specific needs in this specific area of southern Ontario, where it is most likely to be used as a base load plant. The cost of such a plant, of fuelling it and operating it, is so expensive that it could not efficiently be used economically for peaking, but rather must be used as a base load plant.

In conclusion, just before turning to the specific steps which this province through Hydro, or directly—the province and the provincial government—have taken, I would like to refer, if I may for a moment, to the question of enrichments and diffusion plants.

I am speaking from memory when I say that, when one takes ore out of the ground and processes it, the one atom in the uranium which will split most easily is an atom called U235, uranium atom 235. There is only 119 of this atom to 16,546 of another kind of atom which does not split nearly so easily. That is normally unenriched uranium, 119 of one kind of atom to 16,546 of another, and that means about .07 per cent. of the total volume is in the atom that one wants, .07 per cent.

To enrich uranium, the procedure is to increase this proportion to something better than 119—to maybe 150 or 200 perhaps—to increase the percentage of U235, the easily fissionable atom, from .07 per cent. to something like 1, 2 or 3 per cent. of the total volume of the mineral.

Now, enriched uranium is produced through what is called a diffusion plant. The United States has 3 of them, and they have spent about $2.5 billion on them. But their programme has been one of military use, and their plants are written off, and they can practically give away the production that comes out of them because they have already capitalized this cost.

If we were to get into the enrichment programme in this country—it could never, of course, be done by a single jurisdiction, but would have to be done, if at all, on a national basis—I myself as an individual would not favour it. I am convinced that we will be able to sell very little enriched uranium to ourselves, and I do not think we can likely compete in the outside world, in this field, with the United States. Indeed, it would cost this nation somewhere between $200 million and $500 million.

There have recently been estimates of a Dr. Davis from British Columbia that the cost would be $200 million. We are more inclined in the department to think that the cost would be in the neighbourhood of $500 million, simply to increase the proportion of U235 in the mineral to something like 3 per cent. This increase permits one to use a smaller reactor and the fuel burns longer.

Now, whether we should get into enriched uranium on a national basis is another matter. I just wanted to make some reference to it this afternoon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to make reference, if I may, to the specific items which have been undertaken by this government—either directly itself or through its agency, Ontario Hydro—in connection with the uranium problem. I wish also to refer to nuclear energy and the attendant problems that are associated with people and municipalities in connection with what is generally known today as the “stretch-out programme.”

1. On November 18, 1959, as soon as the stretch-out programme was announced, and we were in a position to assemble what would be a proper and wise course of action for this province to take—one that would be realistic and capable of attainment—I, as the representative of the government, attended in Ottawa upon the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill), to present to him the position taken by this province. And I presented to him a programme to which I would like to make reference, which had 7 different aspects.

(1) I pointed out to the hon. Minister that Ontario desired a solution which is in the best interest of every province and of this nation as a whole.

(2) I stated that we believed that the Canadian interest would be best served if the Crown-owned Eldorado Mining and Refining Company ceased to mine uranium in competition with private firms, and that the undelivered part of its contract should be spread amongst the private producers throughout Canada.

(3) I stated that, in addition to these problems, the major concern in Ontario was the plight of the workers as well as the problems faced by these separate municipalities in this province. To minimize the effects of the stretch-out programme, we felt that no contract should be altered, at least until the spring.

(4) As a specific aid to those employed in the industry, and those who might be displaced, I recommended to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that he should make every effort to obtain severance pay for these workers.

(5) I asked, on behalf of the government, that arrangements be made so that the federal and provincial governments could offer vocational training to the displaced workers.

(6) I requested the federal government to use its powers, under The Unemployment Insurance Act, to make special payments in any areas which might, because of the circumstances under this stretch-out programme, be considered or termed distress areas, and that aid be given in the transportation of any workers and their families who must change the location of their residence.

(7) I promoted the suggestion, on behalf of the government of Ontario, that a joint provincial-federal committee should explore and study the possibilities of the introduction of new industries into this area, to study the number of displaced workers and their families that there might be, what could be done for them, what other alternative opportunities could be offered to them, and to co-ordinate generally the number of problems which were associated with such a programme.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that then was the basis of the representations which I have made to the federal government on your behalf, on behalf of the hon. members of this House and the government, and this was confirmed by correspondence between the respective governments.

2. The second step instantly taken was the calling of the first conference of its kind to be held in Canada—a conference on uranium and nuclear energy which was held in January, 1960, here in Toronto. To this conference came some of the most outstanding experts in the nuclear energy field in the world, to address those 450 to 500 delegates who came.

This was sponsored by the Ontario government in the belief that it was essential to get down to the basic root of this problem, and to hear the expressions of opinion of those involved in these same kinds of problems around the world, as to what solutions were possible, what the real problem was, when it would be met and in what manner.

This conference, I respectfully submit to you, Mr. Speaker, was a success. It was a success basically because of the efforts of people other than myself. But its attendance was proof that there was a very vital, vibrant, fundamental interest in the problem, and a desire to do what could be done and at least to know the worst of the situation.

3. From this conference arose a forum, and I would like to make reference to what that forum is, what it is doing today, what its objectives are, and who are parties to it. And this is from a statement which we prepared at that time in the department.

In connection with the first Canadian conference on uranium and atomic energy, several Canadian organizations were invited to a meeting at Queen's Park—for a number of meetings in fact—in December and January. These meetings are continuing now, to discuss the desirability of forming a Canadian nuclear association.

It was generally agreed that a considerable effort would have to be expended in analyzing the form and objectives of such an association, in order that individual companies could properly assess its merits. It was, therefore, decided that a steering committee should be established to perform this analysis and co-ordinate the initial information.

The following organizations agreed to be represented on this steering committee: A.M.F. Atomics Canada Limited, Canadian Bechtel Corporation; Canadian General Electric Company; Canadian Westinghouse; Foundation Company of Canada; Orenda Engines; Rio Tinto Mining Company of Canada Limited; and the University of Toronto.

In addition, the following organizations were represented at the meeting and expressed interest in the work of the committee: The Canadian Metal Mining Association, and Ontario Hydro.

The steering committee made recommendations that there be a chairman, a vice-chairman, a secretary and so forth.

In order to have some basis for discussion at the conference, the following tentative objectives were suggested to help create and maintain an environment favourable to the growth of an energetic and responsible industry, united in the aim of deriving the maximum domestic benefits from Canada's abundant natural resources of uranium, and from her knowledge and experience in the field of nuclear energy.

To achieve this objective the association will:

(a) Provide the means of co-ordinated discussions between the association and organizations responsible for formulating nuclear policies within Canada.

(b) Help promote the utilization of nuclear energy.

(c) Encourage the participation of industrial organizations and educational institutions in research and development in all uses of nuclear material, radioisotopes and radiation.

(d) Act as an information centre for member organizations.

(e) Analyze main problems and where necessary set up study groups.

(f) Distribute a journal.

(g) Offer optimum assistance in preparation of special regulations affecting member organizations.

(h) Organize conferences and meetings as required.

(i) Perform such other tasks as will further the interest of member organizations.

Further consideration will be given to these objectives and the ways and means by which the proposed organization may serve to achieve them.

Generally speaking, I can report to this House that this forum is, I think, making very useful progress and we are doing everything we can in The Department of Energy Resources to assist it. From it, we are confident, may come, and can come, some very useful results to which I will make reference in a moment, if I may.

4. The fourth direct step, as far as the uranium industry and nuclear energy are concerned, are the steps being taken by Ontario Hydro as follows:

(a) Ontario Hydro organized and headed the feasibility team in the first instance for the first nuclear generating station which will come into operation next year.

(b) We have contributed financially and heavily through Ontario Hydro to the construction and operation of what is called NPTD2. This is the first nuclear generating station which will go into operation in June of 1961. This plant will produce about 20,000 kilowatts and is located near Rolphton on the Ottawa River.

(c) Ontario Hydro is co-operating in the planning and construction of CANDU which will be the 20,000-kilowatt nuclear generating station to be built on Lake Huron near Kincardine and which will come into production in 1964.

(d) The nuclear power plant division is headed by Ontario Hydro engineers and scientists, and is located on our property near the Manby service centre, and is contributed to financially by us.

5. The fifth contribution that this province has made, directly through its Legislature and its government, to this development was, firstly, in relation to Elliot Lake and Blind River and, secondly, to the Bancroft area. This province has put up in the neighbourhood of $40 million to $50 million in relation to the development of these 3 separate areas.

6. A reiteration by this province to the federal government that we are desirous in joining them in a joint study of ways and means to assist the municipalities and the persons involved in the stretch-out programme.

7. We are at the moment, through The Department of Energy Resources, studying how we and the Ontario research foundation can assist in developing the uses to which uranium can be put, for example, to improve steel alloys.

I would want to point out to this House at once that it is possible to improve the quality of low-grade steel by using perhaps a quarter-pound of uranium per ton. It is also possible to increase steel's tensile strength by using 4 pounds of uranium in a ton of steel. This may well turn out, if it is successful, to be cheaper than other alloy metals. Also it is possible to enhance the fatigue resistance factor of steel by mixing refined uranium with steel. Lastly, we think it may be possible to render steels more resistant to corrosion by the introduction of refined uranium in the steel.

These point to a possible market in the automotive industry—if they are successful and used to the extent that they can be used on a tonnage basis—for approximately 180 million pounds of refined uranium a year, or nearly 90,000 tons of ore, assuming that about 85 per cent. of the tonnage of the ore actually turns up in the form of refined uranium.

8. The Department of Energy Resources is at this stage—and has been through its energy studies group for some time—studying what we have called an Atomic Energy Act, and the Act is very much along the lines of the New York Atomic Energy Act. But it is not in condition to present to this House at this stage, and I doubt very much if it will be at this sitting of the House.

This deals with an extremely complicated subject. The problems of staff and persons competent to study it, and analyze it, collate it, and so forth, are complicated ones, but we are proceeding with the Act, and we think ultimately that we may be in a position to present it to the House if we feel it can be used.

9. Ontario Hydro has made a direct and large grant of $250,000 to McMaster University, to aid McMaster University in relation to its reactor development programme at the university.

These then, Mr. Speaker, are some of the aspects of the background of this matter. I have tried to give some indication of the early history of why the uranium industry came into being, and it was basically because of the need for military development in the United States. But the curtailment of that programme in the United States has now thrown the uranium industry back on the resource of supplying uranium to the industries which will use it for peaceful purposes.

There has been not nearly the expansive development throughout the world of nuclear energy as there had been expected.

It was expected, for example, that within a couple of years EURATOM—those are the European nations—would have made use of some very generous offers made by the United States in relation to a one million kilowatt programme that was offered to them on very generous terms. Instead of that, EURATOM is watching very carefully what we are doing in this province, perhaps believing that the reactor upon which we are experimenting—and which we are hoping and believing will be the answer to our needs—may also be the answer to the base load needs of EURATOM for two reasons: one, because of its own particular indigenous characteristics; and the other because it will permit Europe to use the resources which it has of its own, namely, its own uranium supplies which do not require enrichment, and free it from any American market of supply.

The possibility of Ontario Hydro developing a faster programme in relation to its present development is unlikely, both from the cost element, and from the fact that we already have a surplus of energy for our needs. But we are watching this carefully, contributing heavily to it, and working alongside Atomic Energy of Canada in this connection.

As I pointed out, there is no point whatsoever for Ontario Hydro to produce electricity by one means that is more expensive than the means by which it can now produce it, namely, in terms of coal. There are other jurisdictions that can make a contribution in the development of nuclear energy. Ontario is accepting some responsibility in relation to its capacities in that connection, and I have referred to this House the steps we have taken.

These matters, Mr. Speaker, I have discussed on a number of occasions with the leaders of the community, of the church, of industries, and other aspects of everyday life, of the Bancroft and Elliot Lake areas. I know that they believe, at least they have expressed to me, that this province has taken every forward-looking step to be of assistance to them, and they feel that we have been on the job and that we have done a good job on their behalf.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the explanation of the hon. Minister, it was my intention to move the adjournment of this House to discuss this very problem. I respectfully submit that, in introducing his remarks this afternoon, the hon. Minister said that this was a matter of great importance and a matter of public urgency.

Therefore, I think that he has made the case for the motion that I am going to make.

Without any further explanation, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver, the adjournment of this House to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the social and economic crisis that will befall Elliot Lake as a result of the now definite announcement that large-scale unemployment will ensue in the near future.

In speaking on this, it is superfluous, of course, to point to the social consequences that will result from the decision that was announced in the public press last night. Something like 3,000 to 4,000 men are going to be unemployed within the course of the next year.

Now, this concerns not only those men, but their families in addition.

I do not think there is any doubt in anybody's mind that this particular problem relates itself in part to, and reminds me of, a situation that occurred last year in the A. V. Roe situation.

At that time, this House was advised that the best brains in Ontario would be assembled just as quickly as possible to assure that some solution would be brought about. In the interval, we have heard no specific report.

Mr. Speaker, I insist on this particular occasion that this House bestir itself, and demonstrate that it has red blood within its veins, and determine right now that, immediately, the committee on energy is going to be called, and that the heads of the respective uranium companies in Ontario will appear before that committee, along with labour representation and representation from the municipalities of Bancroft and Elliot Lake.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard an explanation from the hon. Minister, a typical explanation. I am not sure that he is wholly right or that he is wholly wrong. But the one thing that I am determined to do, as leader of the Opposition, is to insist that this House take upon itself the responsibility of finding out more than we know right now.

The hon. Minister has suggested that about 800 tons of uranium would be used by Hydro if, in 1980, one-third of their total capacity of electrical energy was generated by atomic energy. Eight hundred tons is a small portion of the 15,000 tons that they are currently producing. But I am advised by Dr. Derry that, instead of being 800 tons, it will be something like 1,000 to 2,000 tons.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I do not know, but that is what he has said publicly, and I certainly would like to know who is right.

Secondly, why should we import coal from the United States in order to produce one-third of our electrical energy if, instead, in 1980, we could produce two-thirds of our total electrical energy by means of atomic energy? I suggest that the 800 tons automatically becomes 1,600 tons and, if Dr. Derry is right, it becomes 3,200 tons, or something in that neighbourhood.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday in India the Russians again beat us to the gun by signing a power arrangement, as I understand it, with the Indian government. Now, how long are we going to stand by and see this sort of thing happen, time and time again? When are we going to stand up as Canadians and take pride in our particular accomplishments?

For 4 or 5 or 6 years we said that we have the reactor, the heavy water reactor. The hon. Minister said today that he is going to call it CANDU. I suggest that we call it "Will Do," and that we be determined, within the next year, to demonstrate to the world that we can produce electrical energy by atomic generation, not as cheaply as coal, but cheaper than coal.

I am advised that, if the heavy water reactor is successful, it will produce electrical energy about 12 to 20 per cent. cheaper than coal.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Macaulay.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, all right, the hon. Minister shakes his head, but I say to him that is the very reason I want this committee assembled to find out.

If it is possible to produce it cheaper, and if it is possible to use more than we are talking about at the present time, then I think I have real support for the argument that I made in the Throne speech, namely, that we should inaugurate a crash programme and spend money at Rolphton and at Point Douglas, to determine as quickly as humanly and scientifically possible, whether or not we are right when we think that the heavy water reactor is going to be able to demonstrate itself to be a cheaper means of producing electrical power than either of the traditional means, that is coal or gas.

These are things that bestir the hearts and the minds of people. I am just concerned that this government, and the government in Ottawa, are doing nothing more than taking a defensive position. Certainly one can drag this matter out. Certainly one can make explanations that sound good. But that is not going to create jobs for the 3,000 men who are going to become unemployed in Elliot Lake in the course of the next few months.

Mr. Speaker, it is those men, those men who went there to pioneer in this field, in the great mining industry—just as the technicians did at A. V. Roe over the period of the last 15 years—who are going to find themselves without support of any responsible government in Canada, either at the federal level or the provincial level.

Surely we have enough determination in our minds and hearts to assure that what assistance is required—and I do not know specifically what assistance is required—will be forthcoming.

There is an answer to this thing. I have every confidence in my own mind that, if we make a determination today to find out whether or not the heavy water reactor is going to be more economical than the graphite reactor or other reactors, we could do it very speedily. Nothing is impossible. I suggest to hon. members if the Russians were in the same position, they would not be talking in the same fashion as we are talking, but they would be out demonstrating and plowing money into their project in order to bring it to finality. That is what we must do.

What pride we would have today if, instead of having the Indian nation committed to the Russian nation, we could have demonstrated that we can produce electrical energy with an atomic reactor cheaper than any of the traditional means. Now, I do not know, that may be impossible. However, at the present time we just do not know.

The one point that I want to make to this House is simply that, if the government will not act on this and call the committee promptly, then I, as leader of the Opposition, will make it my responsibility to call a similar committee and get on with this work.

Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that, when we talk about a national flag, when we talk about national pride, we are only talking about indications of what is in the minds and the hearts of the people of Canada today. We have a country unbounded in natural resources, a country that can move dramatically ahead, a country that will move dramatically ahead.

But it will not, Mr. Speaker, attain that pre-eminence, it will not move ahead, if we sit in this House and simply accept the traditional explanation that has been made here today.

It may be that it is right. But I say to hon. members that we may not, as responsible legislators, accept the explanation that has been made as a final and determined one.

Specifically, I would address these questions to the hon. Minister.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to the schedule M of The Vocational Training Co-Ordination Act, of which the hon. Minister spoke, that the initiation of it must come from the provincial government.

My understanding is that the federal government will contribute 50 per cent., or one-half, of that cost if the provincial government will initiate such a programme.

What I would like to know is whether or not this government is prepared to initiate such a programme on behalf of those people who might be, and will be, unemployed within the next few months?

Secondly, what I would like to know with respect to severance pay is simply this: We all agree that something must be done in this respect, particularly with respect to unemployment insurance. What specifically has the government done, other than to make a request of the federal authorities that they do something?

Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that in these areas, and possibly in the area of moratoriums and mortgage moratoriums again, this particular government can move forward and can demonstrate positively that it is prepared to do those things that obviously are required to be done immediately. Those things I would like answered this afternoon.

Fundamentally, I want the assurance of the government that, at the earliest possible opportunity, the 3 groups that I made reference to will be called before the committee on energy; that is, representatives of the industry, representatives of the workmen, and representatives of the municipalities concerned.

Mr. Speaker, no matter that has come before this House in a long while has disturbed me as much as this particular issue. I do think we have tied, into one common problem, the human difficulties that exist with respect to the unemployed; the pride that we all have in northern Ontario and the potential of that area; and, thirdly, the great scientific achievements that may, or may not, be ours in the relatively next few years.

Nothing that we can do will help us more than make the determination of whether the heavy water reactor is, or is not, scientifically and economically possible. If it is, Mr. Speaker, and we make that determination earlier, I, for one, believe there are many markets that will open themselves to us.

I know that uranium is not the precious mineral that we may have thought it to be some years ago. But the simple fact is that the country that gets the jump—if I may use that word—with respect to demonstration of how uranium and atomic energy can be used economically to produce electrical energy, that nation I am confident, in addition to the sale of the reactor, will sell the raw oxide.

It is in that area that we hold a majestic and an extraordinary position, and I suggest,

Mr. Speaker, that, herein, we can combine the pride that we have had in our province, the hope that we have had in our province, and the humane attitude that we are required to take to those unfortunate men who put their time and their efforts, and also their families, to great inconvenience to pioneer in our great mining industry and now suddenly find themselves in great difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, no greater opportunity can be afforded this House than to pursue the course that I tried to outline.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that, under the rules of the House on such a motion, any hon. member may speak for only 10 minutes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Who told the hon. member that?

Mr. Lawrence: The hon. leader of the Opposition has been going for 12 minutes now.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is just too bad. The hon. member is a regular birdwatcher.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. George is perfectly right—10 minutes is the time. But on the other hand, I think that the hon. leader of the Opposition might be allowed a little leeway on that. However, all the rest of us should be confined to 10 minutes. Yes, including me. I will sit down in 10 minutes.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, rising to support the resolution of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I will try to confine my remarks within the 10-minute period which the hon. member for St. George has drawn to your attention.

In listening very carefully to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, I noticed that he put his finger on one of the main aspects of this problem, then carefully skated around it and said very little—in fact, said nothing—about it. That was when he said that the projects at Elliot Lake, Bancroft, and in Ontario generally—the uranium mining projects—were developed at the outset to provide for United States military needs.

It is strange indeed that, during these past several years, nothing in a concrete way has come from this House in the form of resolution, nor has it come from the federal House, to point out the responsibilities in this particular area.

I was likewise surprised when the hon. Minister of Energy Resources pointed out that, in January, 1955, Mr. Bennett of Eldorado Mines indicated there was some uncertainty about the future of uranium. In August, 1955, Rt. hon. C. D. Howe expressed some fears about its future. Mr. Bennett went on to say that in March, 1956, Rt. hon. Mr. Howe said there was some concern about the limits on the amount which may be purchased in the United States. According to the hon. Minister's remarks this afternoon, Mr. Bennett, again in March, 1956, said that we should examine demands for peaceful purposes because the weight of military opinion in the United States seemed to be more on the side of reduction than purchase.

Then, Mr. Speaker, while all these discussions were taking place during 1955 and 1956, it indicated quite clearly, I submit, that there was cause for concern. It was not until November 18, 1959, when the bear was in the tent tearing it to pieces, that the hon. Minister bestirred himself—I would not necessarily say the present hon. Minister of Energy Resources because he is new at his post—but no representative of this government appears to have approached the government at Ottawa, at least they have not said so to us, until that date in 1959 when these several points enumerated were laid down.

Now, I do not propose to be a military or political expert. But I will recall, Mr. Speaker, to the attention of this House, that about a year ago, on February 26, hon. members will find on page 642 of Hansard 1959, that I had this to say during the debate on the estimates of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney). I said.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one area in the north which gives me great joy and yet very grave apprehension. I refer to the Elliot Lake area in the near north. And I cannot share for one or two reasons some of the optimism expressed by the hon. Minister of Mines, optimism which I would greatly enjoy sharing, but here is yet another great Canadian development handicapped to the whim of American government and policy. Here is another area where a snap of the United States' president's fingers could reduce a multi-million dollar Ontario investment to ashes. Here is another area of industry where again the government has made no plans to offset what seems to be unavoidable American action—to purchase not one ounce more of uranium from Canada than their contract allows.

These contracts will expire in 1962, and while there will be a Liberal-Democrat president in the United States at that time, he will have had little time to adjust the economic chaos he will have inherited. A military mind in the United States has encouraged the development of a large number of mining properties with the sole intent of shutting them down, after production has been attained, in the knowledge that they could be reopened if a serious world emergency developed.

But meanwhile they have developed uranium deposits of their own to fill their own foreseeable requirements and peaceful use of this resource.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is up to this government, I say, to send a resolution to Ottawa to send the bill for this whole effort to the United States of America.

I, as a Canadian, and as a member of this House, firmly believe that it is about time we started becoming Canadians and behaving and living like Canadians. If it was necessary at all, in the early 1950's to extend ourselves to provide for the defence of the United States of America and continental defence generally, then I think it is the business of the American government today to pick up the bill, to be men about it—at least be gentlemen about it—and recognize that Canada has extended her very best effort on their behalf and it is time that they did likewise with us.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I would say this, over whatever protest might be made. I am getting a bit sick and tired, too, as a Canadian of seeing the present administration in Ottawa changing pace. In 1911 the Tory cry was: "No truck or trade with the Yankees." But the cry in 1960, in 1959, in 1958 and in 1957 has been and it still is, "Truck or trade with the Yankees" and no one else. Let us put a stop to it and send the bill to them.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of these people now, up at Elliot Lake—some 4,000 of them will soon be out of work. I am thinking also of the homes of those people. I am thinking of the people there, too, who have opened places of business there, who have invested millions of dollars of their own funds.

I want to point out that one of the reasons why so many people have gone there, and have invested money, is because they took their cue from hon. members over there. They watched their actions. They think—hon. members can smile if they want to, but they will wipe that off their faces—these people watched with interest the many millions of dollars, of the people's money of this province, that were being poured down the sewer. Make no mistake about that.

This government went about its work in planning Elliot Lake as though it was going to be a long-term affair. But now we find it actually was a disgraceful thing when the government opposite poured down the sewers so many millions of the people's funds. I say this because now the hon. Minister, at the head of The Department of Energy Resources, gave us an epistle written by heaven only knows who. I want to state this, that there are only some 101 words in the 23rd Psalm, and it was a more beautiful document than that speech that you just passed out.

I want to further add that you made a statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the Speaker says "order" the members must sit down.

I point out to the members that, in their debates, they must address the chair and not direct remarks to the other side of the House. All remarks must be addressed to and through the chair.

Mr. Reaume: I started out, you know, by addressing the chair. I did not know that after every other word I should say "Mr. Speaker." However, I will.

I just want to point out one thing more, that I think is of importance, if you will, Mr. Speaker. In the remarks of the hon. Minister who is the head of the department involved now, he made this one statement. Now, I did not write it down but I think I am accurate when I say, in his words,

I was talking to the people of Elliot Lake and they are very pleased with the actions that we are taking on behalf of the people of Elliot Lake.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hear, hear.

Mr. Reaume: Well now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell hon. members who those people are. Elliot Lake has a board of supervisors, and that board is appointed by the people in power, and if they do not agree with everything that this government says they too are unemployed, Mr. Speaker.

I submit—and I think this is a good idea—that this government should immediately disband its board of supervisors in Elliot Lake, because they are nothing more or less than a group of wooden soldiers who pop up and down every time that this government says to do so. This government should have enough faith and courage in the good people of Elliot Lake to let them go out, of their own free will, and vote for a mayor and a council that will carry out properly the wishes of the people of that new and growing town. In that way, and in that way only, can they bring to the attention of Ottawa and this government the problems that they now have.

I say that this government has lost face with the people of Elliot Lake, that it should at once let its choir go. The people there need no more stooges. What a remark to make—for the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to say: "I have talked to the people of Elliot Lake." Well, if he talked to the people of Elliot Lake, then he talked only to the people he put there, and those people who are singing his songs in Elliot Lake. But the hon. Minister should go up there now. Instead of people saying what a fine fellow he is, they would probably ride him out of town on a flatcar.

Hon. Mr. Frost: A great contribution. A fine solution to this matter.

Mr. Reaume: That is all right. The parrot is at it again.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): If this side-debate has concluded, Mr. Speaker, I will try to make a few brief remarks on the motion presented by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hear, hear. Everything has been irrelevant over there.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, we had a very enlightening and detailed statement a little earlier this afternoon from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources relating to plans extending as far as 1980, which the government and others have in mind, and I do not deny they are important. We have had suggestions from the hon. leader of the Opposition and others that we should call the committee on energy together to undertake immediate investigations.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the workers in the Elliot Lake area, who are facing almost immediate unemployment, will not be able to eat either long-term plans or investigations. They are faced with an immediate crisis, and if we are going to consider effective action to deal with that crisis, Mr. Speaker, I think we should try to get to the crux of the matter as to why it has arisen.

Many references have been made to our status as a nation, and the importance of building our nation up. I agree with these.

But the great problem, Mr. Speaker, is that here, in this uranium situation—as in many, many other cases—our great national interests and resources have been sold down the river to private promoters. That is the basic cause of the difficulty we are in at the present time.

We used to have a theory when I went to college that people who made profits made them because they took risks. But Rt. hon. C. D. Howe and others have developed an entirely new theory of profit. This is that the people, through their governments and in other ways, take the risk and the private promoters take the profits. That is exactly the situation which has developed in Elliot Lake.

The promoters in the Elliot Lake field have not taken any risk at all. Mr. Larry Sefton of the united steelworkers, at the conference the hon. Minister referred to, indicated that in one group of mines the shareholders put in $25 million of their own money, and even if the worst comes to the worst they are going to take out $160 million. They can afford to sit around.

If some of these plans the hon. Minister was talking about mature, they will be there to cash in again, and even if they do not mature they have done extremely well.

But who is left holding the bag? It is the worker who has invested in a home, who has invested in facilities in the community—churches and so on—the small businessman who has invested in his business, the provincial government which has invested great sums in roads and school grants and so on, the federal government, which has invested in research.

All these will suffer, while the promoters will come out with a very juicy profit under the very worst of circumstances.

And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that since this industry is entirely the pampered pet of the federal government, since it would not exist without the activities of the federal government, since it will make all these profits as a result of their activities, and also the related activities of the provincial government, the time has come for the government to step in and say that these companies must disgorge some of their profits for the benefit of the people who are losing all their investment, or most of it—both in terms of capital and in terms of a part of their lives.

That is the situation facing these people.

When we talk about going to Ottawa, I would suggest that we should not only send a resolution to Ottawa, I would suggest that we should send a deputation to Ottawa, not to make any cracks about the United States because I do not know what we can do about the United States government, but to try to get co-ordinated action by the federal and the provincial governments. This co-ordinated action should deal with these companies to force them to adopt policies which will, to some degree at any rate, mitigate the losses of the workers and merchants who have invested so much in this area for the benefit of the companies. That is the immediate, the absolutely urgent, action that should be taken.

All these other programmes for developing the uses of nuclear energy are very important, Mr. Speaker. But they are not going to help the people who are faced with loss of everything, or almost everything, right now. I submit that is the action we should now take.

These companies can afford to disgorge some profits, they exist only by grace of the federal government which put them in business. They should be made to do something now, something on a very extensive and dramatic scale, to assist the workers and the merchants who are now faced with loss of almost everything.

That, I submit, Mr. Speaker, is the urgent thing, and the thing that should be done right away.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of northern Ontario, I must support very definitely the resolution submitted by my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer).

I know that I speak the mind of all the centres in northern Ontario. Many of them have, in the past, suffered disaster and they know just what may happen in Elliot Lake.

At the moment, or very soon, there will be a debate in the federal House about the death penalty. We at this moment are debating the death penalty of a little community. It is just an infant, and something must be done. I do not know how it can be done, but I know the people of northern Ontario, the people of Elliot Lake, the people who went there because of the rosy picture that was painted, are going to be suffering very soon unless we do something about it.

I include here what the editor of the Elliot Lake Standard has said, that it is the worst crisis since this model town was built, and that something must be done. He says:

Governments created this, it is a creature of the government, and if the government created it, surely now you are not going to let it die.

You have created it, both this government and the federal government.

I do not know just what can be done, but I think certainly something must be done.

There are thousands—as has been pointed out—who will be out of work very soon. There are all kinds of beautiful homes there. I know that friends of mine have gone there and sunk into it all their life-savings because they were given the impression that Elliot Lake would be one of the great cities of the north. I understand even the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) has, in brochures and films, painted a wonderful picture of Elliot Lake. There are, I know, several churches, schools, hospitals.

I repeat what the editor of this paper said:

Give it back life so that this great effort and opportunity of which you bragged so much may live.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, the thing that interests me most about this debate so far—from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources and from the hon. leader of the Opposition and his hon. colleagues—is that they have slurred over the basic, most shameful fact in this whole development. When this development took place at Elliot Lake, there was $325 million to $350 million invested, and we established a welfare state for corporations.

An hon. member: Nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no nonsense about it at all. What are we going to do to meet the needs of the workers?

Mr. Reaume: What about the jobs of people?

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is the hon. member going to do?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I speak please? I did not interrupt the hon. leader of the Opposition when he got up and gave his heart-rending account, but I just want to point to this, that the companies that invested $325 million from the very outset of their contract were guaranteed that they were going to get all of this $325 million back by 1962. This is the most scandalous kind of fleecing of the public treasury to protect the interests of the corporations.

In a moment I will get around to the little people who are paying the sacrifice.

These firms were guaranteed by the federal government, through the contracts that they had with Eldorado, and the price that they got on their contracts was not only enough for a complete capital write-off inside of a 5-year period, but also insured a good profit in the same period.

Now, I will grant to hon. members, Mr. Speaker, and I confirmed this with a man who was involved with one of these companies no later than this past weekend, that there are some of the smaller marginal companies who are not going to come out of this so well.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): That is right. That is right. Name them all.

Mr. MacDonald: But what has happened to them? I will tell hon. members—the same thing that usually happens in this kind of an economic crisis: they are going to be absorbed by the big fellows, so that the big fellows will have even a bigger strangle-hold on this little welfare state that was established by the governments in this nation for their benefit.

The point that the hon. member for Woodbine has pointed up so sharply is that, in considering the plight of the workers, it is they who are going to bear 100 per cent. of the sacrifice.

Business-dominated governments at Ottawa and at Queen's Park have gone along with the proposition of underwriting this development so that there was not any risk at all for the big fellows in the development. Mr. Speaker, the only reason why I rose was to lay that background, and then to show just how this government still goes along with this approach.

The hon. Minister listed 6 or 7 points that he raised with Ottawa—one of which is that Eldorado should get out of production and, in effect, leave it to the private companies.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Correct, correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Prime Minister says "correct." Is this going to meet the needs of the workers? It will not meet the needs of the workers because Eldorado has workers, too, so if Eldorado gets out those workers will be laid off.

What, in effect, this government has suggested to Ottawa is that they should continue to pamper private companies. They should have the government-owned company, which has underwritten this whole development backed by the Treasury of Canada, get out and hand this resource on a silver platter to these people who have lost no money. Ten or 15 years from now, during which time they will nurture their assets, they will become productive again, then they will get all of the profits. Meanwhile, we will have had to carry the burden of a risk.

Sure, Mr. Speaker, I can weep, along with the hon. leader of the Opposition, for the little men who have sacrificed their homes, the small businessmen who have invested money and lost it. I can weep on behalf of them. But what are these business-dominated governments willing to do to use some of the profits that these companies have made to meet the urgent crisis that is faced by the workers and the small businessmen? This is the answer that we are seeking, and this is the answer that the government has not given.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I just say a word or two about this matter because it happens that a portion of this industry is in my own riding and I am very familiar with it.

I know something of the problems of these people, little municipalities and little homes that are involved in this. Therefore, I may say to hon. members, sir, that my interest is certainly on behalf of the workers in these areas and the municipalities that are concerned. My discussions with the hon. Minister of Energy Resources have been along that line.

Now, first of all, may I say to hon. members that, for several years back, this government has been very actively concerned, and engaged, in trying to find ways and means in which uranium could be used, other than for wartime purposes. We have been deeply engaged in that. It is now some 4 or 5 years ago, I think, that I, with Rt. hon. C. D. Howe, took part in the opening of the experimental plant at Chalk River which now has been revamped, and which has been changed to meet the current situation.

Even further back than that, in 1951, this government was engaged in the practical use of uranium for health purposes, getting away from the angle of wartime destruction.

I would say that we are partners, through Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada.

My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, talked about the Russians. Might I say to him that here is a document regarding the Canada-India reactor of which our province is a partner, and is presently being constructed in India, to find uses for the very product that we are trying to make use of, and to which we are referring in this debate. I would just table this reference to the Canada-India reactor in which our province is engaged. The hon. leader of the Opposition should be proud of it, and I have no doubt that he is.

Might I say also that, in connection with the conference that he proposed—and I may say that I am always interested in constructive proposals—the conference that he proposed in the committee on energy, may I point out, was the subject matter of the conference that was held here last January, and all of the proceedings of that are available for hon. members of the House.

I would suggest that, if my hon. friend would rub off all the political additions to his address and look at the core of the matter, he would be very proud of the fact that this province is really the leading jurisdiction of Canada in the use of uranium for peacetime purposes. Indeed, it is one of the leading jurisdictions anywhere in the world.

The hon. member for Bruce, sitting behind him, knows something about the immensity of the work being done by the province of Ontario because in his riding is being constructed the huge Hydro development which, within a comparatively short time, will be turning energy into power for the good of Ontario.

With that, I should like, during the remainder of my 10 minutes—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Let him take all the time he wants.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I have just got about half a minute left—no, no, I am going to confine my remarks to 10 minutes but I am going to say something in that time.

First, if we go back into this matter, the St. Laurent government and Rt. hon. C. D. Howe were too optimistic in granting and giving contracts for the production of uranium. Now, I am not passing judgment on that because I am not qualified to say. The records at Ottawa would show very fully whether or not too much optimism was shown in giving these contracts.

But I want to get down to cases, and I am talking entirely non-politically. Of course, that will please my hon. friends opposite very much.

Might I say this, sir—despite who gave the contracts or how they were given—those contracts were given in good faith by the federal government of that day. As a result of that, municipalities such as municipalities in my own area, the township of Cardiff—a little bush township with an assessment of perhaps $75,000 altogether—is thrown into big business because of a uranium contract about which those little people know nothing. That is true of the township of Monmouth, it is true of the township of Faraday, and of other townships up there that are bush townships.

Now, I would say that, in those areas, investments were made because of those contracts about which this government or those municipalities were never consulted. As a matter of fact, they involved higher policy than is the jurisdiction of this government to deal with. But, as a result of it, Canada has invested huge sums of money in these places.

I could take hon. members to the township of Cardiff and show them the immense amounts of money which have been invested in that place. That is true of Elliot Lake, and it is true of the Bancroft area as a whole.

Now, sir, after all, it is Canada's money. It may come from us. Some of it has come from a little municipality. Some of it has come from the federal government.

I would say that, from the standpoint of the federal government, there is a very definite commitment to the men and women of those communities. That is my feeling and I do not make any bones about saying that at all. I would say that this involves those little municipalities, their credit, their taxes and so on. I would say that the people who were the original inhabitants of those municipalities are little people, and they simply cannot afford to bear the cost that is involved, particularly if these contracts are removed from those areas.

This government has made very strong representations to the federal government about the unfairness of the signing and transferring of contracts from particular areas to some other area, leaving these municipalities high and dry. I have very strong feelings on that, and I have made my representation just as strongly as I am making this statement this afternoon.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. Prime Minister's alternative?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this. I do not think that the contract should be transferred from those areas. I will give a specific case—the contract of the Dyno Mine.

The Dyno Mine is employing at present some 300 or 400 men, and that mine is in one part of the little bush township of Cardiff. That mine just services the people who are working as a result of that contract. It has been necessary to erect schools and to build roads and things of that sort.

Now I say, sir—with all the strength that is in me—I say that it is grossly unfair to transfer that contract from that area and leave those people high and dry. And I would say that if the federal government does that, then the federal government ought to pay the bill.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is my 10 minutes up?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: The hon. member for St. George stopped my hon. leader from speaking when he finished the 10 minutes and on a point of order, I request that—

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, sir, if my 10 minutes are up. But I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I think that this matter has now reached a stage where your Honour might use your prerogative and say that this matter has been sufficiently discussed in this House today.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask, has the hon. Prime Minister finished his remarks?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I have not.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, then I move that this House makes an exception in this case and that the hon. Prime Minister be permitted to complete his remarks.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to my hon. friend that he is very generous, but he is out of order, and I am going to abide by the rules of the House.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I indicated a desire to speak some time ago, might I be permitted to continue?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that we have discussed this matter at great length. I believe that some 6 speakers have spoken on this side of the House, and it would appear that we are getting redundant and saying the same things. I am quite sure the members feel the same way.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, this is within your province to make a ruling. These things have to come to an end sometime. Everyone knows that this is with yourself and I think that your Honour should make—

Mr. Speaker: We will permit the member's question before closing.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I will abide by your ruling on the time and the motion. My question to the hon. Prime Minister would be this:

If, through failure by the federal government to take suggested action, the people of Elliot Lake are to be displaced, will this government urge the industries of this province to find jobs for the displaced people? Will this government immediately carry out their suggested programme by providing transportation, severance pay, and vocational training if necessary?

Hon. Mr. Frost: In reply to that question I would say that the hon. Minister gave a very concise outline of what this government proposes.

I would say, sir, that we are very anxious to sit with the federal government and find ways and means for alleviating the immediate condition. We have also proposals for alleviating the short-term position, and we have plans for the use of uranium in the long term. Now, I do not think that I can say any more than that.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before the orders of the day, would the hon. Prime Minister permit another question? The hon. Prime Minister filed, Mr. Speaker, this brief with respect to the Canada-India reactor, but as I read the brief introduction this is the federal programme under the Colombo plan. Now what I would like to know is how in the world is the province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we are in it this way. That is under the Colombo plan, that is the way it is done. However, we are partners in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and, as a matter of fact, we nominated a couple of directors to the board. Because of that we are interested, and we are doing work in connection with the reactor and energy.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, there is a second question I would like to ask of the hon. Prime Minister. Does he intend to suggest to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources that the committee on energy make its first business this particular subject? Has he any objection to the invitation being extended to the representatives of industry, the communities, and labour to come and discuss this very important problem?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I am most anxious, as he knows, to oblige.

If there is merit in that proposal, I can assure my hon. friend that we will give it every consideration.

Now I will make this proposal to the hon. leader of the Opposition—I will see that he gets the complete proceedings of the conference in January, and I would ask him to do this: If he would submit that to his caucus, and if that does not answer the questions, then I would be very glad to give consideration to his proposal.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I am quite serious about this. Quite frankly I attended, and many members of this caucus attended. I think the hon. Minister will agree with this, that one of the most pertinent questions is the simple determination of whether or not the heavy water reactor will be economically feasible.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The very conference that was held decided that very problem, that the heavy water cooled reactor was the right thing for southern Ontario, the right thing for us, and that we would be unwise, at this stage to start off on some other theory.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly. Exactly.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, could I inquire—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to the chair in this respect. This, very frankly, is of the greatest importance in my opinion.

Well, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government what it thinks of an article that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star today, under the heading of Pierre Berton, suggesting that there is something wrong in The Workmen's Compensation Act? I suggest that another order would certainly be to bring that man before this House.

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, that is all the hon. member is concerned about, to hurry me on.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was just concerned to have the hon. leader of the Opposition maintain the order of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, I am sure the hon. member was.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The University of Toronto president's report for the year ended June, 1959.

2. Report of the board of governors of the University of Toronto for the year ended June 30, 1959.

3. Fifth annual report of the Ontario telephone authority of the province of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1959.

Mr. MacDonald: Before the orders of the day, I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), a copy of which I have submitted to him in advance.

In view of the serious implications, as outlined in Pierre Berton's column in today's issue of the Star, of the associations of the management-consultant company called Business and Economic Services Limited with the workmen's compensation board, would the hon. Minister make an explanatory statement to this House?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to make what statements I am able to make at this time. It must be realized that Pierre Berton has indicated quite a serious charge there, and as I had not gone into the matter before the time of the notice from Mr. Speaker that the hon. member was going to ask this question, I only had a very short time to deal with it. But I have, to the extent that is possible, prepared a statement to make in that regard.

I have looked into the file of Business and Economic Services Limited. I find that Mr. H. J. Daly—and I want to say at this point that Daly in that case is spelled D-a-l-y, for which I am very grateful. If he had happened to spell his name "e-y" I would not—the man is unknown to me. However, I find that Mr. H. J. Daly wrote to the board—that is the workmen's compensation board—in connection with his work at the construction safety association on December 22, 1953, indicating that at that time a Mr. Floyd Henry, who was previously employed as a consultant in manpower and personnel development, had left. He felt that his work at the construction safety association fitted him to take on this particular type of work for the board.

As a result of a conference with Mr. Daly—that is between Mr. Daly and the board—there is a board order on file dated January 15, 1954, employing the firm of Business and Economic Services Limited for a period of 3 months, to conduct a survey of this work.

On July 21, 1954, confirmation of the continuance of the contract was made on the following basis—the nature of the work was to implement recommendations contained in the original survey. At that time, the board retained Mr. Daly at a nominal retainer of $400 per month, plus specific items on a daily basis where specific assignments were given to him by the board.

Now, I have two or three other paragraphs here, but I do not think I need to report on these at this particular time, because of what I am going to say at the end of my report.

The firm of Business and Economic Services Limited was to continue to provide a service in respect to surveys and recommendations in relation to promotional flow of supervisory level, real organization within the personnel division, and supervisory training. A contract on a similar basis was renewed in December, 1957, for the year 1958; and in November, 1959, for the year 1960.

Now, you must realize, Mr. Speaker, that this sort of thing was entirely an internal administrative question. I am, as Minister, actually a liaison between government and the workmen's compensation board, and would not be able to delve into every method of employment and training that they provide.

The reason for this employment of these people was the great work that was going on, the development of the Downsview rehabilitation centre, the staffing of that place, the qualifying people for various jobs. Over the years, Business and Economic Services Limited had specialized in the board's problems in the manpower development field and, on a continuing basis, had worked closely with the personnel department at head office and the hospital and rehabilitation centre to further develop this necessary work with the board's staff.

It is quite obvious that, as a consultant with the excellent knowledge of the board's desire to fully develop the capacity of its staff, this firm has been able to effect changes for the better that might otherwise not have been accomplished. Now, this Mr. Daly who is spoken of here, died in February 1956, and the board continued on with one of his people who took over the operation of this firm and have up to this present time.

Now, in 1957, Mr. Sparrow, the chairman of the board, whose wife had died, married this Mrs. Daly, whose husband had died—and I would say that this Mr. Sparrow is a fine public servant, a fine type of man. I have the greatest admiration for that fellow. He came to the board against his own desire—as a matter of fact, he was vice-president of a company—he came to the board at some financial sacrifice at that time, including great hopes that he had for himself in that industry. But over the years he had practically dedicated himself to accident prevention work and interest in the workmen's compensation board, and he thought he could make a contribution, which he has.

I think hon. members can verify the fact that he has done a good job by the reports of the workmen's compensation board activities, and the progress that has been made under his jurisdiction.

Now, the large part of this written report is taken up with outlining the weaknesses or failings of this man, Daly. Now it strikes me that, to bring up the history of his activity 4 years after he had passed away, seems to me a little bit low. What difference does it make to the position of this man, in connection with the board, that years before that he had been accused of doing certain things in connection with some organization? As far as I know, or have ever heard—and I believe that case was aired in this House—Mr. Daly evidently was not found guilty, or he certainly was not fined or, I do not think, penalized in any way.

So, 4 years after, in spite of the fact that the methods used were not illegal, they rake it up and attach some connection with that aspect to the fact that later a company which he formed did some work for the workmen's compensation board.

Now, the workmen's compensation board, as we all know, Mr. Speaker, is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council. But the people who are actually interested are the workers in this province and the employers who pay all the money. The Ontario government does not pay any money into the workmen's compensation board, so it would seem to me that the people would be the manufacturers' associations, and so forth, who would have a great interest in finding out whether or not Mr. Sparrow has taken advantage of his position for some personal gain. At any rate, I have the assurance that Mr. Sparrow has never received one penny of compensation, because of the activities of this board, or of this company working for the workmen's compensation board, since their marriage.

So I am just going to finish with this, sir, that I had a clipping handed to me and it is evidently in the Star for February 16:

Liberal leader John Wintermeyer said that they would demand Eugene Sparrow, workmen's compensation board chairman, be called before the legislative labour committee as a result of the disclosures in Pierre Berton's column today.

Mr. Speaker, I have such confidence in this fine man, who is the chairman of the workmen's compensation board, that I am going to agree with this request. I am going to insist that it be done, because—I am absolutely going to insist, and I know that

Mr. Sparrow would be equally pleased to know this—so that this thing can be cleared up.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I did make that comment this morning, and I think it is the right thing to do, from Mr. Sparrow's point of view. I likewise suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the man who wrote this article, that is Pierre Berton, should be called before the same committee, to make his explanation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before we get this to the committee, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister this? Can we have clarified once and for all the principle, completely apart from personalities involved, of whether or not it is permissible or advisable for persons holding public office to use public monies in doing business with companies in which they have a family connection?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say quite frankly, sir, that this is the first time I heard of the article. I have not seen it or heard of it until the matter was mentioned here. The hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) gave me the article. I would want to see what this is all about.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I advised the House yesterday that we would proceed with the balance of the bills standing in the name of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) who is in Montreal.

Might I ask, sir, if the House would permit me to depart from the programme, for about half an hour, to deal with some of the items in committee of the whole, in order that we might get them off the order paper? If that is all right, sir, I would make the motion that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that basically, but I have one or two questions to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I am just concerned that there will not be the opportunity to ask those questions before 6 of the clock, and embarrassingly, I will be unable to be here tonight.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the hon. Prime Minister's indulgence, you have permitted the certain question this afternoon with respect to this article. We have had two or three questions, and obviously this particular question could not have been in at 5 o'clock last night, because the article appeared sometime this morning.

Mr. MacDonald: If it is in before noon.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, all right, now I understand that—but I am not going to quarrel with the hon. member for York South. I am not quarrelling with him, but I am saying that my understanding is that the questions that we are submitting are required to be in before 5 o'clock the night before.

All right now, we had two or three questions that we submitted in this fashion that have not been answered and I think you, Mr. Speaker, know what I am referring to, and I would like a specific answer to those several questions.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I appreciate the fact that 5 o'clock is the deadline for it to be submitted, to be placed on the order paper for the following day—the 5 o'clock rule. The 12 o'clock rule refers to questions. It is 12 o'clock for oral questions, and these questions before the orders of the day are only allowed where some urgency is evident. Therefore, it is quite understandable by the members, I am sure, that all questions which are submitted to the Speaker cannot be urgent.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think, Mr. Speaker, if I might explain to the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think that the 5 o'clock rule relates to questions that were on the order paper, but if there is a matter of public importance, the hon. member places the question in writing with Mr. Speaker, and then Mr. Speaker has the opportunity of communicating that to the hon. Minister or hon. member involved.

Then, if the hon. Minister is willing to answer, the question may be answered, otherwise then it would apply the next day or the next sitting. I think that is the situation.

But it is certainly well to have that cleared up so the hon. members will know.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That sounds fine, Mr. Speaker. On the surface of things, I cannot complain about the explanation, but in its application I find it extraordinary. I can see nothing extraordinarily urgent about this particular question with respect to Pierre Berton. I am not complaining about it at all. I think these questions should be freely asked.

But as compared with the question we have asked, I cannot differentiate, and yet our questions are being refused. Now that is the sum and substance of the complaint I am making.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Put the motion, sir.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think this should be clarified.

Mr. Speaker: I think the members will possibly remember also that the Prime Minister and Mr. Speaker then agreed yesterday, if we look back at the votes and proceedings, that if we see enlargement of the present practice is desirable, that is where we are at the present time.

Now, I do not think any Speaker will be able to satisfy all members at all times on all matters of questions, and I would ask the members to bear with the Speaker, and I believe that we can work out the relative importance and urgency of the various questions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question that I put in yesterday: I accepted your ruling that it was too late, it came in about one o'clock. We advised your office that the matter should stand until today, and you subsequently advised that the only way we could get at it was to put it on the order paper.

Surely there is not a question of greater importance than whether or not the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) is going to take certain action to enforce the laws of the province. And I think this is a question that should have been dealt with before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, and I want your ruling on it.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): As long as I have been in office, I have done everything I could to enforce the laws of this province where it was clear that the material and the evidence called for that being done. The question that I believe the hon. member put yesterday, or the day before, was one in which he saw fit, in his wisdom as a lawyer, to draw certain conclusions about the law in some other jurisdiction, and therefore from wants to find out government policy.

The answer is if there is any reason for prosecuting a particular alleged offence against a particular person or individual, on the material in front of me at the time, we will deal with it then and not before.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, if my conclusions of law are not correct, can the hon. Attorney-General tell us why?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why should he? We are not running a law school around here, are we?

Mr. Singer: Well, we should enforce our statutes.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I might want some information on procedure, but to try, I will move an amendment to No. 1 of the schedule that $6 be changed to $12.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I do not know whether the hon. member wants to speak on it, but actually I would think, if he is going to attempt to raise the figure, that he is in effect involving the expenditure of money by the government.

Mr. Gisborn: Well then, Mr. Chairman, would I be in order to move that it be referred back for consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would not think there is any need for it to be moved back, it was considered in committee. At this time I suppose views could be expressed on it, but there is no intention at the present time of the government to change the figure. This figure was set within the last two years after debate, and there is no intention to change it at the present time.

Mr. Gisborn: Speaking briefly, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment, it was our feeling—and I agree it was expressed in committee—that the $6 did not provide adequate payment for those called as witnesses from industrial plants, simply because they would be forced in most cases to lose a day's pay, and it would mean a loss of income to attend as a witness.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the bill be referred back to committee for amendment?

All those in favour say "aye."

Those opposed?

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Judicature Act.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before we get into section 1, I would just like to make this one brief comment. I am extremely regretful that when The Judicature Act came before the House the government did not see fit to amend it in another section with regard to ex-parte injunctions.

Now, we debated this last year and the hon. Attorney-General, I think, indicated considerable interest in the argument that I advanced on the amendment. He is aware of the fact that it was one of the majority recommendations of the select committee on labour, and therefore, if it is going to be implemented, it must be here rather than The Labour Relations Act.

I would just like to ask the hon. Minister why we have no action here.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think the hon. member is out of order in bringing it up at this point. As he knows, the whole question of labour relations has not yet been before the House. But it is out of order on this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it out of order to discuss other amendments with regard to an Act when the government brings in certain ones?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: But as I said, the hon. member is fully aware the whole question of labour relations is no doubt going to be debated in this House before it porogues, and at that time we can all talk about it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is not labour relations, this is an amendment to The Judicature Act—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Did not the hon. member say a moment ago it was a recommendation of the select committee?

Mr. MacDonald: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well then, we are going to be dealing with that later.

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order on this bill.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a government bill and they are not acting, that is the point.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking to the Throne debate last Friday, I had gone into some considerable length regarding the situation of mental hospitals in this province and the neglect of dealing with the problem of mental health—the neglect of this government.

In the Throne speech, it was mentioned that there would be the building of mental hospitals at Goderich, Palmerston and Owen Sound and, just in conclusion of that part of my speech, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention, and to the attention of this House, the number of times that the government has promised to build a hospital at Goderich—not only in Owen Sound, but especially in the area of Goderich.

I am reading from the Toronto Globe and Mail of January 28, 1959, where the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) is quoted as saying that:

In addition to a construction programme including the 1,200-bed unit at Cedar Springs near Chatham and a proposed hospital near Goderich, his programme would entail increasing the psychiatric staff throughout Ontario.

And then he goes on by saying:

Perhaps a major phase of the mental plan will be the creation of a new centre in London, at a hospital yet to be designated.

Well, Mr. Speaker, they were talking about the hospital in Goderich in January, 1959, and they talked about a hospital in London. We have heard nothing more about the one in London, but the government and its spokesmen kept talking about the hospital in Goderich. In fact, well before January, 1959, they were promising a hospital up in that area, and I read an extract from the Goderich Signal Star, of May 15, 1958:

Opening his address, the Premier said: "I regret with you the necessity of this gathering because it was occasioned by the death of our very good friend, Tom Pryde."

Mr. Pryde, who had been assistant Whip of the party, was a forthright advocate of the things that were sound and good in Ontario, said Premier Frost.

The Premier went on to say that he had been given a copy of the Signal Star at a hotel here earlier in the evening. He noticed the editorial, "Tonight is the Night" which expressed the hope that the Premier would make a definite statement concerning the hospital proposed for this district.

Said the Premier: "I want to come here and acknowledge to you one of the many things which Tom advocated—a hospital for retarded children. Before his passing, I promised him that would be the case, and I am glad to come here tonight and say that this will be the case."

At this point the Premier's speech was interrupted by heavy applause.

When he continued he said that the provincial hospital for Huron had been announced some months ago in the speech from the Throne.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, that was some months even before May, 1958.

Then the newspaper clipping reads on:

When he continued, he said that the provincial hospital for Huron had been announced some months ago in the speech from the Throne. If there had been any doubts since then, he was now glad to clear them up. "This building is planned for an area about 3 miles south of this town," the Premier continued. "It is planned to be commenced as soon as possible."

He did not say anything further than this, as to when construction will be started, but Ontario Health Minister Phillips was quoted as saying last week that it will certainly be going ahead this summer.

That, Mr. Speaker, would be in the summer of 1958.

"It will be a 1,300-bed capacity with the possibility of extending to 2,200 beds," announced Premier Frost.

Well, since that time nothing has been done, and on February 5 of this year, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) was talking to Mr. Ellis, the editor of the Signal Star. The hon. Minister of Public Works intimated to Mr. Ellis that he did not expect anything would be done this year, not until next year. So I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how long will the government continue promising hospitals but doing nothing about the construction of them?

Mr. Speaker, they often appropriate funds for the building of hospitals, but it is amazing, when one checks into the records, to see how often these appropriations are not used. In a 10-year period from 1950 to 1959 there was appropriated by this House a total of $267,512,000 and, of this amount, $65,267,167 was left unspent.

Despite the fact there has been all kinds of unemployment, despite the fact there is a dreadful shortage of hospitals, they still will not use the money. It is money that is legislated by this assembly, it is voted for by this assembly, and it is vetoed by the treasury board. I suggest, if the hon. Minister of Health wants this hospital, that he himself perhaps, being a good doctor, might prescribe some pep pills for some of the men in his own party.

When one thinks of the $65 million that was left unspent by this government, it is evident that $1 out of every $4 appropriated for the construction of buildings is not used. It shows us that, in a 10-year period, the government had sufficient money given to it to spend which would have built 6,526 beds at the rate of $10,000 per bed. Therefore, hon. members can see that certainly the government has, even over that 10 years, done very little, and is none too anxious to continue the work in helping the mental health situation.

The government spent less on construction facilities, in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, than in the preceding year, despite the growth of population and the evident need for all these hospitals and similar buildings.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the government is getting worse all the time.

Mr. Speaker, it was also mentioned in the speech from the Throne that the government was going to see what could be done to inquire into the outpatients' services that could be added on to the hospital insurance plan, despite the fact that a few years ago a great deal of time and skill was spent in going into the need, and the necessity, of diagnostic services.

In the Throne speech, the government pointed out how well the present plan of hospitalization has succeeded. I think even that is ample evidence, Mr. Speaker, that this health insurance scheme can be greatly expanded. But even as it is now, it could certainly be improved even in a small way.

I will deal first with the small things because I know that the government over there likes to do a bit here and a bit there, and there might be even some hope that we could do something to improve the lot of the people by suggesting small things. I will go into the greater scheme afterwards.

First of all, I might suggest as the hospitalization scheme is at the present time, instead of a waiting period of 3 months it be reduced to one month. Now the reason, Mr. Speaker, is this. Often, if a man is unemployed, he fails to make his proper premium payments, and then he does not receive the proper insurance protection. When he has the money, he has to wait 3 months before he gets the protection.

So it seems to me that it is always the person who can least afford hospital bills who does not have the insurance. This is often caused for two reasons. First, because a person is out of work; and secondly, in the case of older people, they often just do not remember. Their minds are not as sharp as they might be, and as a result of their forgetting, they often find they are uninsured.

I suggest then, Mr. Speaker, that the government should move to reduce the time for being covered by insurance from 3 months to one month.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the importance of diagnostic services, outpatient diagnostic services, is very great. Firstly, in the long run I believe it will save the province money. The fact that one cannot have X-rays or get treatment until one is in the hospital encourages people to seek admission to the hospital, whereas if they had the X-rays, or could receive the outpatient services under the scheme, they would be discouraged from taking bed space. Therefore, it is an economical, besides a humanitarian, approach to get protection for the citizens of this province by the use of outpatient services.

Then I might also mention other things which should be added to the scheme, Mr. Speaker. They are small things. The ambulance service is not covered unless it happens to be an accident case and the patients are taken to the hospital within 24 hours. But there are often instances where a person has to be taken to the hospital in an ambulance, and it costs them $15. Counting the $15 going to the hospital, and $15 coming back from the hospital, it makes a total of $30 which is a lot of money to people, especially when they are sick. And it is often the case that, when they are sick, they do not have any income.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you, and through you to this House, that we are merely nibbling at, or not getting down to, the real problems of health insurance, until this province has a province-wide system of comprehensive prepaid health insurance which includes, naturally, medical and drug expenses.

We have found that there has been a real demand for hospitalization. The tremendous success of the hospitalization scheme is ample evidence that a medical scheme could succeed just as well, and there is a tremendous need for it among our people.

Now, I admit, Mr. Speaker, that any scheme we could develop here in this province should be done in such a way that we could integrate it with a federal scheme that we hope might come later. But, seeing that we have the particular government we do in Ottawa, I do not see very much hope in the future of getting any good suggestions from Ottawa, so we are going to be dependent upon ourselves to make what scheme we have.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): After 37 years, for the Liberals—

Mr. Trotter: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to hon. members what I think is the basic need in this country, or in this province, for health insurance.

In 1951 there was taken what is called the Canadian sickness survey. From the findings of that survey, it was shown that 80.4 per cent. of Canadians reported that they had experienced something less than what is considered to be normal good health—in other words, that is over 80 per cent. for all of Canada.

Well, the same figure would apply to this province as well. It was found, Mr. Speaker, that 58.5 per cent. reported sufficient disability during one or more periods that they were unable to carry out their normal activity—in other words, almost 60 per cent. of the population.

Then it was found that 47.9 per cent., just below half, reported one or more periods when they were confined to bed, either at home or in the hospital.

Hon. members can see that ill health can amount to a great expense, not only to the individual concerned, but to the country and to the province as a whole.

These figures become more meaningful when we consider that the days of disability totalled 163.5 million, an average of 11.9 days for every citizen of this country. The average varied with the age, of course, from 8.4 days in the age group 15 to 24 years, to 20.8 days of disability per year in the age group 65 and over.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is one of the main necessities of a province-wide plan, in that the older the individual gets the more apt he is to be ill. As a result, at the age of 65 and over, so many people are cut off completely from any insurance scheme that will help them get drugs or medical help.

It especially hits, under our present set-up, Mr. Speaker, those people who are independent. If they have no money at all, the government helps them. If they have a lot of money, they do not have to worry. It is the average person, who manages to pay his bills from day to day when he or she gets older, and is suddenly struck down by ill health, who can have his savings wiped out in a very short time.

So I say to hon. members that it is time that we set to work to help the province as a whole in giving to this country, and to the province, a good health scheme.

I might also point out, Mr. Speaker, that even taking these figures on the point of a family basis, the proportion—this is again from the Canadian sickness survey—the proportion of all families reporting such expenditures totalled 86.4 per cent.

In other words, only one family in 7 had no expenditures of any kind for medical care or health insurance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the hon. member for York South, whom I heard earlier in this session say that the federal government, under the Liberal regime, had done nothing, I would like to quote from the opening statement by hon. Paul Martin, at that time Minister of National Health and Welfare, before the federal-provincial committee of Ministers of Health on January 23, 1956.

Up to that point there had been in this country—it started in 1948—federal health grants which were given to this province to help build up hospitals and certain fields of research. It was to be a first step in what was to be a national plan and hon. Mr. Martin says in that speech:

This national health plan was envisaged in the minds of its authors as a great deal more than a means of encouraging the improvement of existing health services and the establishment of new facilities. When Mr. King announced the grants on May 14, 1948, he pointed out that they should be regarded as fundamental prerequisites of a nation-wide system of health insurance, and indeed, he went so far as to say in the House of Commons that the grants also represent first stages in the development of a comprehensive health insurance plan for all of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the important thing to remember in these plans is that they can be developed, to begin with, on a provincial basis. It has been done in British Columbia, in Alberta and in Saskatchewan. We in Ontario should develop such a plan which, as I said earlier, could be integrated with what we hope will become a scheme from coast to coast across the country.

The important thing in developing such a plan is to do it in proper, sensible stages, as the economics of the province and the country demand. It would be foolhardy to jump in and suddenly grant mass protection to everybody without first planning and doing exactly what would be proper in the best interests, not only of the personal health of individuals throughout the province, but of the economic health of the province.

We should also keep in mind, in such a scheme, that we here want to maintain the high standard that our medical profession have set. I, as a Liberal, believe in the patient-doctor relationship, that the patient should have the right to choose his own doctor. We have no desire, as Liberals, to try to regiment. I am not afraid to say, as a lawyer, that I consider the finest profession to be the medical profession. It is just that the need of medical protection, the need of the services of a doctor, is so urgent.

I hate to admit it, Mr. Speaker, but the services of a doctor are even more important than those of a lawyer—one can always remand the case, but if somebody is sick and dying he has to have a doctor. So that is why we in government must see to it that the medical services, the necessary drugs, are given to the patient immediately, and when they are necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few suggestions on the way to approach a scheme that would give us the medical protection for the individual against too high doctor bills and the cost of heavy expense of drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I note it is 6 of the clock—should I adjourn the debate or should I continue?

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That is a one-man filibuster over there.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, it is a good speech.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): It is the hon. member for St. Andrew who should talk about that.

Mr. Speaker: I do now leave the chair.

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I just want to dwell shortly on the high cost of illness in Canada and the severe handicap it is on people, and on men especially with large families, especially in the lower income group.

It has been shown from various surveys that men in the labouring class, men who are doing manual work, are more apt to suffer injury and illness than those in the higher income group. This is supported by a survey made in the United States, back in 1953. I may point out, Mr. Speaker, that these surveys tend to be the same in Canada as in the United States, although the Americans have gone into these things in far greater detail than we have.

In 1953, a survey of medical expenditures by the national opinion research centre in the United States showed that 7 per cent. of families incurred annual charges in excess of $495, and one million families incurred charges exceeding one-half their annual income. Of these, over 500,000 had charges equal to, or exceeding, their entire annual income.

So hon. members can see that, despite all our talk of prosperity, there is a real need for medical services being covered by insurance. It is true the voluntary system and the private plans have done a great deal, but they have been more or less pilot schemes to show what could be done, in the same way that hospitalization schemes, the private plans, paved the way for a far greater scheme.

The coverage of medical and drug costs is not unusual in the world. Practically all of western Europe has it and there are, of course, great strides being made in the provinces here in Canada.

One great change—and one of the main reasons why we have in modern times such high medical costs—is the result of the marvellous progress that the medical people have made in doing the research. These drugs do a very great deal in preventing illness or bringing about quick cures, but the unfortunate part about it is the drugs are so very expensive. Of course, we have had much evidence in recent days that these drugs are not just expensive as a result of production but because certain companies have profited on the suffering of those who are ill. In the Throne speech it was mentioned that the government considers investigating the cost of drugs used in our hospitals in this province, but we will never bring about a satisfactory control of extravagant drug prices until we have the government in a position where they can immediately investigate the cost of drugs—not just in their own hospitals, but in order to protect the average person who is not in a position to protect himself.

I might even point out, as an example, that it seems a person has to know an MPP to get his child into a retarded children's hospital. It would seem unfortunate if a person had to have some connection with the provincial government in one of their hospitals before he could get drugs at low cost. I say, Mr. Speaker, in any proper medical system we should in this province make it possible for those, who are now in need, to obtain the drugs that they need. It has been pointed out, in the United States Senate investigation on drugs, that there have been excessive costs, and people have been unable to get the necessary drugs. As a result, unfortunately, they go back into the hospital.

Appearing in the Toronto Daily Star of recent date, under the byline of Marquis Childs from Washington, is a reference to the Senate investigation in the United States which reads in part:

There was testimony that medical patients released from institutions as a result of a new tranquilizer therapy cannot afford to go on paying for the medication and so they are confined again to mental hospitals.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the same type of situation exists in this country. It is cheaper in the long run, not only economically but in human values, to see to it that these people who can be cured are cured, and are allowed to live normal productive lives instead of being charges upon the state.

The time has come, with the advances that we have made in science, with the knowledge that we have, to bring about such a system in our medical services that will make it possible to avoid such a situation as a person who is forced to go back to a mental hospital because of lack of money.

Incidentally, I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that 90 per cent. of our drugs used in Canada are purchased from the Americans, and usually at an even higher price than they have to pay down there.

The investigation done in the United States thus far has shown a tremendous price mark-up, in one instance of 10,000 per cent. for tranquilizers and the cortisone that eased the condition of arthritic sufferers. It has now got to the stage, Mr. Speaker, where it costs more for drugs than it does for a doctor. The doctor's fee might be $6, but the cost of the drug that he advises the patient to take often costs $10.

As a result, the Americans have shown that they spend in the United States more on drugs than they do on medical bills.

We need in this province, and indeed in this country, Mr. Speaker, a healthy population. It helps us in our labour force, it helps us in time of war and peace. Something we need more than anything else is a strong and healthy people. I believe that it is inevitable that, in this province and in this country, we are working towards a comprehensive health scheme just as Mackenzie King stated in 1948.

If this province, with its vast resources, with the ability it has got on hand, would only make the effort to use them, it could make great strides in leading the way for all of this country.

There has been a great deal of experience gathered, and various plans—PSI, the plan in Windsor, the Blue Shield—and there are various plans on the prairies where the doctors have worked for the benefit of the communities in which they live.

Also, tremendous research has been done.

I might even point out, for the benefit of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), who I note is not in his seat at the moment, that this tremendous research was done, and made possible, especially during the last 7 years of the late Liberal administration in Ottawa.

I am convinced, as I speak to this House, that there will not be too many years go by before Mr. King's plans will be brought about. But the longer we wait, the more suffering will be entailed, and that, in the end, the longer we wait, the higher the cost.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would just like to say one or two words about The Department of Public Welfare. When the standing committees of this House were being set up, I immediately inquired about the welfare committee, and was amazed to learn they did not have one. I am glad to see that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) accepted the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) that welfare be included among the committees, and that it has since been added onto the health committee.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that there was no welfare committee is evidence of the lack of interest—or the lack of drive and initiative—of the present administration in welfare problems. This is despite the fact that we spend, I believe, approximately $70 million a year in this province on welfare, including the grants which we get from the federal government.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is a new approach to the problems of welfare. I will not dwell at length on it. I must give the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) credit. He has not gone around making the rash promises that some of the other hon. Ministers did about mental hospitals. There is not too much on record of the rash promises which The Department of Public Welfare has made. But they are moving very slowly. From the legislation that has come down in the past few years they are—to be fair—slowly, very slowly though, grasping a more modern view that is necessary in our modern society towards the problems of welfare.

The old days of regarding welfare as charity, or as pie in the sky, or helping a few "down and outers" is no longer the case. We find that, as our society has changed from a rural community to a great industrial community, it has brought about many tensions, many changes in our family life. We must make sure that our welfare legislation is so directed that it protects our family life, protects the freedom of the individual, and thus—by protecting family life and the individual—that it protects our free society. One thing that distinguishes us from the Communists is that our legislation, the power of our state, is directed toward uplifting the individual, instead of the individual being at the mercy, and being a servant, of the state.

Such legislation must aim at helping the working mother, of helping the aged, of helping those who are sick, to bring them back to such a position that they can be rehabilitated and go back to work and be of use to themselves and to society. That is what our welfare department should be for.

I feel that the hon. Minister of Public Welfare tries to do that. But he, like the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), is shackled by Tory thinking, by a Tory government that is behind the times and, I feel, has been continuously behind the times for the past 17 years.

We live in a province with great wealth, with tremendous opportunity, and it is only by working together that we can give to the individual that opportunity to live the full life we would like to see him live. It is all right for us to talk about opportunity for all, and to say that there is equal opportunity. But we well know of the many disadvantages that can befall an individual in modern society. There are certainly a number of extreme hazards to overcome.

So, I would, in closing, Mr. Speaker, emphasize that, in matters of welfare as in matters of health, the job is, in the future, for rehabilitation, for prevention to develop our personnel, to give more opportunity to those who would work in social work. We sadly neglect the training of personnel properly, and in giving them the proper opportunities to serve the people they would serve in their work.

It is for us to rise dynamically to the challenges of our time, and to make this province not a welfare state or something that is just, as I said before, a pie in the sky, but a place where the individual can grow and develop, and where we can encourage a family way of living, and protect the freedoms that we cherish in a world today which is grievously threatened by dangerous forces in many parts of the world.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to convey to you my sincere congratulations for the position you have taken on, one of great responsibility and which will tax your patience at times. Your knowledge through the years as an hon. member will enable you to serve this Legislature with honour, I am sure of that. I would also extend wishes to those hon. Ministers who have assumed cabinet rank during the past year for continued success in their greater responsibility toward the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is a coincidence tonight that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), who has just spoken, has been known to me since he was a young boy. At that time I always thought of his future welfare, and thought of it in that light, and so tonight I extend to him well-being in the days to come as an hon. member of this House in this province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened to, and read with interest, the speech from the Throne. I want to quote the following as being of special interest in these days of greater and unknown developments that are before the people of this province, and I quote:

This session is important, not only because it is the first of this Parliament, but also because it is the first of a new decade, a decade which promises to surpass all others in development and in improvement in the well-being of our people. There is, of course, no room for complacency, but this depends on the fulfilment of all other policies promoting the sound economic development of our province.

Mr. Speaker, northwestern Ontario, in the last 10 years, has been developing and expanding by the building of highways and the industrial growth which follows—the like of which has not taken place in any other period previous to this time. This has been made possible under the present hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the government of which he is the leader. Make no mistake, there had to be vision and faith in a programme of opening up this part of Ontario.

Now, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) on February 2, in reply to the speech from the Throne, made the following statement:

Northern Ontario has been the forgotten land of Ontario. The simple fact is that we are doing nothing about the development of northern Ontario except platitudinous pats on the back.

Mr. Speaker, these statements are very far out of line. Apparently all he saw was the brush and not the timber, the overburden and not the iron ore that was there in broad daylight where over 1,000 men, at one of the mines, were being gainfully employed mining iron ore for shipment.

Before development can take place, there must be railroads, highways and roads. Northwestern Ontario is serviced by two transcontinental railroads, and will be serviced in a short period of time by two transcontinental highways. Today, highway No. 17 is being rebuilt to trans-Canada standards between the Lakehead cities and the Manitoba boundary. At present, there are 9 sections under construction with a modern bridge that is near completion between the towns of Kenora and Norman.

I might mention here that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) has driven over 8 of these sections to see for himself the progress of this work. The north shore route—the scenic route following Lake Superior between Wawa and Marathon—will be open to traffic in a short time. The other, the provincial highway No. 11 which begins at the water front here in Toronto and goes to North Bay, Cochrane, Kapuskasing and Nipigon, as announced by the hon. Minister of Highways, has been extended to Port Arthur, Fort William, Atitkokan, Fort Frances and the town of Rainy River, where a new international bridge is now under construction and should be ready for traffic this August. There our highway joins Minnesota highway No. 11 to the Manitoba boundary by skirting the south end of the Lake of the Woods for 40 miles before entering Canada again at the Manitoba boundary. Highway No. 11 will be over 1,200 miles long, part of which is called “the north route, Trans-Canada,” and presently the only highway across northern Ontario. This part is all paved except for about 30 miles.

The extension of highway No. 11 from Nipigon to the Lakehead cities to the junction of No. 17, Shabakwa Corners, where No. 11 continues on, past Quetico provincial park.

Quetico is the second largest park in Ontario—some 1,700 square miles of wilderness, untouched by man, outdoor beauty unexcelled in its pine forest. There are clear blue waters of the lakes and streams teeming with many species of fish, and all are available for an outdoor vacation. Then the highway continues on to that world-known Steep Rock iron ore body. At this point there is a stretch of 90 miles which will complete No. 11 highway across Ontario.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) came to the Rainy River district last June and departed the same way, a lot wiser as to how the vote would go.

An hon. member: Did he get any fish?

Mr. Noden: The CCF party advocated building the Atitkokan and Fort Frances section 90 miles in 90 years and they had their signboard up. This presently is under construction. The route is partly surveyed. Another two months will finish this part of the causeway across Rainy Lake—3.8 miles is about two-thirds finished with the work proceeding on schedule.

It was my privilege 3 weeks ago to be allowed to press the button that set off a charge of explosives of over 37 tons. The purpose was to clear rock for part of the field.

I have been told by the engineers this pre-stress structure across Rainy Lake will be the longest one of its kind in the British Commonwealth of Nations. This causeway across Rainy Lake was incorporated in the Throne speech because of its importance. When completed with the balance of highway No. 11, it will give the province of Ontario the second highway across northern Ontario joining eastern and western Canada. I am sure, when completed, it will be called the southern route of trans-Canada because it will be the alternate route, and will have an important bearing in relation to the deep seaport at the Lakehead cities. Mr. Speaker, there have been other highways and secondary roads built throughout northwestern Ontario in the past 10 years, to Red Lake, Pickle Crow, Nakina, Manitouwadge, Kashabowie, and the Steep Rock area, all leading to mining areas which have made possible the development and expansion of the mining industry throughout northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect as to how our highway system of northwestern Ontario is being readied to take care of the traffic that is ever increasing south of the Canadian border. Between Lake Superior and Lake of the Woods we have 3 ports of entry. At Pigeon River, an agreement has been entered into by this government to build a new entrance. At the other end, the town of Rainy River, a new bridge is under construction where a ferry has operated. It was only a few short years ago that the hon. Prime Minister gave support to this bridge by agreeing to build the approaches which represent about 25 per cent. of the total cost. This past September, our highways have connected with the Great River Road which commences at New Orleans on the Gulf of Mexico and terminates at the junction of highway No. 71 and Trans-Canada, 13 miles east of Kenora. The Great River Road has been designated by legislation of 10 states, and designated and marked by the province of Ontario.

For the year 1959, there were approximately 2,403,298 individuals and 615,440 vehicles that crossed the 3 border points. I would like to elaborate on what this really means. When I spoke of the Great River Road, it is going to be a 4-lane highway built from New Orleans on the Gulf of Mexico on both sides of the Mississippi River joined at the Canadian boundary at Fort Frances. At the present time, it is a 4-lane highway within 200 miles south of the border. I am told that the traffic is now bumper to bumper during the summer months—that is during the tourist season. When this road is extended to our boundary as a 4-lane highway we, in Ontario, have to be prepared to handle the traffic. Presently, we have only one highway that goes north and south, a two-lane highway leading to Kenora and the northwestern part of Ontario. At the present time, we have the road east, between Fort Frances and Atikokan, under construction.

I would suggest that, in order to take care of this extra traffic that is going to take place in the years to come, and very shortly, we will have to have two more north-and-south roads.

Now, The Department of Travel and Publicity spends a great deal of money south of the border inviting the citizens of our sister nation to come up and visit us. We have an industry, the tourist industry, that is important to that part of Ontario that it is fifth in size as to the dollar volume that it brings into our area. Therefore it has a great importance to the economics of this part of northwestern Ontario.

I feel that the completion of our present highway system, that is now underway between Fort Frances and Atikokan, is very important in that it will take care of this traffic that is going to come in.

I might mention to hon. members that 10 miles on each side of the Great River Road there is a population of approximately 30 million people. Now that is a potential wealth of traffic that can roll our way, and I would recommend and ask our government here today to consider this in the light of the conditions of the industry that we have, that we want to keep. We want to be able to take care of this traffic as it arrives at our borders.

Mr. Speaker, in the Throne speech it was pointed out that opportunities of today will be the challenges of tomorrow. Noticeable as our accomplishments have been, we cannot stand still. Again I must point out the present government has given every support and encouragement to the development and expansion of northwestern Ontario.

As I have already stated, the highway expansion is one example, with the development of the iron ore bodies at Atikokan, of assisting by building a modern highway of 88 miles for 3,500 population, now 6,700. It is assisting by community planning—one instance called the Dunbar Heights—development roads, liberal grants for school buildings, and so forth. The same procedure has taken place at Manitouwadge, Red Lake, and wherever the need has occurred.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a new venture in the Rainy River district. It is the Quetico conference and training centre. Now this may be new to most hon. members—I know it is—but it is of importance to all of Ontario. We are living in an age when, on every side, there are daily hundreds of radio and television programmes, thousands of publications, many community, family and work responsibilities competing for our attention.

All of them make inroads into our time and, as a result, it is difficult to give attention to things that require a span of time, or require interactions between people who do not normally come in contact with one another. It requires a stimulation of knowledge to have action as a result of the knowledge acquired. With the rapid social, cultural, economic and technical changes, the traditional concept of education and childhood ending simultaneously is inadequate.

One of the encouraging signs, Mr. Speaker, is the emergence in northwestern Ontario of a residential continuing education centre called Quetico conference and training centre, a place where people are removed from distractions, away from jobs and community pressures, in a setting of extreme beauty. Possibly we will have another advanced school of fine arts in Ontario, only with another name, but serving the same purpose for the citizens of Ontario.

I want to tell hon. members about the Quetico conference and training centre, because I believe that it is a visionary project that will one day bring recognition to northwestern Ontario, in fact, to all of Ontario. This is a fine working example of voluntary co-operative effort between industry, labour, education, and government. People from all walks of life are contributing time, effort, and dollars to improve the country in which they live. This is the story of the Quetico conference and training centre.

Picture an island on a studded northern lake surrounded by stands of whispering aspen and pine, picture an expansive sandy beach nestled in a bay on the lake, and that is the site of the Quetico centre, 100 miles west of Port Arthur and Fort William on highway No. 11. It is situated on beautiful Eva Lake, incidentally in the Rainy River district.

Mr. Speaker, in 1957 The Department of Lands and Forests announced that it would vacate its ranger base at Eva Lake for a more suitable site within the Quetico Park boundary. People concerned with training and industry, labour, the arts, business and community recreation recognized the site as an ideal location for a residential adult education centre. They approached the Ontario government, and said:

In northwestern Ontario we need a place where opportunities will be available for people to gain knowledge, skills and insight to meet the challenges of a rapidly changing society. The Eva Lake ranger base has most of these requisites. If we can organize and assume responsibility for the site, will you make it available?

The responsible officials responded quickly to the idea and said:

We will be moving in mid-1958, about one year from now. We will delay the position of the site and buildings for that year. See what you can do.

Representatives of industry, labour, government, education, and community recreation met, plans were made and submitted to the government. In May, 1958, the Quetico conference training centre was incorporated, and the site was occupied in June of the same year.

By provincial charter, Quetico centre is a non-profit organization, dedicated to the belief that opportunity for people to gain knowledge, skills and insight, is essential to social, cultural, and economic life.

Those who organized the Quetico centre feel that theirs is a grass roots responsibility. If the social, economic and cultural life of Canadian communities is to be rewarding, the individuals in the community must have opportunity to:

(a) develop the attitude, skills and understanding that will cause them to participate in, and get satisfaction from participation in, democratic community life;

(b) participate in programmes designed to cause self-discovery, so that the individual will do something positive as a result of the new skill and insight gained;

(c) acquire the skill and understanding necessary for them to return to their respective communities or organization, to use their newly acquired knowledge, to give inspired leadership.

Mr. Speaker, the organizational structure is along traditional democratic lines, with an open membership and with elected officers at annual meetings. When the site was occupied in mid-1958, the assets of the Quetico centre were $1,000 and a number of dedicated volunteers. About $150,000 was required for furnishings, alterations to existing buildings and the purchasing of minimum equipment. The access road to the centre was a 4-mile privately built bush road which needed rebuilding.

Funds were also required to promote a residential conference. Lawyers, surveyors, publishers, architects, engineers, educators, financiers, accountants and a host of others volunteered their services. Businesses made available over $35,000 worth of equipment and furnishings on a pay-as-you-can basis. Canada's largest iron ore mining company, Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited, made available $25,000 in bank credit and pledged $15,000 over 3 years.

In two words the hon. Prime Minister expressed his support, when a northwestern chamber of commerce delegation made known the need for an access road, by saying to the hon. Minister of Highways: "Build it." It is now under construction.

A financial advisory committee began a campaign to raise funds. To date, corporations have pledged about $50,000. The labour movement in northwestern Ontario has pledged $10,000. In 1959, the first full year of operation, there were over 2,000-user days. The revenue from 1959 operations exceeded $16,000.

Mr. Speaker, people from every community in northwestern Ontario, and as far away as Ottawa and Winnipeg, have participated in residential courses at Quetico. Subject-matter has ranged from home and school leadership to industrial leadership, from art school to labour school, from square dancing to politics, from teen-club counselling to employee counselling, from handicraft skills to the human relations field. There have been new Canadians, old Canadians, Indian Canadians, teenagers, senior citizens, and people of many religious denominations in attendance.

There are two reasons why the Quetico conference and training centre can have a marked impact on the social, cultural, and economic growth of the area it serves:

First, it is a meeting ground where management and labour, philosopher and practical man, private agencies and government, are coming together as equal partners to wrestle with the development of Quetico centre. Secondly, here people who, every day, must face the grass-root problems of social, cultural or economic growth, or lack of growth, gain some of the skills and insights necessary to deal with situations that they meet in living their lives.

The work of the Quetico conference and training centre is like a stone being thrown into a pool of water—the ripples generated by the Quetico centre are being felt all over northwestern Ontario, and beyond.

I urge the hon. members to watch this development because I believe this is the beginning of a significant development in Canadian education. I further urge the Ontario government to continue its support of this project. The Department of Education has already made grants of $1,000 on two occasions. And I would recommend to the cabinet council to give serious consideration to supporting this worthwhile programme of the Quetico conference and training centre.

Mr. Speaker, in these days we hear of the need of further expansion of the iron ore deposits in northwestern Ontario, and I bring this to the attention of this House because it has an important bearing on all of Ontario. There is no question about it—Ontario iron ore reserves are one of our powerful economic keys to the greater prosperity of Ontario.

I feel that, by private initiative and enterprise, further expansion will take place, based upon economic production and the competing markets of the world.

The Department of Mines have underway a geophysical survey covering some 60,000 square miles, latitude 53 degrees north, 50 degrees south between longitudes 86 degrees and 91 degrees. I understand this is nearly completed and will provide information for further survey and mining development. In northwestern Ontario there is a tremendous iron ore body.

I should say presently the Steep Rock ore body is in production. Last year, 1959, Steep Rock Iron Mines shipped over 2.75 million tons which is the second largest tonnage a year since coming into operation. Also, they have extensive exploration work going on elsewhere.

Another mine, Canadian Charleston, shipped 250,000 tons and Caland Ore Company, a subsidiary of Inland Steel of Chicago, will come into production during 1960 when they expect to ship, as scheduled, 750,000 tons. After an investment of approximately $60 million in the last 5 years, Mr. Speaker, there is another ore body now being developed by the Anaconda Company, north of Nakina, where a tremendous ore body exists.

There are other known deposits of ore south of Red Lake, at Emo and at Bad Vermilion Lake—these last 3 were west of the Steep Rock area. Then there is the Gun Flint area south of the Lakehead cities. In each case the future developments will be governed by the economics of time.

For instance, I am told the ore bodies south of Red Lake are of a lower grade with a longer haul. The known ore body at Emo, which is in the most westerly part of the Rainy River district, is of a high grade ore but an underground operation. The type of ore on the Gun Flint range south of the Lakehead cities will require smelters built at the place of mining.

The development of these known deposits cannot compete at the cost in relation to open pit mining of a high grade ore such as exists at the Steep Rock ore body. No doubt methods will be found whereby these bodies of known ore reserves will come into production as the need arises.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told at one time they produced as high as 100 million tons per year on the Mesabie range in the state of Minnesota. Last year I read that it was down to 56 million tons. The high grade ore in this area has been gradually petering out. They have large reserves of low grade ore and have built two taconite plants on Lake Superior, a process for using the low grade ore, which has proved its success.

We, in Ontario, have to meet the competitive price market in order to extend our market, or the ore reserves elsewhere will have to be depleted, in which case our iron ore will be in demand.

It was announced by the hon. Prime Minister that a conference on the subject, "Iron Ore Resources of Northwestern Ontario" would be convened in the coming year to give further study to the future welfare of the development of iron ore and the mining industry. This goes to prove this government is ever aware of the necessity of continuing to study the natural resources so that the greatest amount of good will be assured to the people of our province.

Referring back to a remark that we were shipping iron ore across the line, I might mention that I have been told, after visiting the steel works in Hamilton—and I know that in order to produce a certain grade of steel one has to have up to 5 different types of iron ore—that plant down there has mines in the state of Wisconsin, and in the state of Minnesota, for that simple reason that they cannot depend on the iron ore from one ore body because it does not produce the iron ore that is required today in the production of steel.

I am answering that argument of "Why ship our iron ore out?" The reason for it is that we are importing it as well as shipping it out. Mr. Speaker, referring back to the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I quote:

Northern Ontario has been the forgotten land of Ontario.

I have brought to the attention of the hon. members today only 3 phases of development and expansion: that is highways, mining and cultural development—those that have taken place in northwestern Ontario in the past 10 years. It is there for anyone to observe if they want to. People would have to be blind in their journey if they were unable to appreciate what has taken place in the tourist, forestry, and mining industries, and the communities that have been built by the results of this great development—such communities as Marathon, Terrace Bay, Atikokan, and others, within a short period. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as northwestern Ontario grows, so shall Ontario continue to prosper.

Mr. R. Belisle (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first, in rising to participate in this debate, I would like to add my words of commendation to you, sir, on your appointment to your high office. I would also like to congratulate your hon. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Morrow), whom I have known for many years and who has done a good job for the people of Ottawa. I wish also to add my vote of thanks to the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne.

I want to congratulate those hon. Ministers newly appointed to the government cabinet. They have a terrific field in which to work, and I hope they enjoy their work. I know they will add to the betterment of conditions for the future.

May I say to the hon. former Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop) that the unlimited services rendered by him to education will never be forgotten in the north. I would like to suggest to his successor, the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts), that the new teachers' college to be built in Sudbury be named "Dunlop Teachers' College." It was under his guidance and administration that the north took its place in the field of education; to mention only a few, Northwestern College of Port Arthur and the Sudbury University were formed.

Mr. Speaker, I am greatly honoured in having been asked to propose a bill for a federated university in the north. A step nearer to federation came with the approval of the project as announced two weeks ago by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). Laurentien University of Sudbury will be northern Ontario's federated university, embracing colleges within its organization to be built and operated by the Jesuit order of the Roman Catholic Church, the United Church and the Anglican Church, which, being interdenominational, will be entitled to government grants.

Mr. Speaker, behind this happy outcome is an inspiring story of church zeal and co-operation, supported by business and community leaders. At this time I would like to thank and commend the persons who have taken upon their shoulders the responsibilities of this federation. I would like to mention Most Rev. Archbishop W. L. Wright, Bishop Alexander Carter, Father Emile Bouvier, Rev. Dr. Harold Vaughan, Dr. Bennett, Rev. E. S. Lautenslager, Rev. S. M. Craymer, and Mr. R. D. Parker.

Mr. Speaker, it began with the Sacred Heart College, founded by the Jesuits who expanded it, and 3 years ago I was very pleased to support a bill that gave it its university status. Anglican and United Churches alike sought to establish universities of their own to serve the rapidly expanding population. Last summer, at Father Bouvier's invitation, a committee of all 3 was formed to study federation, which has now been recommended and officially approved by all 3 denominations, and I sincerely hope it will receive the approval of the private bills committee, and then of this assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read an editorial from the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 3, 1960:

Like the University of Toronto, Laurentien incorporates institutions of diverse religions. Like the University of Ottawa, it is to be bilingual in order to serve the north's two dominant tongues. Its site in the Nickel City is admirable—the north's most populous city, well located to give access from Sault Ste. Marie, the gold belt, North Bay, Parry Sound and Algoma areas.

The north has set us many examples of resourcefulness, none more shining than in the cultural diversity of its religious missions. That these missions, in their modern maturity, have come together in the cause of higher learning is a historic, logical and wholly satisfying testament that the north is no more a frontier hinterland, but a mighty community with a vision and destiny not outdone by its southern neighbours.

Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased the other day when the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) said that the planning of his department looked toward the establishment of the next hospital school for retarded children in northern Ontario. I have personally made representation to him for the last two years to have this hospital built in my riding and, while I know that he has to consider all ridings, I hope that Nickel Belt will be the fortunate one.

Mr. Speaker, great is the honour and privilege to represent in this assembly a riding comprising 301 townships, some 60 of them being 9 by 9 miles, or 81 square miles. The greatest assistance that can be given to the 70,000 worthy constituents of my riding would be in the form of highways and roads, and I would like to draw to the attention of our good and sincere hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) that immediate and serious consideration should be given to starting to build an outlet for two very important mining communities 275 miles northwest of Sudbury.

One of these communities is Missinabie, to which I referred last year. The other is Renabie Gold Mines, just a few miles north on the Canadian Pacific Railway line, and in which pleasant townsites live 500 people. This town carries on in the field of gold production, notwithstanding the fact that it has had to eke out an existence, as it were, with a pegged gold price on one hand and a continually rising cost of production by not having a road outlet.

Mr. Speaker, it is getting very difficult for my people, or those people, to understand why, after 25 years of request for a road, they are told to wait from one year to another. Their feeling is that people will be privileged to travel to the moon before they have the privilege of motoring out of their community.

In the light of new geological concepts affecting the rock formations of my riding, more such roads should be built to invite the attention of mine developers.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the interdepartmental committee in charge of resource development roads to give fuller attention to the potential of my riding. New access roads in Nickel Belt will reward the whole of Ontario.

With the construction of the Chapleau-Wawa link of the Trans-Canada highway, whose completion is scheduled for this year, I believe that the opportunity has now come for the government to put an end to the long wait of the patient residents of that part of Nickel Belt, and to build a road that will make it possible for the residents of Missinabie, Renabie, and Dalton to take a breath of fresh air in the challenging areas outside their isolated domain.

I would also like to mention highway No. 64 from Noelville to Rutter which has been on the priority list for the last 5 years and which was started before the election but ended very shortly after.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belisle: Might I also refer to the long-discussed Sudbury-Timmins highway, which I am privileged to say was promised by the hon. Prime Minister himself and, if one is to believe the rumours from my hon. friends opposite about his early retirement, this road will have to be started shortly in order to bear the name of "Frost highway."

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): It certainly will.

Mr. Belisle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) and his department for the decision of amalgamation of greater Sudbury. As the hon. members are aware, I was against amalgamation beyond the boundaries that were chosen by the municipal board. I am very pleased to thank the government for the additional money that will be coming.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard so much discussion of our liquor laws in the last campaign that I feel that something should be done towards the granting of licences. Many of my small communities are deprived of having a hotel licence and the people feel that it is the government's responsibility to revise our liquor laws.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is right, that is right.

Mr. Belisle: Mr. Speaker, the last remarks that I would like to make are ones concerning The Department of Planning and Development. I was very pleased to see that the Gordon report made the recommendation that the planning branch should be transferred to The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Be careful now, he is touchy.

Mr. Belisle: At least there is a good hon. Minister in The Department of Municipal Affairs who will take the time to listen to our problems and find solutions for them.

An hon. member: Hear, hear,

Mr. Belisle: If I were permitted to use the proper definition for the planning branch,

I would call it the confusing branch. And I would like to say that, out of the 46 communities in my riding that have visited the department, or requested approval from that department, none has ever received satisfaction.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belisle: I would like to suggest that it has been our weakest link in the chain of good government.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say that we have, in the person of the hon. Prime Minister, the greatest Prime Minister that our province has ever had.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belisle: Not only is he willing to accept the criticism of the Opposition, but he invites and welcomes all the comments of his hon. members. Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, democracy never had a greater champion.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in this debate tonight I am reminded of the fact that it is only 5 years ago last Saturday that I had the privilege of addressing this legislative assembly for the first time. I must say that, in those 5 years, I have made many friends on this side and on the other side of the House.

Included in those friends, Mr. Speaker—in order that you may not put me out of order before this speech finishes, because you will probably have lots of chance—I want to say that I certainly regard you as one of them, and I congratulate you on your election to your very high office, and hope that you satisfy the hon. members of the Opposition to a little more extent than you have for the past two or three days.

I look across at the government benches and see, for example, an hon. Minister who is working very, very hard over there at the moment. I refer to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), and remember that he came into this legislative assembly at the same time I did, 1955.

There are other hon. gentlemen across there who also came into the Legislature at that time, including the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), who is not in his seat at the present time, and the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner).

I must say that I have found them to be gentlemen. While I may disagree with them in policy matters—which I hope to expound to some extent before the ending of the twenty-sixth Parliament—at the same time I have found them to be very fine people. I realize that one must have two sides to any government, that is a democracy, and I appreciate their side of the situation.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: I just noticed that the hon. member for York South admitted that we had to have two sides in every situation.

One of the greatest experiences I have ever had, as many hon. members of this House have had—indeed, many hundreds of thousands of people in Canada—was the opportunity to serve overseas. I served in an anti-tank battery with the former hon. Speaker of this House (Mr. Downer), and one of the things that I found was this: That whether one belongs to an artillery branch of the service, or the infantry, or the army service corps, or the ordnance corps, or whatever it might be, that a good man is a good man no matter where he may be.

I suggest that, inasmuch as the hon. member for York South suggested that we had to have two sides in a democracy, that if he really believes what he says, and if he believes he is a good man—as no doubt his followers do—that they should get on either one side or the other.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): It would not be on the side of the hon. member for Bruce.

An hon. member: Well, we would want to look him over first.

Mr. Whicher: Because, as we look to the south we see that our great democratic neighbour has a government divided by Republicans and Democrats, we know that, although we may differ in our opinions—that some of us may feel that we would like to be Democrats if we lived there, or some of us may feel that we would like to be Republicans, nevertheless, a good Democrat is a good Democrat and a good Republican is a good Republican, and a good—with all due respect to the hon. CCF leader, or whatever his name is, I have not found out just yet—I say that there have been many good Conservatives since 1867—

Applause.

Mr. Whicher: —and I hope that I get the same applause when I say there have been many good Liberals.

There is one thing about it, after the next election—I heard this said before the last one —there may be great CCF members in the future, but I have very grave doubts because we, in this assembly, do not even know what their name is going to be, let alone their policy.

Mr. Thomas: We know what the hon. member's name is, but we do not know what he stands for.

Mr. Whicher: Well, there is one sure thing, I will look after this speech, I am doing the standing just at the moment, and I will ask the hon. member for Oshawa to sit down.

Unfortunately the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) is not able to be here tonight. But I do feel, in my compliments to the various hon. members of the assembly, that I would most assuredly like to pay my tribute to our hon. leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario.

I feel that, in the short time in which he has been leader, that he has made an outstanding example—and certainly an outstanding example to us as members who follow him. Although the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) unfortunately is not in his seat tonight, I know that he is sincere when he says that he listens to the hon. leader of the Opposition at every opportunity possible.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I would also like to say just one short word about our caucus. I know that the hon. members in the government section, and supporters of the government, probably do not sneer at us—of course, that is not the word—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: I said they did not, I am sorry, I probably used the wrong word.

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Whicher: As far as the hon. member is concerned, I could use that word because he has done it very often around this place for the last two or three years.

But I say that it has been my privilege, since last June 11, to meet these newer hon. members of the Liberal caucus, and I feel that they have a great deal to offer in an Opposition party for the people of the province of Ontario.

For the next moment or two I would like to speak about my own riding, the riding of Bruce. I have talked about it in this assembly in the last 3 or 4 years, sometimes with not too much enthusiasm, but nevertheless I would like just for a few moments to speak about my own riding.

It is a large riding. It is over 110 miles in length. As far as width is concerned it varies in the northern part of the peninsula. Then, from where the peninsula starts near the town of Wiarton, where I come from, from a width of 10 miles it increases southward until we get to the width of 50 miles.

I would just like to say this. Even with my own hon. colleagues on this side of the House there have been many suggestions that we should get back to representation by population. It has been pointed out to me that there are ridings in the city of Toronto, or elsewhere in the province of Ontario, where an individual member may be representing up to, I do not know how many people—thousands and thousands, hundreds of thousands probably.

In the riding of Bruce, we have a population of approximately 40,000.

But I might say this, Mr. Speaker, that in rural ridings, where in any one given night one may be called to a women's institute meeting, or a Lions' Club meeting, or a Rotary Club meeting, or a Legion meeting, or any other meeting, it is not the least bit uncommon to travel 100 miles in one's own riding in one night. Therefore, I suggest, before we have a redistribution of seats in this House—which undoubtedly will come some time or another—that we remember that population is not the sole basis of getting the number of seats in this particular House.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) does not agree with him.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member for York Centre certainly does agree with me, and I do not have the same influence with the hon. member for St. Andrew or he would agree with me, too.

Mr. Grossman: That is not what he said today.

Mr. Whicher: There are many, many duties of a rural member—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: As a matter of fact, in my compliments to the House tonight—and I would like to do this most sincerely and the reason I did not do it was because the hon. Prime Minister was not in the House—I might say that I do not suppose there are many people in the Liberal caucus who have been told to go on back to the good air of Bruce peninsula as many times as I have by the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario.

But I might say this. Politically, of course—that is our duty as an Opposition—we wish him the worst ill-health in the future that it is possible to get.

At the same time, we are not that hard to get along with. I would just like to ask the hon. members sitting in the opposite benches over there, particularly the hon. Ministers, if this year, when their estimates come up, they will try to do their own job, just for once. I ask it because we all know that, in the province of Ontario, there are a lot of people who are dying all over the place. It may be me next. But let the hon. Ministers not drive the hon. Prime Minister to his death, whatever they do. We personally do not want him to be driven to his death at all. Politically, we are against him, but physically we hope that he will be with us in this province for a long, long time.

The riding of Bruce is primarily an agricultural area with about 6 small towns. It is at least three-quarters surrounded by water, with fishing areas where we used to catch fish before this government—which takes credit for everything in the world including the population of the province of Ontario—came into power. Since then, we have had no fish in the area whatsoever.

In the Hepburn era we had a great number of fish around this province.

We have a great tourist area, Mr. Speaker, and, as a matter of fact, the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) who is not in his seat tonight has paid several visits to our locality. I am sure he would verify that it is an area of which more advantage should be taken. Like other areas in the province of Ontario—and I am thinking most particularly about the Muskoka area—these two have the same advantages, the same scenery, the same inland fishing, the same type of people, and the tourist business to us is a big business. With this in mind I would like to direct my remarks to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests for just one moment.

In the Throne speech it was stated that money is going to be allocated for more provincial parks. Now, certainly it is true—and I am sure that this does not happen in many areas in this province—that Bruce county already has two provincial parks. But at the same time, in the Bruce peninsula which stretches from Wiarton to Tobermory, there is no park. Yet it is one of the finest scenic areas, and one of the greatest tourist areas, in the province of Ontario.

I say this to the hon. Minister: There are thousands and thousands of tourists who travel through the Bruce peninsula each year and there is no provincial park there. For the hon. Minister's information, his parks department is "for it," his field men are "for it," and all the hon. Minister has to do is to get the money from the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), and buy the land. The land is already there to buy. So I most humbly request, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister give some consideration to what I consider a most important matter.

This afternoon it was mentioned that the riding of Bruce has been most fortunate because we are getting the new 200,000-kilowatt nuclear electric station at Douglas Point between Kincardine and Port Elgin. I might say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members here, that I consider Bruce county to be most fortunate in getting this power station. And I might say this: Many times in the past, in trying to fight for industry for small towns or villages in rural ridings, I have been told that the reason we do not get it is because the population is not there to look after it.

Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully point out that in this particular instance I say that at least 95 per cent. of the permanent staff of this nuclear station will be imported into the county of Bruce. I give this to the attention of the government benches that if we can do it in one instance, as far as industry is concerned, we can do it in another. There is no reason why these old words "Forward Ontario" by the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario should only mean—with all due respect to the hon. member for York Centre—"Forward Toronto," because we in rural ridings also have something to stand for.

I say this to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) that if he is going to have the say about this—which I expect he will—and bring a professional staff into the rural riding of Bruce, the hon. Minister can do it in other areas—and I would hope, Mr. Speaker, in other areas in Bruce county itself.

Our riding is really an agricultural riding. But I thought tonight that, just for a little while—because there are many city hon. members in this assembly—I might point out to hon. members some of the problems of agriculture, or of the farmers of the province of Ontario.

I can tell by the way that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) is reading that paper that he knows all the problems. The unfortunate thing is that he has never come up with any of the answers. I will bring those up.

I did not come here, as hon. members know, to pat everybody on the back, so in case they get that idea—

An hon. member: Who are “they”?

Mr. Whicher: I do not know just who they are, but if they were here for the last couple of years they would know that it was not only going to be all “pat on the back” here tonight. I have no such intention.

I thought that I might point out, to some of the city hon. members, some of the problems that we have as rural hon. members, and some of the problems that the farmers in this great province of Ontario are having at this particular time.

The best education that I had, as a matter of fact, happened just after I came back from overseas, and it did not come from an agriculturist, it came from a great labour man. It has not been my privilege to meet many great labour men because my riding is really not a labour riding. I come from a very small town.

But when I came back from overseas as a young officer—before we were put into the civilian way of living—we had various people come to speak to us. For example, it might be the head of British American Oil, or the head of Shell Oil. On this particular afternoon it was the head of the Canadian Congress of Labour, Mr. Mosher, who has since died.

The incident was a great lesson to me. I remember Mr. Mosher addressing about 175 young officers who really were the most anti-labour people that it was possible to get in those days. Between the time that we had left Canada and come back, there had been certainly a semi-labour revolution. We just did not understand the circumstances. Mr. Mosher told us what was going on in the labour world, and what we could expect when once again we went into civilian life.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): When was this?

Mr. Whicher: This was in 1945.

After he had finished his speech, one could see that there was not a great deal of enthusiasm, and he asked us if there were any questions. Nobody said anything, so, of course, I had to say something or other.

So I said: “Mr. Mosher, it is not my intention to tangle with you, but I would just like to know this. You insist that people who work, for example, with the Ford Motor Company, or General Motors, or some big company, must join your union even though they say they do not want to.”

His answer was very good. As a matter of fact, I did not believe it at the time, but I certainly do now. He said: “If we increase the wages of a man by 25 cents an hour, or 10 cents an hour, whatever it might be, we feel that we are increasing the wages of everybody in that particular plant, and therefore it is necessary that everybody should support that idea.”

In 1945 I did not agree with Mr. Mosher, and I told him so in words that I have been ashamed of since. I was most enthusiastic, of course, coming back from quite a term overseas, and I said: “Look here, Mr. Mosher, we have just come back from fighting dictatorship and we are not going to have that kind of dictatorship in Canada.”

He explained to me in a very nice way that it was not dictatorship, that they were just trying to do something for the workers in the province of Ontario, or across the Dominion of Canada.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I most certainly agree.

Mr. Speaker, I told this story to hon. members to show them that the farmers of the province of Ontario, or of Canada, have the same problems, and that the old words, “united we stand and divided we fall” are equally true with the farmers of this province as they are with the labourers of this province.

In order to help themselves, the farmers of the province of Ontario have started what we know as farm commodity marketing groups and, for the information of the urban hon. members of this House, I may tell them that there are approximately two dozen farm commodity marketing groups in Ontario.

It is not my intention, by any means, to name all of them tonight but I will just name a few examples.

I will tell hon. members that there is the Ontario bean growers marketing board, and that simply means that the people who sell beans in the province of Ontario must sell them through the Ontario bean growers marketing board, who attempt to get the best price they can for the people who grow beans in the province of Ontario, just the same way as Mr. Mosher was attempting to get the best wages that he could for the people who work for whatever company it might be.

We have others like the Ontario beef producers association; the Ontario fruit and vegetable growers association; the Ontario peach growers co-operative; and one of the ones that has been on the lips of many people in the agricultural world in the last year or so—and I mention this one for a certainty—the Ontario hog producers association.

Now, in order to have these laws work effectively, whether it be under the system that Mr. Mosher explained to me or whether it be for the farmers of the province of Ontario, it is necessary that we have directives and legislation from whatever province we may be in. In this this particular instance, we are under the legislation of the province of Ontario.

In order to make these things effective, we must obtain legislation, in our instance, from the government of the province of Ontario, and I do not think that it has been unfair to ask that this government give that co-operation. In other words the government should help.

What is the situation, Mr. Speaker? The situation is exactly opposite. In the farmlands of the province of Ontario today, as we have had in the labour situation in years gone past, we have today farmer fighting farmer and neighbour fighting neighbour, and, in many instances, families fighting families, or brother fighting brother.

One of the reasons why we have this situation is the fact that it has not been appreciated by this government and, I might say, by past governments in Ottawa, but particularly by the government that we have in Ottawa at the present time.

It has not been recognized that the farmers of the province of Ontario have the right to make a living just the same way as the fellow who is working for General Motors in Oshawa or at the Ford Motor Company in Oakville or Windsor. It has not been recognized at all.

It is most amusing, Mr. Speaker, to go back and look at some of the speeches of the hon. members from the opposite benches. It is certainly not my intention, although I could very well do so, to go on all night and quote nothing but speeches from the hon. members opposite which would show what utter nonsense they were talking here only two or three years ago. At that time, they were begging for votes for the government down in Ottawa.

But today, Mr. Speaker, the situation is somewhat changed. And how it has changed! I say this because never, in the history of Canada since 1867, has the agricultural industry of the province of Ontario been in the terrible shape that it is right here tonight.

Sometimes it is very hard to repeat vocally what has been given orally in the past. But very fortunately in this House, everything is not oral, and we have a very good Hansard which records the remarks that have been said.

One of the best farmer hon. members of this province, certainly one of the best Tory members—if that is any particular thing to stand up about—is the hon. Minister whom I will quote.

Mr. Thomas: It does not amount to much.

Mr. Whicher: For the enlightenment of the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root), I would just like to repeat a few words he said in this House two years ago.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): Past history.

Mr. Whicher: Hon. members know that past history has not changed very much. When I hear the hon. Prime Minister over there, as a matter of fact, just this afternoon—

Mr. Simonett: Look ahead.

Mr. Whicher: It is a wonderful thing to have a Tory talk about looking ahead. I never saw one in this House who was looking ahead. They are all looking back in the past. They are looking at the glory of the hon. Prime Minister, and when he leaves that seat over there, Mr. Speaker, there will not be any future for them, it will all be in the past because he will be gone. But in any event, I might just mention this now.

This afternoon we were talking about the uranium industry in Elliot Lake and I listened to the hon. Prime Minister as he replied to the hon. leader of the Opposition, in regard to the speech from the Throne, in which he took credit for everything that ever happened in the province of Ontario, including the rising population in this great province.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, if anybody should take any credit for any rising population in the province of Ontario, the hon. leader of the Opposition has them beaten hands down.

But, in any event, that is what the hon. members do. They trot along in that old horse and buggy, and the only trouble is that it is getting older, and they are not going to be able to ride there too much longer.

Mr. Thomas: They are riding on a vision.

Mr. Whicher: Is the hon. member on my side now? I want to get all of you fellows together.

But in any event, I wanted to get back to the debate of 1958, and the hon. Minister without Portfolio who made a great speech—that was his day. He was really riding me, Mr. Speaker.

Tonight though, we are going to ride a different horse. The hon. Minister was quoting the market comparison between 1957 and 1958, and he was trying to tell us what a great job his government did—that is, hon. members sitting over there. I am glad they are over there when I look at the farmers of the province of Ontario and what a poor job the Diefenbaker government has done.

They have a slang phrase from where I come—but I do not suppose it has ever reached Toronto—it says “Go on relief with Dief.” Now I hate to repeat that here, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to work out that way, as far as the people in Bruce county are concerned.

In any event, the hon. Minister without Portfolio quoted these various figures, and it is not my intention to give them all, by any means. He quoted the fact that, in 1958—February 11, only two years ago—hogs were worth 30 cents a pound and, as a matter of fact, in 1957, one year before, the Liberals were in Ottawa and they had some co-operation. The Liberals in Ottawa were trying to co-operate with this government, hogs were then 34 cents a pound.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I want to ask the hon. Minister without Portfolio is: How much are they today? That is what I want to ask him. How much are they today?

Now, we are not going back 20 years, we are going back only two or three years, and then we are going to go ahead for the next year and see what will happen. I see the hon. Minister of Agriculture nodding his head over there but let him not nod it from any feeling of satisfaction, because he has not heard very much yet.

Now, one thing we have here is the price of eggs. I am talking about—

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Give them all—

Mr. Whicher: If the hon. member has any questions, I ask him to stand up because I would just as soon slaughter him as Canada Packers do those hogs up there. We are talking about eggs, just as an example, and I find here that on February 11, 1958, this grade “A” large, according to the hon. Minister without Portfolio—that great fellow who has the feeling spiritually, but not agriculturally, for the farmers of Ontario—that eggs were 30 cents a dozen, grade “A” large, delivered in Toronto. How much are they in his riding right today? When he takes off his hat—they are 19 cents a dozen, but all we have to do is look at the Toronto Globe and Mail.

An hon. member: What is the production—

Mr. Whicher: Never mind what the production is, I am talking about the farmers who are providing the eggs for hon. members and me to eat in the Royal York Hotel tomorrow morning, and the price is 19 cents a dozen.

Mr. Grossman: How much does the hon. member pay in the Royal York?

Hon. J. Root (Minister without Portfolio): What page is that?

Mr. Whicher: Would the hon. Minister like the page? It is page 770 in the 1958 debates. I hope he will not ask too often because I have a lot more pages.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to go into all the rest of these figures.

I do not know whether the hon. Minister without Portfolio transports poultry or not—he is in the trucking business—but if he is transporting poultry, he is the only man who is making a dollar out of poultry, because the fellow who is growing those hens and turkeys is not making a solitary nickel—

Mr. Lavergne: Do they grow them in Bruce?

Mr. Whicher: Well, let us talk about Wellington-Dufferin, if he wants to.

Mr. Lavergne: I know, but do they grow them in Bruce, or where?

Mr. Whicher: Well, I will tell the hon. member, I would not want to tell him what they grow in his riding—

Mr. Lavergne: I just want to know, that is all, if they grow them, or what.

Mr. Whicher: The point is this, Mr. Speaker, we expect labour to have a fair share and a good share. We expect the people of Spadina to be able to make a living in this province of Ontario.

Mr. Grossman: They won't make it out of hogs.

Mr. Whicher: Now, is it not fair to ask this, that the farmers of the province of Ontario should also be able to make a living? And I tell hon. members this, that when we have eggs being delivered in the city of Toronto at 19 cents a dozen, not only are they not making a living but they are going in the hole at a great rate of approximately 10 cents a dozen. That is a great deal.

Mr. Grossman: They make it up on the turnover, do they not?

Mr. Whicher: Well, what one might say is this. If a man who is getting 25 cents an hour works 12 hours a day, he gets $3, so the hon. member is going to suggest to me if he works for 14 hours a day he may make it up in his turnover. That is a whole lot of ridiculous nonsense, I will tell him. To the hon. member for St. Andrew I would simply say this, that he may be able to laugh his way out of Spadina, and I suggest that is the way he got here. But I am going to tell him this much, he cannot laugh his way out of the problems of the farmers of the province of Ontario.

I remind all of the city hon. members of this much, that while they may have the population in the province of Ontario they still have not got the votes, and we farmers are going to have them the next time whether hon. Tory members like it or not, as long as they keep that hon. Minister in power, because they will just come automatically.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Will you permit one question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, I would love one from the hon. Minister. I did not know he knew anything about this subject.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think the hon. member does not know a great deal about it. But I do live in an urban riding, and I hear this figure of 19 cents per dozen eggs bandied about, and eggs are delivered to my front door, once a week, from a local farmer who specializes in producing eggs.

Mr. Whicher: At what price?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That price, Mr. Speaker, varies from 40 cents to 55 cents a dozen. Now the question is this: Can the hon. member for Bruce explain the discrepancy between eggs in Toronto, for which the farmer gets 19 cents a dozen; and eggs in London, Ontario, for which he gets somewhere between 40 cents and 55 cents, depending upon the week-by-week variation?

Mr. Whicher: I am sorry, did he suggest—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Now look, I can only look after one question at a time, there are too many being asked around here. It will not be so hard to question the prices after the next Parliament. Did the hon. Minister suggest these were being delivered to his door at 40 cents a dozen?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, they are delivered to my door, and the doors of some of my neighbours, and those that are left over—that are not delivered from door to door—are taken to the local market in London, of which we are very proud. They are sold there to any person who wishes to walk into the market and buy them.

Mr. Whicher: At what price?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: At somewhere between 40 cents and 55 cents a dozen.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I beg pardon. Look, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I cannot quote it week by week because I am not there every week to pay, but I am there—

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister has not been there for two years, because that was the price two years ago.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): On a point of order—

Mr. Whicher: I beg pardon? Now look, I will look after the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. I have not the slightest intention of giving in. If I am going to give in, I am going to give in to a good man around here, and I do not consider the hon. Minister to be one.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Minister explain his point of order?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I am sure that the hon. member for Bruce does not want to give an impression to the House which is erroneous. He knows that there are deficiency payments, and that the federal government has set an average price of 30 cents which they will make the price up to.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Agriculture, as you know, is trying to pull the wool over my eyes. I hope that is parliamentary language. I would hate to have to withdraw that statement because that is the truth. What he is talking about are grade "A" eggs.

Now, I might say to the hon. Minister without Portfolio that he made an excellent job of his speech. He did not just quote grade "A" large eggs, for which there are deficiency payments—which incidentally are paid by the federal government in Ottawa, and paid out of the taxpayers' money in the province of Ontario on a limited quantity. That is right. But we also have the hon. Minister without Portfolio making an excellent job. I would never have made such an outstanding job as he did. He quoted grade "A" medium, which do not come under deficiency payments, which in the Toronto markets today were only 17 cents a dozen.

Mr. Laverigne: Read the papers, it is 27 cents, not 17 cents.

Mr. Whicher: He quoted grade "A" small which were only 13 cents a dozen; and he went right down to grade "C" which were 9 cents a dozen.

Now Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture is this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Whicher: I met the hon. member down there from wherever he comes from—somewhere in Ottawa—and I told him that it would be a good idea for him to come up here tonight because he has something to yell about. The only thing he can do in this House is yell, I have never heard him give a speech yet.

I wanted to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture about the deficiency payments on these grade "C" eggs that were 19 cents a dozen in the city of Toronto today.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): 21 cents.

Mr. Whicher: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Janes: Read the paper. What paper is the hon. member reading?

An hon. member: He cannot read.

Mr. Whicher: I certainly can read just as well as any hon. member over there can.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of quotations now from the speech from the Throne and, incidentally, I made one mistake tonight when I was congratulating all of the hon. members in the cabinet and the hon. members who support the government on the excellent job of cheering for the government as they have done in the past, not for performance but just for the effort.

I forgot to mention the fact that I thought that the two hon. members who moved (Mr. Davis) and seconded (Mr. Grossman) the speech from the Throne did very excellent jobs. There are some portions of the speech with which I do not agree, and therefore I wish to quote those sections:

This is what they said about agriculture, one of the greatest industries in the province of Ontario. The industry, Mr. Speaker—and I say this wholeheartedly, to the agriculturists and the farmers of the province of Ontario who control the number of seats in this Legislature—this is what they said in the speech from the Throne:

To insure that Ontario agriculture will be in the forefront of progress, a number of changes are being effected.

Well, I have shown hon. members what some of the changes are.

Pork today—instead of being 30 cents a pound two years ago—today is around 27 cents a pound. Eggs, instead of being 35 cents a dozen, are now down as low as 9 cents a dozen. Poultry, instead of being 40 cents a pound, is down around 15 cents a pound. Everybody is going broke as a result, in part, of the studies of the agricultural marketing inquiry committee of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister is rising to a point of order.

An hon. member: He is just standing there like a statue.

Mr. Speaker: This is a point of order. Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Root: I rise on a point of order.

I think the hon. member is misleading the House. I have the form in today's paper and the country dealer's price is 29 cents for grade "A." My point of order is that the hon. member is misleading the House on the price of eggs. Today's price is 29 cents for grade "A" large and the price for grade "C" is 16 cents, not 9 cents. Now, if he is going to make a statement and put it into Hansard, let him put the facts in.

Mr. Whicher: It is quite possible, quite frankly, because these things go day by day. It is quite possible that I may have, for two or three cents, made a mistake. I am not going to argue about that, but I might say that I do not blame the hon. Minister of Portfolio—

An hon. member: Without Portfolio.

Mr. Whicher: I do not blame him for standing up and accusing me of misleading the House because he is a professional in the field. He did it exactly two years ago when he tried to tell us—

An hon. member: Oh, he is rocking the boat.

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege.

Two years ago I did not mislead the House. I gave the facts as they were at that time, and if the hon. member wants me to, I will go at it and give him some facts about things tonight. But he is making a speech so let him go ahead, but he should not accuse me of misleading the House.

Mr. Whicher: You can bet your hat I am making a speech, and I might just say this, you did not give any facts at all. The facts that you gave were this. You were trying to say that because there was a Tory government in Ottawa—

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the member for Bruce that he must address remarks to the chair, not directly to the Opposition or the government members, and vice versa.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try to adjust my tone accordingly, because I think you are a very fine fellow.

As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister over there is not bad either, but he just did not know what he was talking about two years ago, that was all. I suggest that if there was anybody who was misleading the House it was the hon. Minister from Wellington-Dufferin—or wherever it is that he comes from. He misled the House.

He suggested, because there was going to be a Conservative government in Ottawa, that everything was going to be fine with the province of Ontario. I tell hon. members that no one ever made such a big mistake, as far as anyone who is speaking for the farmers of this province is concerned.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, that to my knowledge, there is no department of government, not only in Ontario but in the whole Dominion of Canada, that has made such a poor job as The Department of Agriculture in the province of Ontario.

The other day the hon. Prime Minister said to us, and quite rightly so—

Mr. Lavergne: They are trying to clean up the mess you Liberals made.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, will you have him address his remarks to you, too, please?

The other day the hon. Prime Minister, in standing over there, defending his party, said to the hon. leader of the Opposition: "Why are we sitting over here and you over there?"

Now, I want to give hon. members the answer. Of course, they have answers to those questions, but I say to them that there are thousands of farmers in the province of Ontario today who wish that we were sitting over there, and they were sitting here.

Mr. Lavergne: That is wishful thinking, my hon. friend.

Mr. Whicher: Even the farmers of Ontario—I am quite willing to do it myself—but even the farmers of Ontario will admit that they made a mistake. There are very few of them, to my knowledge, who will not say that they made a mistake when they voted the Conservatives into power, and particularly, I might say—and I say this through you, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to be misquoted—particularly in regard to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, if there was anybody who is the champion trapeze dancer of the province of Ontario, going on a—what kind of a fence did we use to call this in the olden days—a rail fence, it is the hon. Minister. He is dancing from one side to the other, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Where does the hon member stand?

Mr. Whicher: I will tell the hon. Minister where I stand. Where does he stand? I will tell him, and I will bet him $5 he will not tell me where he stands.

Mr. Lavergne: My hon. friend is riding that fence.

Mr. Whicher: If there ever was a man who was the champion dancer along these rail fences, it is the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

At the present time he has all the farmers of the province of Ontario fighting each other. The farmers' union are fighting the federation of agriculture, and vice versa. The people who are in favour of the hog marketing plan are fighting desperately against those who are opposed to it, and against the small truckers in this province.

That is the way that the hon. Minister of Agriculture really wants it in this province—and the whole government sitting over there—because we must not just blame the hon. Minister of Agriculture, because he has a leader.

I refer to the hon. Prime Minister who does everything, and we listen to it and none of us believes it. But he takes credit for everything including the rise in population when we know perfectly he is not in the same class as the hon. leader of the Opposition. He does everything, except when something goes wrong.

For example, when difficulties are obvious in the agricultural industry of this province, why then will he not accept the responsibility? I say that if a Prime Minister of this province is going to accept the credit when things are going well, then he must accept the criticism when things are the other way. He must accept the blame. If there could ever be blame thrown in any particular instance, it is the blame against this government for the way they are treating the agricultural people of the province of Ontario.

Let us just for a minute look at the hog marketing plan. Now, the hon. Minister of Agriculture has asked me where I stand. All he has to do is read the Hansards of the past number of years. Before I came in here tonight, and for the past week or two, I have been reading the Hansards of the past number of years, and I still do not know where the hon. Minister of Agriculture stands.

All he is doing is standing on the rail fence, dancing around like the skaters down there in Squaw Valley. He is going from one side to the other trying to please everybody and yet not pleasing anybody.

Consequently today, in spite of the fact that we have about 68 per cent.—and more than that, as the hon. Minister will find when the vote is taken—who are in favour of the hog marketing plan as it is being run today—with certain alterations I may agree, but nevertheless—

Mr. Lavergne: What are the alterations?

Mr. Whicher: I will explain it to the hon. member if he will just give me the time. With certain alterations, but nevertheless agreeing with the principle of a hog marketing plan.

Mr. Lavergne: He is standing one side—

Mr. Whicher: Listen, just where does that hon. member come from?

Mr. Lavergne: Russell.

Mr. Whicher: Well, wherever it is, I wish he would go back there.

Mr. Lavergne: Well, my hon. friend is not man enough to send me.

Mr. Whicher: Well, the hon. Minister decided he is not going to go along with this system because they sell over the telephone, which they have been doing for the last two or three years. Yet, the hon. Minister did not have the intestinal fortitude to stand up here last year and say it, and I do not care, Mr. Speaker, whether that annoyed you or not, I am telling it right to him.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): He has been taking drama lessons.

Mr. Whicher: Why did the hon. Minister not say it last year? He did not say it last year. I went right through Hansard and he not only did not say it, but he did not have the nerve to say it.

I say this to you, Mr. Speaker, if a person should retire because of inefficiency, which has happened many times in this world before, it is the hon. Minister of Agriculture. If he does not believe me, let him walk through the riding of Bruce, that I have the honour to represent, because the people there—

Mr. Simonett: It is a very small riding. The hon. member said so.

Mr. Whicher: Well, it is big enough to look after the hon. member any time, if he wants to step out there—

Mr. Simonett: I might try it some day.

Mr. Whicher: Well, if he ever does, this might turn out to be his first speech and his last one, too.

If anybody should resign because he has not the capabilities of fulfilling his office, it is the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Here we have eggs selling at 19 cents a dozen, and it is a fact that one cannot produce them for less than 29 cents or 30 cents.

It is a proven fact that, when farmers want marketing plans in this province, and demand a bit of assistance from the government in the same way that the government has attempted to give assistance to labour legislation in this province, they have not done it. If an hon. Minister, who is the head of such a department as this, proves himself a failure, then I suggest that, to do his conscience some good—or certainly to do the farmers of this province some good—he should get out of the job and give it to somebody else who can at least attempt to handle it more capably.

Mr. Lavergne: Is the hon. member looking for work?

Mr. Whicher: It is not personal. I am not the least bit personal. Any time the hon. Minister of Agriculture wants to answer it—well, just let him step along. Now, the hon. Minister may as well resign because he will be out of there after the next election anyway.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is all very well for the Tory hon. members to pour ridicule on me here tonight, and I do not mind it in the least bit. But I say this, particularly to the Tory hon. members who represent rural ridings, that they never had a better chance in their lives—not tonight because I do not want to embarrass them at all—to stand up in their own caucus and to say that things are not right with the agriculture industry in this province of Ontario.

I admire the hon. member who preceded me tonight (Mr. Belisle) because he at least stood up—and, very capably I might say—in this House and pointed out that all is not right in the Tory regime in Toronto.

Now, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are many hon. members who may be smiling around here tonight—Tory members—and I do not expect them to stand here tonight and all I expect them to do is boo me, for which I am very happy.

But in their own caucus, for goodness sakes, let those hon. members stand up for the people who are back home, who are going broke because poultry is only 15 cents a pound, who are going broke because eggs are only 19 cents a dozen, and hogs—instead of 30 cents that the hon. Minister without Portfolio quoted some two years ago—are 25 cents and 24 cents a pound and probably—because we have importation of American pork now—pork will be down to 18 cents a pound in the next two or three months.

They should stand up for the people back home, and ask what is going to be done about it, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I think that is only fair, if a person is going to be vehement in his criticism, that he should have at least some idea of what should be done in order to help this.

I might say this—and I said it 4 years ago in this House—that one of the things that the agricultural people need in this province is a larger population to eat the eggs and the pork, and to use what the farmers produce, or the beef, or to use more of the shoes or the overalls or the suits or the glasses—whatever it may be that it is manufactured in this province of ours.

I need no greater authority, Mr. Speaker, than the hon. Prime Minister of this House, who, on numerous occasions in the past two or three months, has stressed the fact that we need more population, not only in the province of Ontario, but in the whole Dominion of Canada. I have an editorial here from the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 12, and the headline says,

FROST STRESSES NEED FOR MORE POPULATION

With such statements I most assuredly agree.

I think about the huge amounts of food that are produced in the United States of America, but then, when I realize that perhaps 80 per cent. of all that food is eaten in the United States of America, I realize that the easiest way for us to get rid of the agricultural surpluses of this province and of Canada is to have more people here. And yet if the hon. Prime Minister suggests that we should have more population here, with which I most assuredly agree, then it is very surprising that the people for whom he stands have done very little about it.

Mr. Simonett: Be careful of that statement.

Mr. Whicher: All I will do is stress the facts, with which I hope the hon. member will agree, because in 1957—and the reason I mention that is because that was the year that great government in Ottawa left office—some 282,000 immigrants came into Canada. In 1959, only two years later, although this great hon. Prime Minister of Ontario went around the country trying to make political speeches, saying that we should have more people, only 106,920 immigrants came into the Dominion of Canada. Now then I ask hon. members this—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Over half of them came to Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: I will give hon. members the Ontario figures. I will give them to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs in just a moment, as far as Ontario is concerned.

But the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario did indeed go around, strictly for political purposes, stating that we need more people in Canada. But we find that, in 1957, there were 282,000 immigrants who came here, and last year there were only 106,000, and in this province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Why do they come here?

Mr. Whicher: Now, I will give a few facts of life to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, through you, Mr. Speaker. There were 147,000 immigrants who came into the province of Ontario. We certainly needed them, I could not agree more wholeheartedly. But in 1959 this great province, that the hon. Prime Minister and all of us attempt to stand up for, and say that we need more people here, instead of 147,000, there were only 55,976 immigrants came—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: —and are the hon. members happy about that? I am not—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Still over 50 per cent.

Mr. Whicher: It does not matter. Fifty per cent. of two, as the hon. Minister knows, is only one.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Why do they come here?

Mr. Whicher: Now, look here, here is the situation as far as Ontario is concerned, and indeed as far as Canada is concerned. What we need more than anything else is more people. We need a great many more people. We need people, as I said before, to eat our eggs, to eat our pork and beef, to wear our neckties, to chew our gum. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What kind of gum is that?

Mr. Whicher: —or chocolates.

We need all of these people. But it is somewhat amusing when we find a man of the prestige of the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, going around, in this particular instance, to Ottawa, saying we need more people—and then we find that, two years after the Liberal government left Ottawa, only one-third of the number of people who came in 1957 are coming in 1959. How does one figure that thing out? I do not figure it at all—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: He had better go to Ottawa and ask them.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister has nothing to do with Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I would not say that.

An hon. member: Let us get back to Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: Yes, let us get back to Ontario. I would be very glad to get back to Ontario.

Mr. Grossman: Well, we have nothing to do with immigration.

Mr. Whicher: All right, we will not go to Ottawa at all. The fact is that in 1957 some 147,000 people came into Ontario, and last year there were only 55,000, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: The rest of them went to Australia.

Mr. Grossman: What can we do about that?

Mr. Whicher: What can we do about it?

I will tell hon. members what we can do, we can stop going around and being sort of semi-hypocritical, making headlines that say: "Frost Stresses Need for More Population." If we need population, let us go and get it. There are thousands of people who want to come to Ontario. There are thousands—and as a matter of fact the hon. member for St. Andrew had better be very careful because I remember speeches of his only two or three years ago in which he stressed the great job that the government of the future would do, as far as immigration is concerned. These are the facts, these are the facts.

An hon. member: There are 32 people in Ontario House, what are they doing about immigration?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, something has been given to me by one of my hon. colleagues here. I hope that the hon. members in the government benches will not think that this is something that is wrong. We have been dealing with immigration for the province of Ontario. In Ontario House in London, we have 32 people on a staff attempting to get people, immigrants, into the province of Ontario. Now what I want to know is this: in 1957 they got 147,000 over here, and last year, they only got 55,000, so have they cut the salary of those people in Ontario House by a third? I ask because that is exactly the percentage of people who came to this province.

However, we will deal with that later when we come to it. We will have the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) deal with that when he deals with the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle).

There is one other thing that I would like to suggest, besides an increase in population, in this province and in Canada, because obviously that is what we need to look after our goods.

I suggest this most sincerely to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, when he is dealing with marketing, that he should not just think about marketing in the province of Ontario. There is no use trying to sell more pork to us in Ontario, or more beef, or more beans, because we are too fat now. We are eating far too much.

Where we have to sell this agricultural produce is to people who are hungry. The realistic thing about this situation is that one-third of the people in the whole world tonight are somewhat hungry, and we have the food to feed them here in Ontario and in Canada. Mr. Speaker, what is the hon. Minister of Agriculture doing about it? Not one single thing.

Mr. Lavergne: What did the hon. member for Bruce do about it?

Mr. Whicher: I did not do anything about it, because I was not there and I did not have anything to do about it. I am speaking to these hon. Ministers in high authority, who are now sitting on the seats opposite—I suggest tonight, Mr. Speaker, it is the hot seat—I am asking what are they going to do about these food surpluses that we have in the province of Ontario that we cannot sell here, when one-third of the world is going hungry? What are they going to do about it?

I suggest this. The hon. Minister has been spouting around this province, saying that we have too many agricultural organizations.

I am not a person who goes after civil servants when they are not in a position to speak back in this House. I suggest, regarding the people he hires in research in marketing, that he send them to fields where their abilities can be recognized, because there is no use sending them to people who live in this province who, like ourselves in this House, have enough to eat already. There is no use in sending them down to Washington either, because they have too much to eat there, too. But, Mr. Speaker, in China—

Mr. J. W. Hanna (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The member has a point of order.

Mr. Whicher: Which hon. member is this? Mr. Speaker, I did not know he was an hon. member, I have not seen him here very often.

Mr. Hanna: Mr. Speaker, having 4 townships in the county of Bruce, I feel very hurt to hear the remarks about the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

The point of order is the fact that my good hon. friend from Bruce would not make this speech in Bruce.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

For the information of the hon. gentleman and to you, Mr. Speaker, not only will I make it in Bruce but I will make it in the hon. member's home town. All he has to do is invite me up there. I will be there. And I invite him to be on the same platform, and we will see who gets the greatest applause. Now, has he anything else to say?

Mr. Hanna: Well, he is a hero—

Some hon. members: Point of order. Point of order.

Mr. Hanna: I might say to the hon. member for Bruce that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has been a member of this House since 1943, and I can assure hon. members it is no boy's job being Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): What is the point of order?

Mr. Hanna: Well, the point of order is this—having 4 townships in the county of Bruce, I feel that—

Mr. Lavergne: Now, let the hon. member for Bruce listen and learn something.

Mr. Hanna: I hope I am not talking to fatheads.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the member has no point of order.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that I was interrupted that way. As a matter of fact, I was getting almost as dry as the last hon. member who spoke, and I wanted to have a glass of water. So, anytime that any other hon. member wants to interrupt me for a couple of minutes, it is quite all right with me.

There is another matter I am interested in, and I certainly do not want to take a long time tonight. I understand that the budget is coming down next week, and it is going to be my responsibility to direct some sort of criticism to the government—which will not be hard to give.

Mr. Lavergne: That will be an eye-opening revolution, my hon. friend.

Mr. Whicher: I am certainly glad that it is I who will give it, and not the hon. member for Russell.

But one other thing that I wish to speak about, for only a very short time, is the fact that, not only are we an agricultural county, in the past we have also been a fishing county. We are three-quarters surrounded by water in Bruce county. For many, many years—and I do not want to give particular blame to this government, although I would certainly like to—for many, many years we enjoyed a great commercial fishing business in Bruce county.

Now, of course, for various reasons that have been explained in a haphazard way by the government hon. Ministers on the benches opposite, the fishing industry is not nearly so good as it had been in the past.

One of the things that I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, and I say this most sincerely, is this fact, that in the past 10 years there have been several fish hatcheries closed in the province of Ontario. As a matter of fact, in 1950 there were 26 operating fish hatcheries in this province, and in 1960 there are only 20. The reason that has been given by people who represent this government, is the fact that in some instances fish hatcheries are no good. They say, in the natural course of events, that fish, in their breeding grounds in Lake Huron or Lake Erie or Lake Superior or wherever they may be, will produce many more million of spawn than one can possibly produce through fish hatcheries.

My question, Mr. Speaker, is simply this: If fish hatcheries are no good, let us throw them out altogether. What is the sense of just closing down one or two?

If they are good, let us have more fish hatcheries, because that is the only way the commercial fishing industry is ever going to get back on a sound basis in this province.

But if they are no good, Mr. Speaker, I say to hon. members, why does not the department close them up altogether, instead of closing up 6, as they have done in the last two or three years? These include fish hatcheries in Sault Ste. Marie; Southampton, in my own riding; Collingwood, which is in a riding very close to my own; Kenora; Sarnia; and Fort Frances.

As a matter of fact, speaking about Fort Frances—and I point this out, Mr. Speaker, in a very hesitating manner, but I feel I would be negligent in my duty if I did not do so, after listening to the hon. member telling us what a great place they have in northern Ontario—I was surprised and humiliated this afternoon when there was not one single hon. member from northern Ontario supporting the government benches who would rise and talk on behalf of the little people of Elliot Lake, not one single hon. member.

Mr. Lavergne: The Liberal hon. members were on their feet all afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: They took up all the time.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, any excuse is a great deal better than no excuse at all. But I was surprised that hon. members who represent that great area of northern Ontario, on the government side, would not rise and say something like the hon. member we heard tonight. He did an excellent job. He is not one of these hon. members who stand back and pound the benches every time the hon. Prime Minister stands up, or every time one of the hon. Ministers rise.

Why, as a matter of fact, I do not think he pounds the benches for the hon. Ministers as much as I do myself. He does a good job for his riding.

But this afternoon we had an example that was not good for the province of Ontario when we did not have one single Tory hon. member of this House from northern Ontario rise and speak for the people of northern Ontario. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is to their shame.

It is also to their shame, and to that of these hon. Ministers on the government benches, Mr. Speaker, who take credit for everything that happens in this province. If they are going to take credit for everything that happens, let them take credit for the fact that the fishing industry in this province has gone from a high area to nothing at all.

When I was talking about northern Ontario, I was including the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope), so if he has something to say, why does he not say it?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister has a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would like to ask the hon. member for Bruce how many Opposition hon. members from northern Ontario, or northwest Ontario, rose to speak?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to answer the question, through you, to the hon. Minister. We had the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) who gave an outstanding speech. We had the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) who gave an outstanding speech. Now, when one considers the representation in this House, I would suggest, in order to rectify that, we should have—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, is there any time left?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, tell that bald-headed Minister to keep quiet.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest this, as far as representation is concerned, they should have had 8 speakers rise. They had all the chance they wanted this afternoon. The hon. Prime Minister cut this debate off, it was not anybody else.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to go a little bit farther. I do not want to take up more than another hour and a half, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lavergne: Watch out, the hon. member coaching him is from Toronto.

Mr. Whicher: I just want to say this, Mr. Speaker, as far as the fishing industry in this province is concerned, I do not know of any province that has so much water, and such a government that demands so much credit, which has so few fish.

I do not know one province in this whole Dominion of Canada that has so many thousands of acres of good farming land, so many thousands of good farmers, yet has such poor prices.

I do not want to take up much more time tonight, Mr. Speaker, although I know I have lots of time, but there are a few hon. members opposite who want to say something too.

I understand that the budget will be coming down next week. Well, as a matter of fact, I may just take a few more minutes, thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention something—

Mr. C. S. MacNaughton (Huron): Would the hon. member permit a question? Possibly he would like another drink of water. Would he permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, I will.

Mr. MacNaughton: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this: How much longer is the hon. member going to talk, in terms of carping criticism, destructive criticism of the hon. Ministers, and with a lack of proper deference to the chair, without telling this House how he and his associates ever hope to become the alternatives to the present government?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I will even answer that question, because not only does it show lack of deference to myself which I do not mind, but the lack of wisdom in the question shows such lack of deference to yourself that I would not want to answer the question.

Mr. Lavergne: That is skating on pretty thin ice.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question about the fishing industry? This is a fair question and I think he will—

Mr. Whicher: It will be the first one I have had tonight, but it is all right.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: This is a fair question, I think.

Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that the fishing industry does have its fluctuations from year to year? In other words, it goes in cycles. Whereas at one time we have too many fish, at another time, as now we have, there are too few. Is that not true?

Mr. Whicher: I think that is a very fair question and I think that there are fluctuations, in the same way as there are in the agricultural industry. We have poor fishing times and we have poor agricultural times.

The only thing, Mr. Speaker, is this. I cannot understand why the poor fishing and the poor agriculture are always in the Tory times. That sort of gets me down.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing more I would like to mention before I sit down. It is something that is recommended quite sincerely in the Gordon report, which I have studied to quite some extent, and in which I have been very interested for the last number of years. I refer to its recommendations as far as the Ontario Hydro is concerned. And I say this most sincerely.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Whicher: I am sorry, I did not hear him. He will have to let me know.

Mr. Noden: The hon. member made the statement that we recommended the fish hatchery be closed at Fort Frances. I do not want to be associated with that because that is not so. It was recommended by the sportsman's club and the camp operators' association that the fish hatchery at Fort Frances be closed, and that the programme be worked from the Kenora fish hatcheries.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if I have done the hon. member, for whom I have a great deal of regard incidentally, any harm, I had no intention of so doing. I merely mentioned the fact that this government, in the last 10 years—and believe me I have nothing against the hon. member personally, but it is these hon. Ministers with whom I do not agree—I said that they were the people who closed the hatchery. It was not the hon. member. I know that if he had his way that he would have kept the hatchery open. But he has nothing to say whatsoever, because they have a dictatorship over there which closes hatcheries whenever they wish to close them.

Mr. Janes: The hon. member said the Sarnia hatchery was closed by this government. It was closed because they could not get enough eggs to support it. The government did not want to close it.

Mr. Whicher: I will be very glad to answer. The only reason it was closed, of course, is because they cannot get eggs, because they cannot get fish, because Tory times are hard times. That is the reason and there are 6 hatcheries closed, I do not care what the hon. members say. I have them right here from their own figures, from the office of their own hon. Minister, so that is the end of that point of order.

One thing that I wanted to mention, Mr. Speaker, was something that was said in the Gordon report. As far as the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario is concerned—and I refer to page 81 dealing with boards and commissions. I will not be long here, I realize it is getting late.

The Gordon committee recommended that complete reports on all important phases of Hydro's operations be presented to the Legislature annually, and that Hydro's capital expenditure and financing programme be reported to the Legislature in advance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal more that could be said about Hydro in this province and its dealings with this Legislature. But what I would like to say is this:

We are the representatives. Hon. members and I, sitting in this legislative assembly, are the representatives of the taxpayers and of the people of the province of Ontario.

Ontario Hydro is a huge organization. As far as we are concerned, it has been doing an excellent job. But this organization owes more by far—one and three-quarter times as much—as the whole province of Ontario. It goes around borrowing money in New York or Toronto, or wherever it may be, in huge amounts. May I point out that they owe their allegiance to this Legislature and to nobody else. I will give hon. members an example.

We will take the frequency standardization programme which started in 1949. It was agreed in this assembly, when it was debated, that there would be approximately $191 million spent. Yet we found 10 years later, last year, that $375 million had been spent in the frequency standardization programme of Ontario Hydro in this province.

I ask hon. members where that money came from, Mr. Speaker. It was borrowed. Who signed the note? The taxpayers of the province of Ontario signed that note. Who represents the taxpayers of the province of Ontario? You and I do.

Therefore, we should have some say about this. The Gordon report says that all important phases of Ontario Hydro's operations should be presented to this Legislature annually, and that all capital expenditures and finance programmes should be reported to this Legislature in advance.

There is just one more instance before I sit down. Everyone, as far as I know, agrees that the St. Lawrence seaway is a good job. Everybody in the province of Ontario, and indeed as Canadians, were proud of what happened there.

But the fact is that it had cost a great deal of money, many hundreds of millions of dollars, in order to put that programme through and it was endorsed by the taxpayers of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. Prime Minister will take what I say into account. The people, the taxpayers of the province, are endorsing these hundreds of millions of dollars, and even though we feel that it is good business, that the people who represent those taxpayers—and who are signing the notes, amounting to almost two billion dollars—should make a report, not only of the annual expenses of Hydro but of the future capital estimates, and that these reports should come to this legislative assembly.

Mr. I. Haskett (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, it is probable that almost every hon. member of this House, in rising to make his maiden speech, had feelings of timidity and inadequacy akin to those I now experience. Yet, ever since taking my seat, and even now, paramount in my thought and feelings has been a consciousness of the meaning and majesty of Parliament that I had not known before.

Meeting in this building, redolent with the history of Ontario, one is reminded on every hand of the great events of our past and of those famous men who, through the years, laid the foundations or made signal contributions to the growth and development of this province.

Well, we know that scarce 180 years have come and gone since the first 4 or 5 families of settlers were induced to settle in the shelter of the fort at Niagara. Eleven years later, under The Constitution Act of 1791, the new colony of Lower Canada was created and given its first Parliament. They became unhappily yoked in the United Province of Canada in 1841 and emerged as the Province of Ontario with Confederation.

In the library I found that old volume by Frank Yeigh that depicts the first 100 years of Parliament, running from the first assembly until these buildings were opened in 1892, just one century later. I was particularly fascinated by his tales of the earliest days; of the arrival of John Graves Simcoe at Niagara, later called Newark; of his summoning the first Parliament; of its assembly on September 17, 1792.

According to Yeigh's record, Governor Simcoe opened the Parliament under an oak tree, resplendent in his scarlet uniform and sitting on a camp stool. I found myself wondering if, in fact, Ontario has so closely paralleled the foundation of British self-government laid in that other open-air Parliament at Runnymede.

I learned with interest, sir, that the Speaker's chair dates from 1874. It was presented on behalf of the friends and supporters of the then Speaker, Mr. R. M. Wells. It was refinished and re-upholstered and placed on the Throne in this chamber when these buildings were opened in 1892.

It gives me the occasion, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate you on your election by this twenty-sixth Parliament, and to say what a pleasure it is to see you esconced in such a handsome setting, and occupying that historic chair with such distinction.

I walked around old Queen's Park, opened 100 years ago, and looked at the statues. How eloquent are those statues and the portraits and engraved tablets in the corridors. How they parade before the mind's eye those great men of yesteryear—John Sandfield Macdonald who so stoutly, steadfastly and stubbornly resisted the whole idea of federation yet became Ontario's first Prime Minister; George Brown; Robert Baldwin; Oliver Mowat; James Whitney; and then the greatest of them all, John A. Macdonald of Canada West, who battled against disillusionment and discouragement and defeat to see his dream of Confederation a reality.

One would be an ingrate indeed, if he were not here moved to a new and deeper appreciation of our heritage, and callous, who knew no surge of pride in those early pioneers who built so surely and well, or was lacking in thankfulness to Almighty God for the blessing of our British birthright, our free parliamentary institution and for the high sense of duty and integrity of those who, down through the years, have been entrusted with public office.

On the scroll beneath Ontario's crest above your head is the Latin motto—Ut Incepit Fidelis—Sic Permanet—Loyal She Began—Loyal She Remains. Loyal to her traditions, to her trust, to her high destiny. So might it be.

With about a score of new hon. members I entered this House, honoured by the people of Ottawa South, constituents who had been long and ably represented by Mr. George Dunbar—honourably and affectionately known in Ottawa as "the old pro."

I pay my tribute to my illustrious predecessor—and as perchance he watches me from the gallery, or learns of what I am doing from the sidelines, I hope he will have the feeling that I am endeavouring to carry forward his good work.

It is my hope, and that of all of us, that George Dunbar and his loving wife may be long spared in good health to enjoy the happy retirement they both so richly deserve.

At this time, when we wait hourly for the Royal birth, in the minds and thoughts and prayers of the people of the Commonwealth there must be this thought, and this petition, that the Queen be safely and easily delivered and that the child to be born may be a joy to its parents and a blessing to the nation.

Traditionally, this Throne speech is a time for generalities, a vehicle or omnibus for expressions of all kinds, by hon. members. If I had little of pressing importance to say tonight, I would gladly regale the House with various things, speaking in a laudatory manner of items of local interest.

Gladly would I tell hon. members of the incomparable beauty of Ottawa in spring-time, when a million blooms burst open during tulip festival, in a riot of colour. There is beauty there more wondrous than the mind of a poet could imagine, or the deftest brush of an artist hope to paint. One would have to see it to believe it. I would tell hon. members of the nerve-tingling action of the changing of the guard on Parliament Hill, that has proved an attraction to tourists and visitors beyond their best hopes.

But for many, the loveliest of all seasons is the wintertime when the snow lies deep—we have had over 7 feet—or rises in great billowing piles of snowy white, sparkling in the sunshine. True, it is a problem to the city fathers, and to the taxpayers, who must plow hundred of miles of roadway, for there is no place to put snow in such volumes. They must cart it away in greater quantities than in any other place in this country—the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) will please take note—not only to keep the streets and the main trunk lines open for the people of Ottawa, but to provide unimpeded flow of traffic of motor vehicles from near and far.

But it is to the hills in and around Ottawa that the people go, literally, in tens and tens of thousands to enjoy the most exhilarating and thrilling of all winter sports. It is as an active and ardent life member of the Ottawa ski club I want to say to the House, sir, that it has the largest membership of any ski club in the world. But enough of that for now.

There are matters of serious concern to the constituency I represent, matters of civic affairs, of education, health and welfare, highways, and public works. May I mention just briefly for the moment the matter of hospital accommodation that is of such concern to the people of our city at this time.

The local spokesman for the Ottawa branch of the academy of medicine has said that there are some 2,700 cases waiting for admission to the Ottawa civic hospital—I do not know if that figure is right. I do know that there is a scarcity of accommodation at this time, because the people phone me to see if I can use my offices to help get admission for some member of the family—of course I cannot. I know that a good friend of mine, a surgeon of renown, has actually operated in the home of his patient. I know that in the corridors of the civic hospital, sick people lie in cots, even when in a state of unconsciousness.

I wonder if I could ask the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) if he would take a very real personal look into this situation.

If we need a hospital for the aged or for the chronically ill, or mentally ill, then that has to come, but perhaps he will take the present critical situation into his heart and conscience, for, besides being an able administrator, I know he is a great humanitarian.

I would ask that he look into the possibility of finding a temporary situation for the crowding at the moment, until our new hospital building can be opened. Perhaps on another look into the conditions at the sanatorium he would find accommodation suitable to meet a temporary situation.

I purpose to leave the other matters of concern to the constituency for the moment, in the hope of having an early opportunity to deal with them further, to speak now of one matter of interest that I think should be of concern to this House and will I hope prove of interest to every hon. member.

As a starting point, let us take a fast look at the current economic situation. In these days of unprecedented growth and expansion, Canada—and in particular Ontario—has been reaching new levels in most all the major segments of the economy. As we entered this new decade, and Ontario closed the books on 1959, it was to conclude the most successful year in our history.

Employment was at an all-time high in 1959, of almost 2.25 million; income was 7.5 per cent. higher than in 1958.

A strong demand for manufacturing products played a big part in the year's recovery. Heavy goods—iron, steel, industrial machinery, machine tools, electrical apparatus, industrial chemicals, all higher than in 1958—led the way. Steel ingot production, often regarded as a barometer in the industrial field was more than 35 per cent. higher than the previous year. Employment, income, production, sales, were all higher in 1959 as the population of this province nudged and crossed the 6 million mark.

The very buoyancy of our economy poses a question: Can we maintain this progressive balanced growth and so look forward with confidence to a continuing advance in our economic and social welfare and standards of living?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a change is coming in our economy, coming faster perhaps than most of us realize. I speak of the new or modern chapter in the industrial revolution.

I should like to speak for a few minutes to the House on this one facet of our economy and industry, resulting from the surge of scientific and technological advance, and particularly the demand of it on the training and employment of our people. In this race with automation and technological advance, it may well be later than we think.

The Canadian conference on engineering, scientific and technical personnel held at St. Andrew's, New Brunswick, about 3 years ago raised the storm signals clearly for all to see. They dealt in a comprehensive manner with the nature and the magnitude of the problem they defined as the need for additional professional and technical manpower.

It may well be that the case for the universities is now being well espoused—at least they do not seem to be lacking for advocates and champions.

I was privileged last Friday to attend the official opening of Carleton University's magnificent new Rideau River campus. I heard the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) speak glowingly, and with justification, of the tremendous growth and increase in the universities of this province, going back to the time Carleton began on a shoestring; then Assumption; Waterloo; and now York and Laurentien. It is a thrilling and gratifying story indeed. He said that he looked forward to the time, in 1980, when we will have quadrupled the enrolment in our universities.

But the problem looked at by the conference I referred to was the need for additional professional and technical manpower. Now, to utilize adequately or economically the services of one graduate engineer, there should be a supporting group or body of at least 3 highly skilled technicians. We do not have 3 such technicians for every graduate engineer—we do not have one technician for every 3 engineers. I doubt if we have anything in the order of 10 per cent. of the pool or body of skilled technicians that we could economically and usefully employ.

To look at the background of this inadequate treatment of the whole scheme of technical training, of what we might call the sub-graduate level, we have to look at it against the background of the fact that we have come through a transition from an agricultural to an industrial economy in a period of very rapid scientific and technical advance. Everything points to the fact that both the scope and rate of advance will be even greater.

If Canada is to avoid entering the atomic and space age ill-equipped to stay in the van with other progressive industrial nations, then we must reassess our whole thinking of this problem and take a new and very practical approach to it, or else resign ourselves to becoming a very second-class nation.

One has but to look at the leading industrial nations—Great Britain, Germany, and other European nations and more recently the United States and Russia—and see the importance that they attach to this level of technical training to realize this. Perhaps the best comparisons lie between the United States and Russia, since the progress or advancement—or indeed the very existence of our system—centres on these two nations.

Compared with Canada, of course, the United States would have a great many more technicians, yet comparative with the Soviet Union, she pales into insignificance.

In 1956, the United States had an enrolment in its technical institutes of about 67,000 against the Russian enrolment of about 2 million, or 30 times as many.

The picture is modified considerably by the fact that the United States has accomplished much in training men on the job in what we call in-plant training. By 1957, for instance, the total number of highly skilled technicians in the United States would be in the order of about 600,000, as against some 4 million in the Soviet Union perhaps a year or two or more before.

Latest enrolment figures show that this imbalance continues; I am sure it will continue for some time to come. The consequences of it, sir, are so manifest, so strikingly and frighteningly manifest, in the relative performances in the field of science of these two nations.

I cannot say what we have in the way of trained technicians in Canada. We just do not know. But, based on the number of graduates, we have very few indeed to compare with even the United States on a per capita basis, let alone Soviet Russia.

Yet, from the importance we see these other leading industrial nations attach to it, we must realize the part it will play in the industrial and economic development of this nation. Therefore, if we are to meet the challenge of the future that will grow more and more complex, we must take a view of this and attribute to it a great deal more importance than we have, and plan for meeting it on a very much broader base.

Here I might just digress for the moment and say that I am not sure that this is a matter that falls properly, or exclusively, within the responsibility of The Department of Education of the province. Perhaps the universities and technological institutes should be supported in greater measure by philanthropies, by industrialists and particularly by the federal government for, after all, it was the federal government that, in the first place, took on technical education and it has fallen, Mr. Speaker, into the federal Department of Labour.

Recently, a number of the people in industry have become very deeply concerned about the matter. They set up a committee drawing its membership from a number of the leading business organizations. It is currently engaged in making a classification of the different areas in which technicians are employed. Against this background, they will then make an inventory of the trained technicians in Canada and use that as a basis on which to estimate our future needs. The matter is receiving a great deal of thought and interest today.

As an indication of the improvement to which we can look forward it will be seen in these figures that 83 per cent. of our young people enter employment today with less than secondary school education, and more than 50 per cent. of these never entered secondary schools. Yet a great many of these young people, who have to be trained in any event before they can make a contribution, would be splendid material for these technical courses.

I say, sir, there is a great deal of industrial growth and planning for the future, going on at this present time, that will erupt ere long in great practical demands. The time to prepare for it is now.

I should like to commend the government for the work it has done with respect to Ryerson and other technical institutes, and the courses they have given there. There are great fields of science that are not being given any consideration—medicine and others—where technicians will be needed.

I should like particularly to give credit to the former hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop) for his interest in the establishment of the eastern Ontario institute of technology, about two-and-a-half years ago. Despite the fact it is housed in cramped and dingy quarters, and has inadequate equipment, it yet gives promise of a great and rewarding future.

To crystallize what I have said, in the minds of hon. members, may I just reiterate these points. Industry is becoming increasingly scientific and technical, and both the rate and scope is increasing drastically. Without an adequate supply of skilled and trained technicians, the future growth and development of industry and commerce in this country can be seriously hampered. We are graduating more and more engineers and trained scientists from our universities, yet the shortage grows no less acute. A lack of trained scientists is bleeding the usefulness of our graduate engineers in a way that, even now, is serious and tomorrow can be prodigal.

I ask the hon. members of this House to give heed to these facts and, on every occasion, to urge young people with a technical leaning who would otherwise stop at, or before, matriculation, to continue their studies and to enter our technical institutes.

I call on the government to seriously reconsider this whole question of sub-graduate technical training, and greatly accelerate plans for the building of technical institutes, realizing in this rapidly changing hour how serious now can be the lapse of time between planning an institute and that day when graduates from it in sufficient quantities will be available to meet what may by then be industry's crippling shortages of skilled manpower.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, as the hour is exceedingly late, I beg your gracious leave to adjourn the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE FORESTRY ACT, 1952

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 5, "An Act to amend The Forestry Act, 1952."

He said: the purpose of this bill is to encourage the multi-purpose management for forestry purposes of lands of conservation authorities and municipalities, and it also clarifies the position of conservation authorities, municipalities and the province with respect to the programme.

Mr. Speaker, I might further explain that the present legislation, dealing with the matter of assistance to conservation authorities and municipalities for reforestation purposes, uses the term "loans." In this bill, we propose that the grants paid by the province for these purposes should be considered as "grants."

The provincial financial interest in these projects will be protected by an agreement with the municipalities and the conservation authorities, based on this legislation, whereby the land and the forests involved will not be capable of being sold by the municipalities without the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, in which case the grants paid by the province or any investments that they would have in the reforestation project would be returned to the province.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC LANDS ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 32, "An Act to amend The Public Lands Act."

He said: The purpose of this amendment is to enable the province to set apart Crown land as harbour areas for pleasure craft.

Another section of the Act will permit the Minister to designate an area without municipal organization as a restricted area, and the Minister may then issue permits for the erection of buildings or structures or the making of improvements on land in such areas, and on such terms and conditions as he may deem proper.

We find, in the areas of the province where there is no municipal organization, that it would appear to be desirable to have some control over the improvements that are made to the land from time to time, in the same manner, but perhaps not as restricted, as the municipal corporations have at the present time with planning and zoning by-laws.

Section 3 of the bill provides a penalty for unlawfully taking possession of public land and erecting buildings thereon.

Section 4 of the bill is to provide for the right of passage over portages. Where public land over which a portage has existed heretofore, and has been sold or disposed of under this Act, or any other Act, this legislation will provide that any person travelling on waters connected by portages has the right to pass over and along the portage with his effects without the permission of, or payment to, the owner of the land. It provides that any person who obstructs, hinders, delays or interferes with the exercise of such right of passage shall be guilty of an offence.

Section 5 of the bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for the elimination of conditions which exist in certain letters patent which were issued many years ago and, in some few cases, have become clouds on titles. These involve this condition, that the original letters patent provided that the purchaser or the grantee could not dispose of the lands involved within the space of 3 years from the issue of the patent. But, in a number of cases, it has come to light through searches in the old records that the original purchaser, the original owner, did in fact dispose of the lands in question within the space of 3 years.

Of course, there is no intention that we should dispute the title that the present owners have because of this condition in the original patent going back to, in some cases, as long ago as 1820. So, with this amendment to our Act, regarding any deeds or grants which contain this provision or condition, the condition will be erased from the record.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SURVEYS ACT, 1958

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 33, "An Act to amend The Surveys Act, 1958."

He said: The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is to prescribe the kind and form of monuments used to identify survey points, and prescribes how and where they are to be used and how they are to be designated on plans of survey.

Subsection C of the bill also provides the authority for passing regulations respecting any matter necessary or advisable to carry out effectively the intent and purpose of The Surveys Act.

The Surveys Act at the present time does not provide us with that authority, and the surveyor-general and the surveyors' association in the province of Ontario have requested the amendments I have described, in order to facilitate the work of surveyors in the province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the hon. Minister? I can understand some of the thinking behind subsections A and B but why is it necessary that the wording of subsection C be so broad?

Could the hon. Minister not describe in more particular terms what power he wants for regulation in this Act, rather than saying "respecting any matter necessary or advisable"? Surely there would be substantial benefit in that type of phraseology, Mr. Speaker, bearing particularly in mind the remarks of the Gordon committee as addressed to it.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, the whole matter of surveys in the province of Ontario is undergoing considerable study. It is as a result of these studies that we propose these amendments at the present time. It may be that, between now and a year from now, some other problem would come about that we would not be able to deal with if we did not have the legislation as permitted under subsection C of this amendment.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will be referred to the committee on lands and forests, at which time we will have available the surveyor-general, who is a member of the staff of The Department of Lands and Forests.

This being a technical matter, I would suggest that perhaps the hon. member would be better served if he were to wait for the committee, so that I would have the surveyor-general present to explain these more or less technical matters.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it was not really a matter of technicality. I am objecting to the broad general terms.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TREES ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 43, "An Act to amend The Trees Act."

He said: In this amendment, Mr. Speaker, we have a new interpretation of the words "forestry purposes." It broadens the meaning of our Act in the respect that forestry purposes means primarily the production of wood and wood products, and includes such secondary purposes as proper environmental conditions for wildlife, protection against flood and erosion, recreation, or the protection and production of water supplies.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize counties and townships to use any of their lands for reforestation purposes, rather than only lands acquired for that specific purpose—to use any of such lands for forestry purposes as I have described.

We are getting more and more into the multiple use of all forests, and certainly county and township forests, because of their location, are being used more and more for fish and wildlife protection, and also for recreation.

The second section of the bill provides the necessary authority for authorizing councils of counties to pass by-laws to acquire land; for declaring land that is owned by the municipality to be required for forestry purposes; and for the management of such land and the disposition of the trees thereon; for the issue of debentures for the purposes of the by-law, subject to the approval of the Ontario municipal board, and subject to a maximum of $25,000 at any one time.

The powers of the township council shall be the same as a county where the township has a population of less than 10,000.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an Act to assist the department and also the township and county councils to do more work in the field of forestry and its allied services.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I move that when this House adjourn the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until 3 of the clock on Thursday afternoon. I might mention as well that it is intended to have a night session on Thursday.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 of the clock, p.m.

THE LIQUOR CONTROL ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intitled, "An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the hon. Minister please explain the purpose of the bill?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I will, on first reading as requested, deal with some explanation.

This is a bill that perhaps the House would like to know about at this stage of the proceedings. In a session of 1927, The Liquor Control Act of Ontario was passed, and came into effect upon proclamation effective June 1, 1927. This meant the repeal of The Ontario Temperance Act of 1916.

In 1934, the sale of beer by the glass was legalized and, in 1946, by The Liquor Licence Act, liquor by the glass was permitted in licenced outlets. The Liquor Control Act is separate and distinct from The Liquor Licence Act.

As stated, The Liquor Control Act was passed originally 33 years ago. The basic principle of government control has been retained, but in the meantime there have been amendments from time to time. There have been, over the years, some very fundamental changes in the public attitude concerning the sale of liquor.

The Act of 1927 imposed many restrictive provisions which arose out of public thinking with the background of The Ontario Temperance Act. Prohibition days and the conditions which existed in those times bear very little relationship today.

The basic provisions of government control have been retained. It is the purpose of the government to continue on the lines of those principles.

There are, however, a number of sections in the Act which require revising in the light of today. Some of the present provisions in their present form are not only outdated, but tend to affect the judgment of many people on the whole Act because of the unreasonableness of their nature. It is proposed to remove these sections from the Act.

Concerning The Liquor Licence Act, which I will be introducing in a few moments, I might say the amendments placed before the House are not fundamental and are designed to strengthen the administration of the Act and to speed up the disposition of business.

Dealing with The Liquor Control Act itself, I would point out that its administration and effect are very greatly influenced by local option by-laws which are in effect in a great many municipalities.

Going back over the period of 33 years, the intervening governments have always pledged that the local option by-laws would be respected and that will continue to be the policy.

If the people desire change in their localities they may, by their ballots, make them. I point out for example that, in the city of Toronto, there are large areas in which the sale of liquor, either by retail or by the glass, is not permitted because of the existence of such by-laws.

I might say many hon. members know that at the moment my own riding of St. Patrick, in the central downtown area of the city, is not one of them.

I stress that if people desire change they may obtain it in their own areas in the way prescribed by the Act by their own ballots.

Concerning the control features in The Liquor Control Act, one of them is the permit. I shall not elaborate upon this other than to say that this matter has been given the most thorough consideration, not only now but in the past. There are many features to be considered.

An important reason for the retention of the permit is that it is an additional restraint against teen-agers purchasing and drinking. This is a big problem. The permit itself is undoubtedly a restraint in this regard and the government feels that it could not recommend its abolition.

In connection with this Act, of course, are the great social questions relating to alcohol. This is a matter in which I personally have very considerable interest. Brought up as I was from the age of 11 until well into my teens in a family of women—all the adults were women intensively concerned about the use of liquor—I have never, I hope, forgotten the early teaching which I learned there.

In Ontario we have taken, I am quite sure, the most far reaching steps of any jurisdiction on this continent. What we are doing here, through the alcoholism research foundation, for example, is being held up as an example by the United Nations. We intend to grapple realistically with the problem of alcoholism.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, my few years in this office have revealed to me, as never before, some of the afterflow of great developments—social, mechanical and otherwise—the problems, constant and immense of accidents on our highways, of alcoholism in relation to liquor and temperance, and of pornography and obscene literature in relation to art and culture and that sort of thing.

They are there. They are but some of the facts of life which all governments must constantly meet.

Again I repeat, the purpose of these two Acts is to rationalize as far as possible, without releasing fundamental controls.

Now, I will attempt to summarize, at this point, the main charges which are as follows:

1. Some doubt exists, under the present section of The Liquor Control Act, whether a person may legally serve liquor to a guest in his own home, or to a member of his own household. The amendment proposed removes any doubt on that account and a person who has liquor in his own home may legally serve it.

2. Under the Act of 1927, it was unlawful for a person to give liquor to any person as a gift. Social customs of today are completely out of line with this section. Nevertheless, gifts of liquor such as are made at Christmas are made in technical contravention of the Act. It is proposed to remove this restriction.

3. Conveyance of liquor from one residence to another, even though there be a break in transit, not inconsistent with the principle, is provided for.

4. Tourists and travellers will be able to bring into Ontario a limited amount of beer and liquor without breaching our Act.

5. The bill provides for the registering of all representatives of liquor firms with the board.

6. Certain of the penalty sections are being revised and modernized to meet the situation of today. Particularly will there be eliminated double penalties and what I have dubbed "the squealing section." The bill will remove the threat which overhangs a convicted person if he does not disclose where he got the liquor and that sort of thing.

Now I might just illustrate that. There are two or three illustrations. I am sure the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) would illustrate from a country situation perhaps such as a cock-fight, or something of that sort. But I will illustrate it with what is more likely to be applicable here in this great city. There is a provision of the Act which says that, if a person is convicted of being found in a bawdy house, apart from anything else, his liquor permit will be cancelled. Now it seems to me that a found-in should not have to lose his liquor permit, though he may well lose his reputation.

7. Owners of premises such as apartment buildings, boarding houses, and so forth will not be penalized unduly by the offences of their tenants.

8. One of the sections of The Liquor Control Act provides that, where a person is guilty of certain offences under the criminal code, such person is barred for one year from the purchase of liquor. The offences referred to under the code have penalties provided in that code for the infractions of the law.

Liquor does not necessarily play a part in such offences, and it is considered that the sections in The Liquor Control Act have no place in the same. As a matter of fact, the sections are rarely used, and I am advised that the section has been utilized on only one occasion, and it should be pointed out that there are adequate provisions, in any event, under section 83 of the Act, by which the board may cancel liquor privileges indefinitely for cause.

There are other provisions of the Act which are greatly outdated. One of them is the double penalty of a person found with liquor, convicted of having liquor that has been purchased or obtained illegally, and—apart from the penalty that he gets for having that, if he fails to tell where he got the liquor, who gave it to him and so forth—he is subject to jail sentence of from one to three months.

Now, that kind of principle may have had its place at some time, although it seems to me at any time it could be attacked, and right now it has no place, in my view, in the Act. Therefore, it is proposed to eliminate that part of the section.

9. Information leading to charges must, henceforth, be sworn. Previously, a signed statement was sufficient.

Before I take my seat on this, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I should just make this very general statement, that the question of liquor advertising is an extremely difficult one, complicated by the fact that Ontario fronts on 8 American states and two Canadian provinces. No other area in America has the complications we are faced with in this regard.

Admittedly, present conditions are not satisfactory. Much consideration is being given to the bettering of this problem. No amendment is required to the Act, and therefore the matter is not dealt with in this legislation.

It is hoped that the conferences presently in being with the liquor control board commissioner and his associates from other provinces will help in the solution of this very difficult problem. At some later date of the sitting of the House, I expect something further will be said about this, and I may say something about it, and I am sure that the liquor control board commissioner will have something to say.

THE LIQUOR LICENCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Liquor Licence Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, following the request for explanation, I will continue very briefly on this bill. There are just a few changes.

One is that a club, as defined, must be incorporated to obtain a licence and must be in existence for one year before applying.

Secondly, one member of the liquor licence board is now, or will be, empowered by this bill to hold meetings to speed up hearings, and for the general administration of the Act. Instead of the whole board having to travel here and there throughout the whole province, one member under certain circumstances may do that—following very much the procedure under The Municipal Act.

The whole board will review the recommendations of the single member.

Thirdly, payments, henceforth, for transfer fees will, in the first instance, be made to the liquor control board instead of to the Treasurer of Ontario.

Fourthly, the present law says that liquor is not to be sold to anyone intoxicated on licenced premises and this will be extended to include supply as well as selling.

THE TIME ACT, 1958

Mr. J. H. White moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Time Act, 1958."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion here which I discussed in the House, and about which I conferred with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) personally, in connection with sitting at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning and adjourning at 1 o'clock p.m. Now this is experimental, and it might be very well worth trying.

Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until 10 of the clock tomorrow morning. Now, that is at the request of a large number of hon. members, sir.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, concerning the sitting on Monday—I think perhaps I will change this to refer only to this coming Monday.

I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that on Monday this House will meet at 2 of the clock in the afternoon, and that rule 2 of the assembly shall be suspended so far as it shall apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would permit a question at this time? As hon. members know, sir, next week there is a very important convention meeting in Toronto on Tuesday and Wednesday—the Goodwill Convention—and I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister could give us any indication of the hours that the Legislature would sit next week? Is there likely to be a night session on Tuesday or Thursday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, sir, as I said earlier in the week, the intention is to bring in the budget on Thursday, February 25. Now, it may be necessary to have night sessions on Tuesday and Wednesday, but no night sessions on—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): How about the committee meetings on Wednesday night?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I see, that is right. It also may be necessary to have night sessions on Monday and Tuesday with the meetings of the committees on Wednesday.

Now, I think there is also another function on Wednesday. I think perhaps, sir, it would be better to give notice of a night session for Monday night at the present time, and if it is not necessary, we can avoid that. We will see what the Whips say at the beginning of the week.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I want to ask a question, Mr. Speaker. With the hon. Minister's permission I would like to pursue the subject that the hon. Prime Minister has discussed.

Mr. Speaker, the point that I want to make is simply that if the budget is to come down next Thursday, there is some doubt as to whether or not the Throne speech will be completed by that time. I am confident there are many hon. members who want the assurance that they will have the opportunity to speak on the Throne debate, and for my own group, I know that they all want that particular opportunity. So, I think personally that we should have some assurance from you, Mr. Speaker, that that will be permitted.

Secondly, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister about the procedure that will be followed with respect to the Throne debate from here on in. First, will an effort be made to conclude the Throne debate before the budget date; second, will we proceed tomorrow with the Throne debate, and on the subsequent evenings?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say, sir, that the intention is to proceed with the Throne debate tomorrow, and on Monday and Tuesday. Concerning the continuation of the Throne debate beyond the introduction of the budget, I have not fixed opinions on that. Last year we did. On the other hand, I point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that the hon. members of the House are given the same latitude in budget debate as they are on the Throne debate, so that actually if they do not speak on the Throne debate, they can go ahead on the budget debate.

Now, I would say, sir, concerning the wind-up of the Throne debate, I would be prepared to leave it this way, if my hon. friend would be satisfied: That if it appears to be quite impracticable to conclude the Throne debate on Tuesday, then I am quite agreeable to it being carried on as it was last year.

Now, in other Houses, we have had some objection to that procedure. I could never see the validity of the objection. It seemed to me to be satisfactory enough to carry it along, and if the Throne debate cannot be concluded without unduly hurrying the House, I would be all in favour of carrying it on.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, that it might be well if I consulted with you about next Tuesday and see how things stand and see the list of hon. members who want to speak. If there are very many, then let us carry it along. If it can be concluded as an order of business, then perhaps it would be very well to do it.

Now, I had thought that perhaps we might do this. If the Throne debate is concluded on Tuesday night, for instance, the following Friday and the following Monday could be used as committee days, to enable the committees of the House to get on with their work. That would provide a 3-day period of time—Wednesday, Friday, and Monday—to give the committees a great opportunity to clear up their work.

This would enable the House to proceed the following Tuesday with not only committee work but estimates and things of that sort, and also the bills that will be before the House.

Now, I think perhaps, sir, it would be better just to let the matter stand until the beginning of the week and we can get a report as to the number of hon. members who want to speak. Is my hon. friend satisfied with that?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I am basically satisfied. I simply want what I think everybody in this House would appreciate is a legitimate request, and that is that all hon. members of the House—and I am speaking particularly for our hon. members at the present time—want the opportunity to speak twice. I refer to the Throne speech and to the budget debate. They do not want to be put in the position where they have to confine themselves to one address.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am quite satisfied, and if it is not practical, then I am satisfied to carry the Throne debate over.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Frost, that there be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections, and that the said committee be required to examine into and report on, all things relating to the purchase by the Niagara parks commission of parts of lot 23, in the township of Niagara, in the county of Lincoln, as described in a deed dated May 25, 1943, and registered in the registry office of the said county as number 10434, township of Niagara, and the sale of a portion of the therein described land to one, Arthur Albert Schmon, by a deed dated June 30, 1945, and registered in the said registry office as No. 11306, township of Niagara, and the subsequent sale of a portion of the lands described in deed No. 11306, by the said Arthur Albert Schmon to Charles and Leola Daley by deed dated April 27, 1946, and registered in the said registry office as No. 12649, township of Niagara.

That without limiting or interfering with the powers conferred on standing committees of the Legislature by the rules of the House, The Legislative Assembly Act and the order of this House dated Wednesday, January 27, authorizing the standing committees for the present session, the said committee is specifically authorized to send for all such persons, papers and records as the committee may deem requisite to its proceedings, to examine witnesses under oath, and the assembly doth command and compel attendance before the said committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The motion refers to one aspect of a much broader question that was raised in the House, and I would just like to ask if there is any possibility that this motion would be interpreted as dealing satisfactorily with all other aspects of that question, or will other motions be in order relating to the question as a whole?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the hon. member might be more specific about his reference to the broader aspect. I am assuming that he refers to the Niagara parks matter. I would say specifically that it does not interfere with that. This is a matter affecting the personal honour and integrity of an hon. member, and the disposition is before the committee on privileges and elections, and it is to that committee that he is referring it.

But I would say that in no way would it affect the motion that was passed in this House referring the Niagara parks matter to the public accounts committee—except insofar as it refers to this personal matter which will be dealt with by the committee referred to in this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before the orders of the day, and as a result of the statement that has just been made, I would like to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that yesterday at the public accounts committee meeting the hon. Minister of Labour intimated that he would make the very motion that has been made in the House today, which we have all supported.

However, the committee, Mr. Speaker, became engulfed in a technical difficulty and the difficulty was simply this: Some few days ago, in this House, we passed a series of resolutions specifically authorizing the standing committees to inquire into the administrative facilities of the various boards and commissions that we assigned to this specific committee. The chairman of the public accounts committee drew this fact to our attention when it was asked of the chairman whether or not there would be permission and authority in the public accounts committee to conduct an investigation into the Niagara parks commission beyond the immediate and current fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, in this respect I can appreciate the position of the chairman of the public accounts committee. I do not want to pass any technical observation with respect to the particular resolution that we passed several days ago.

But on examination yesterday, and after discussion, it did seem to me to be pre-eminently clear that the resolution that we did pass some few days ago would, and does, not authorize the public accounts committee to investigate into the Niagara parks commission beyond the immediate and current fiscal year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter of the Niagara parks commission is not a new one. My recollection is that it came up for the first time last August, or thereabouts, at which time I suggested that there should be a full and complete investigation and I think I suggested a Royal commission. And subsequently there have been other demands. Immediately it has become part and parcel of discussion here in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I have said it on several occasions and I repeat it now: I am not making any specific allegations. I have in my possession, I am confident, as much information about this particular matter as anybody in this House, with the exception of the chairman of the commission. I am anxious to demonstrate to the public of Ontario that we in this Legislature are prepared to do a respectable job and a complete job when any information comes to us that suggests an inquiry be made.

And, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to hon. members that, at the present time, this very House and Legislature needs the authority of the House to authorize the public accounts committee to make a complete investigation of the Niagara parks commission. I personally would hope that this House would not curtail that investigation in any way, to create the impression that something we are about to investigate cannot be investigated simply because the authority is not in that committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is my suggestion, therefore, and I would hope that all hon. members of this House would agree with me, that what we should do at the present time is authorize the public accounts committee to conduct a complete investigation, and for that purpose I move, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver, that this House authorize the committee on public accounts to conduct a complete investigation of the Niagara parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I say in reference to that motion, that I had no idea the hon. leader of the Opposition was going to move such a motion. I would like to ask that it be taken as notice, and I will give it some consideration.

I did intend to refer to this before the orders of the day, and so I am not unprepared to say something about this. I would not be satisfied with the form of that resolution for this reason, that I think there is now before the House ample authority for the committee to make a thorough investigation of the Niagara parks matter without any amendment or any change. I do not think my hon. friend's motion really adds anything to that.

However, might I say this, I will take that as notice, and we can consider the matter next Monday. I think it calls for two days' notice.

But might I say this, Mr. Speaker—and I give this to the House for the information of the hon. members—I think there are some matters that should be made plain as regards to procedure.

May I point out that the references to the committees of this House are the broadest ever undertaken by this or any other government in Canada, as far as I am aware. Our references and our setting up of these committee procedures have no parallel insofar as I am aware in parliamentary government in this country. The hon. members of this House, through the committees, are being given the fullest opportunity of looking into government organization and government practices.

Whether this innovation in parliamentary government is going to be successful depends upon the results of this year's operation. It is an innovation in parliamentary government and parliamentary procedures. What we are doing with all of the committees, in relation to commissions and boards, is based upon the practices that we have adopted in the public accounts committee.

Now, I refer my hon. friends, particularly those opposite, to the remarks of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) some days ago in relation to the function of the public accounts committee. Mr. Speaker, prior to this session, the public accounts committee was rated as the Opposition committee. The practice followed, and this is true of this House for as long as I can remember and certainly, I think, back to the beginning of time, was that if an Opposition member made charges concerning the spending and handling of public monies, that these charges would be referred to the public accounts committee which would be called arising from such specific instances.

The fact that the public accounts committee was not called in previous years was due to the fact that there was never a demand from the Opposition that the committee should be called. I think my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) will agree with that.

Now we have changed that practice. The public accounts committee now, in effect, becomes one of the committees of the House, and is a government committee as much as an Opposition members' committee under the proceedings adopted since the beginning of this present session.

Members of the public accounts committee are now given full and complete opportunity to examine into departmental procedures and organization, including such things as the letting and settling of contracts.

That is a very broad reference. As a matter of fact, the public accounts committee is perfectly entitled, under this reference, to examine into the organization of government, and how government is conducted. It is also entitled to examine into, as I say, such things as the method of calling for tenders, the letting of contracts, the settlement of contracts, and a host of other things. That is given to them, Mr. Speaker, as a general power which never before ran to that committee or to any other committee.

Secondly, the public accounts committee itself is given the public accounts for the last fiscal year, and it is within the ambit of those accounts that inquiries can be made specifically. The committee itself must determine upon the necessity, the reasonableness and otherwise of examining any item brought up by any hon. member.

In other words, if the committee feels that it is merely a matter of a fictitious nature to bring up a matter, of course the committee in its common sense would reject such a proposal. On the other hand, if it seems that the request for an examination of certain items in the public accounts is founded upon what we might call reasonable and probable cause, then the committee in its wisdom, I should imagine, would examine into those items. Now that is the purpose of it.

Just let me say in passing that the committees of this House derive their authority from the Legislature here. The fact that a committee is set up does not give the committee authority to do all manner of things. The authority has to come from this Legislature.

It is a great mistake to view the fact that the committee is set up as an authority to do almost anything. As a matter of fact, the committee is bound by the reference that is made in this House.

Now, in past years, committees were not used very much in the House, and if there were reference to a committee, then it had to be a specific reference. Otherwise, the committee had no power whatever. Now we have given these committees a very broad power.

Take the public accounts committee. Upon the public accounts committee we have based all the other committees. The public accounts committee can, as I say, look into the organization and procedures of government. Secondly, it has the power, without reference back to this House, to inquire into matters contained in the last public accounts of this House.

But if it is then decided to go further, if an hon. member in addition wants to make the traditional charges that the hon. member for Brant referred to, if he wants to make the traditional charges in connection with the expenditure of public money, then after the specific item and the basis of complaint is given, this House in its wisdom may refer the matter specifically to the committee.

Now, I ask my hon. friend to look at that in the light of what he has said here a moment ago. Therefore, we have these 3 things:

First, we have the general power of the committee to look into government organization. Secondly, we have the power of the committee to look into public accounts. Thirdly, we have the power of this House to refer specific items to the committee upon which any hon. member of this House makes charges in relation to the expenditure of public money.

Now, in relation to boards and commissions—and this is where this specific item relating to Niagara parks comes in—the several committees of the House were authorized to look into:

(1) The organization and business methods generally of such boards and commissions. Now, such power never applied before. The committee to which the Niagara parks commission was referred, in this case the public accounts committee, is entitled to look at the organization and business methods generally of the Niagara parks commission. It can look into its method of asking for tenders, calling for tenders, granting contracts, settling contracts and all of those things that run with the operation of that commission,

(2) This committee is authorized by this House to examine within the ambit of the last year's auditor's report. That is identically the same as the public accounts committee, the only thing is that the auditor's report and its items take up the place of the public accounts.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the public accounts committee therefore, with Niagara parks, has full power to look at the organization and methods of the commission in doing business, including its methods of letting and settling contracts.

(3) Subject to the discretion of the committee, the items in relation to last year's auditor's report may be looked into and examined. This is a matter of discretion, then, for the committee itself. It has the power but that power is exercised with its discretion.

(4) If any additional powers are required for the committee—and I think this brings it down to my hon. friend's suggestion—then, on the basis of the specific complaints and charges which can be delineated in this House, and based upon evidence which should be given to this House, then this House, in its wisdom, can refer the matter to the committee. I would say that is the only procedure that can obtain. Indeed, I would say that, as far as I am concerned, it is the only procedure that will obtain.

May I point out that the present provisions which were adopted in this session, and which I have said are unprecedented in parliamentary procedure in this country, are very wide in their application. To go further than this would make it impossible to carry on government business.

For instance, I would have no intention—and I think my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, surely would have no intention—of referring the public accounts of this province in all of the years, say back to 1900, to the public accounts committee—and perhaps back to the year 1867, to the public accounts committee.

Nor would I have the slightest intention of recommending to this House that all of the reports of the Niagara parks commission from 1943, 16 or 17 of them—17 years' business—or back to 1913, or back to 1900, or back to the days of Oliver Mowat, should be referred to the public accounts committee.

The business of this House, Mr. Speaker, simply could not be conducted on that basis. Any procedure other than that which I have outlined would be chaotic.

We have rules and I think we should follow them. The present terms of reference are complete, and they are ample, they are generous, and are quite unprecedented.

Now, if any hon. member has anything in the form of traditional charges to make in connection with specific items concerning Niagara parks, then he should make them to this House. Consideration can then be given in this House to referring the same to the public accounts committee. Or, if it is in relation to another committee of the House, then it can be referred to that particular committee. Otherwise, I do not think that there could be any deviation from the rules I have outlined.

May I point out another thing that I think should be considered by this House. This is an assembly of the people's representatives. Here, men and, in some cases, women, have been elected to this assembly because they have been chosen by their constituencies, and they are regarded as honourable men and women. May I point out that if an hon. member of this House—and I think we should follow this hereafter—if an hon. member of this House makes charges involving the honour and character of any other hon. member of this House, he should be prepared then to stake his seat on the truthfulness and validity of the charges he makes.

I think perhaps, Mr. Speaker, some of the things that have happened in the past have come from a misunderstanding of the rules of this House and the obligations of membership in the House. It is a very grave and serious thing to charge any hon. member of this House with a misdemeanor or with something that is dishonourable or dishonest.

Now, the traditions of the House of Commons go away back in this matter. I very well remember, years ago, when the member for one of the Hastings seats made charges against the then Minister of Labour in relation to matters pertaining to the Home Bank. Now, this was a long way back. As it turned out, the member did stake his seat, which is the proper course and proceeding, and the members of his constituency rejected him.

Now there is the appeal. After all, it is not good enough to rise in this House under the cloak of privilege and say things about an hon. member of the House unless a person is prepared to come out and stake his seat on the truth of these things that affect the life of perhaps a very honourable man. I think that we should hereafter, Mr. Speaker, follow that through.

In relation to what my hon. friend has said, I do not think he need fear his motion about a full inquiry into the Niagara parks matter. I think it is amply provided for.

As I say, there is the fullest of opportunity of looking at the procedures and methods of this commission. We can look at all those things. If there are things that are wrongful in the procedures and methods, surely they would show up in the last year's accounts, in the auditor's accounts. But, on the other hand, if they do not, then let an hon. member of this House make his statement preferring his charges in relation to the specific item. Then the House, in its wisdom, can grant the further power to inquire. Other than that, my hon. friend can see the chaos that would result.

Actually speaking, one could go back into the accounts of the Niagara parks commission as far as 1890. That applies to all of the other commissions and the government procedures in this House. It could result in chaos. It could result in, for instance, comparisons of things that were done and procedures that were followed in the year 1959 and in the year 1935, a comparison of procedures between two governments.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot do business that way. I would say to my hon. friend that I think he really would do better to proceed along the lines we have laid down by the authority given by this House to the committee. If there is reasonable and probable cause, which can be justified by an hon. member in all seriousness before this House, for a further investigation, let us give the authority, but it should be a specific authority.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of what the hon. Prime Minister has said on which I would like to express a view. If there has been a violation of a basic principle in good government, and notice is drawn to the violation of that principle, it is impossible to do so without involving an individual. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point is not the individual, it is the basic principle.

Now this is something we have discussed in this House before. A couple of years ago there was the simple proposition which is very time-honoured in the history of Parliaments or Legislatures, that hon. members should not vote on bills from which they subsequently may get private gains, because the money voted or authorized by that bill may go to a company in which they have a private interest.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not quarrel with that.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not interrupt the hon. Prime Minister so I would just ask him to be gracious enough not to interrupt me. In the upholding of that principle, in the instance I referred to a couple of years ago, the procedure is a very simple one, that if perchance they have voted on the bill, they ask that the vote be stricken from the record.

Now this was not done two years ago. It was construed—when we were trying to focus attention on the principles—it was construed as a personal attack. And, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that precisely—

Hon. Mr. Frost: This did not—

Mr. MacDonald: May I finish, Mr. Speaker? I did not interrupt the hon. Prime Minister when he was speaking.

Hon. Mr. Frost: This did not determine that though. The charges of the hon. member—

Mr. MacDonald: It did.

In the situation that we now have before us, Mr. Speaker, I want to submit to the House, the issue at stake is not a charge against the hon. Minister of Labour in his capacity as chairman of the board. The issue at stake is whether or not there was a violation of the stated land policy of the government—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is out of order.

I made no reference to the hon. Minister at all in what I said. I was referring to general principles which I strongly object to. This matter has been referred to a committee of this House, and the hon. member has no right to refer to the matter at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister stated general principles and I am talking about general principles, and I shall stick to the general principles.

Mr. Speaker: The committee which dealt with this advise that this is not so.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will forget about that, as it was two years ago. Let us deal with the issue that is now before us.

The issue that is now before us, Mr. Speaker, is the motion that we are going to refer this issue, with regard to certain lots that were sold by the Niagara parks—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, no, it is not. That has nothing whatever to do with it.

On a point of order, I point out that this House has adopted a motion, moved by the hon. Minister of Labour, who is an aggrieved person, asking that certain matters be referred to a committee and that has been done.

This is a reference to a motion which is taken as a notice of motion by myself, moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition. It does not relate to what the hon. member for York South is speaking about at all, but to other matters which the hon. leader of the Opposition says might have some bearing on Niagara parks.

The hon. member is out of order completely, and—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I just want to draw this to your attention.

It is true that we voted on the motion that was introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: The member is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Surely I am not out of order before you have heard what I am going to say. What I am going to say is that, after we had voted on that motion, the hon. Prime Minister—confirmed by his own comments now—violated the rules by discussing the principle that was involved in the motion. In other words, after we had voted about it, he rose and talked about the principle. Now just let us talk about the principle.

Mr. Bryden: Why should there be one rule for the hon. Prime Minister and another for us?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I made no reference to the hon. Minister of Labour at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I remind you that the hon. Prime Minister rose and spoke—if he has forgotten—about alleged personal attacks on individual hon. members and what should be done in the instance of hon. members who did so. We had voted on that—that was in reference to the motion of the hon. Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I made no reference.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister reviewed the principle after the thing had been voted on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the member that there is no motion before the House at the present time.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is a notice of motion before the House and the hon. Prime Minister has talked for 10 or 15 minutes on this notice of motion. Is he alone going to be given the privilege of talking on this notice of motion?

Mr. Speaker: I point out that the matter will be discussed at that time, rather than when the notice is being given.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will leave what the hon. Prime Minister said, but I want to say something about the notice of motion.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the member for York South that, in the first place, all members of this House take their seats when the Speaker stands.

I would point out further that this is the notice of motion. I am sure the members of this House do not want lengthy discussions on notice of motion, as well as at the time of the motion, otherwise we would be in endless discussion. Now, therefore I rule that the member is out of order at this time.

Orders of the day.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is a further notice of motion that I would like to put before this House. I had intended to give notice of motion or, if the House was willing, to have it considered immediately today, and—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, if it is a notice of motion, I would prefer that the hon. member put it on the order paper and there I will get it. That is the proper procedure. There are too many informalities here.

Mr. MacDonald: That the committee on—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I object to that. Let him put it on the order paper. Let it go on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I move a motion?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the member put it on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I just draw to your attention that other people have been permitted to put their motions before this House for the consideration of the hon. Prime Minister. I want to move a motion for the hon. Prime Minister to consider between now and Monday. Have I your permission to do that?

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the member for York South that I have had no notice of this, and some notices are described—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have never heard of giving notice for a notice of motion—

Mr. Speaker: The notice of motion has not been handed to the Speaker's office. The member is quite right, of course, when he says that some are discussed on the order paper, and it has been the custom for the Speaker to decide and so advise. Now, I have had no notice of this motion whatsoever so, in view of that fact, I suggest it be put on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do I have to give you a notice of a notice of motion?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, why did you permit the hon. gentleman to read his? What are you afraid of, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out that there are things that are done in this House by consent. The hon. leader of the Opposition moved a resolution here without giving notice of a notice of motion—and nobody in the House objected to that.

I say to the hon. member that I agreed with the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) the other night. I have strenuously objected to this House being turned into a beer garden every so often, and, as far as I am concerned, it is going to cease. I think we had better get down to proper parliamentary procedures and then we will not get into these difficulties.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do I have the right to move this motion?

Mr. Speaker: I have suggested that the member enter it on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: What is your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: That the member enter it on the order paper. I point out to the member for York South that I am guided by rule and precedence, and because certain things happen one day under entirely different circumstances, it does not mean to say that under other circumstances the same thing would be permitted.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask you a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the member may ask a question.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my question to you is this: If we are going to follow the rules of this House, why did you not rule the hon. Prime Minister out of order when he started a discussion on the principle of the motion introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour after it had been voted on?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I never mentioned it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, what is your ruling on that?

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister made a statement on that, it was not another notice of motion. My rule is the same, that in some cases these could be referred to the order paper and in some cases they can be given.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, are you denying me the right to move this at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I do not think—

Mr. MacDonald: You are? I challenge your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out that it is crystal clear by the rules—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have challenged your ruling. I demand the opportunity to intervene, or am I going to challenge your decision?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The rules are explicit in this matter, the hon. member is out of order, without any question of doubt.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General is out of order right now, too.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: If the member would like me to give him a long, lengthy ruling on this matter, I will do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I challenge your ruling and I call for a recorded vote.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. MacDonald: If we are going to ride roughshod over the rules of the House, we will find out where we stand on this.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker's ruling has been challenged. Will all members who are in favour of the ruling say "aye."

As many are opposed please say "nay."

The ruling was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling of the Speaker upheld.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The 13th report of the liquor licence board of Ontario for the 12-month fiscal period ending March 31, 1959.

The annual report of The Department of Reform Institutions, province of Ontario, for the year ending March 31, 1959.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to table the photostatic copy of a letter. Yesterday, in the standing committee on government commissions, we got into fairly lengthy discussion in trying to ascertain to what extent, if any, the Tory machine is involved in the hiring of people in the liquor control board.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Is it permissible, or out of order, Mr. Speaker? Is it permissible within this House to table photostatic copies of letters?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I have an additional point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is, is it possible to table documents except in support of, or a part of, a presentation to the House?

Mr. Speaker: I would say, in view of the fact that, in all my years as a member of the Legislature, I have never seen it done before. I am advised that it will be taken into consideration. I received no notice of it. I think the member was—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, does one have to give notice for tabling?

Mr. Speaker: Did you give notice in any way?

Mr. MacDonald: Do we have to give notice usually when a tabling comes in the House? I am asking.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out that it is customary, and always has been customary, for leaders of a party at various times—the Opposition and so forth—to communicate with the Speaker's office and more or less go into a few of these things, and give notice if it is going to be done before the orders of the day.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will table it next week and I give you notice now. But it is in the hands of the press and I have given them permission to use it, because the effort of the Opposition should not be frustrated all down the line.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a breach of the rules of the House to give and release documents, on the basis they are going to be filed, to the press before they have actually been tabled. I think it is not only a breach of etiquette, it is a very serious breach of the rules of this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, let me assure the hon. Minister that if I want to give something to the press, it is my privilege to give it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is perfectly all right, but not as a tabled document, and then stand and say that he is embarrassed because it is now in the hands of the press.

THE ANDREW MERCER REFORMATORY ACT

Hon. Mr. Wardrope moves second reading of Bill No. 48, "An Act to amend The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, until 1946, the department operated as a branch of the Provincial Secretary's Department. Many years ago the chief administrative officer responsible for the control of penal institutions was the inspector. For over 30 years the official responsible for direction has been the Deputy Minister, not the inspector. Therefore several sections of the Act are being amended accordingly to bring the Act into line with the present-day administrative factors.

Section 6 of the Act provides for the keeping of records in the institution concerning the conduct of inmates with the view to an offender being paroled upon the recommendation of the superintendent and endorsed by the board of parole. Rules for keeping of conduct records are now in the regulations made under section 4 of the Act, and parole procedures are now provided for in The Parole Act. Section 6 of The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act is therefore obsolete and is to be repealed.

Sections 7 and 9 provide that when prisoners have been sentenced in court, it is required in many cases that they be transferred from the local jail to a reformatory, or an industrial farm, to serve their sentences. Sometimes it is necessary to return prisoners to a jail or to another institution. These transfers can be effected only by the issuing of a warrant of removal by the department main office and signed by an official authorized to do so.

The number of officials authorized to sign these warrants is limited to 3, to prevent confusion and maintain control. Authority for certain officials to issue these removal warrants is granted by order of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council under authority of The Prisons and Reformatories Act of Canada to effect transfers of prisoners sentenced under the statutes of Canada.

The Minister of Reform Institutions is given authority under section 9(1) of The Penal and Reform Institutions Inspection Act of Ontario to designate the officials who may issue such warrants for those prisoners sentenced under Ontario statutes. The foregoing applies to both male and female prisoners.

Now, section 7 of The Andrew Mercer Reformatory Act provides authority for the inspector to direct the removal of female prisoners sentenced under Ontario statutes from the common jail to a reformatory.

Section 9(1) gives authority to the Minister, or such other officer designated by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, to direct the removal from the reformatory to the common jail of any female prisoner sentenced under Ontario's statutes.

These two sections of the Act are to be amended so as to standardize the procedure of transferring female prisoners between jails and the reformatory in accordance with current practice and the authority provided by The Prison and Reformatories Act of Canada and The Penal and Reform Institutions Inspections Act.

Similar amendments are being made to The Reformatories Act and The Industrial Farms Act concerning the transferring of male prisoners.

Section 12 presently provides that the superintendent shall reside within the institution, Mercer Reformatory, and shall be the chief executive officer under direction of the inspector. Under present-day conditions it is no longer necessary for the superintendent to reside within the institution and is not the practice at the present time. The section is to be amended to reflect modern-day practices in this regard, and also to delete reference to inspector by substituting Deputy Minister.

Sections 14(1) and 15 prohibit the inspector and employees of the reformatory from having direct or indirect concern in the supplying or furnishing of goods to the reformatory, and from buying or selling anything from or to any inmate. These sections are being amended to extend the prohibitions to all employees of The Department of Reform Institutions.

Section 21 provides for transferring a mentally defective prisoner at the time of expiration of sentence to a suitable institution instead of discharging him in the normal way. The provisions of this section are covered by provisions under The Mental Hospitals Act. Therefore, section 21 is to be repealed as being obsolete and unnecessary. Should a prisoner be mentally defective or become mentally ill, he or she is transferred to an Ontario Hospital by warrant of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council in accordance with the provisions of The Mental Hospitals Act.

Those are the explanations, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT, 1953

Hon. M. Phillips moves second reading of Bill No. 44, "An Act to amend The Corporations Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before commencing my remarks, I would like to congratulate you on your well deserved elevation to that very auspicious office in this House, and to tell you that I have been noting the way you have been handling the office. I congratulate you, sir, on your fairness and your ability to handle most difficult situations, and I hope that your problem is not too great in the future, for it appeared to be quite a difficult one today.

I also want to congratulate our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). I have done that a great many times in this House, Mr. Speaker. But I never fail to have a great admiration for his ability to sense the needs of the people of this great province, and to work them out in a most humanitarian way, to be beneficial to the majority of our people. His ability has been proved through the years when people weigh the issues in the balance as they did June 11 last, and we see the outstanding results. I cannot help—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): But the membership opposite came down.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Not much, my hon. friend, and next time he will see the scales go the other way.

I congratulate the hon. Prime Minister and appreciate the opportunity that I have had to serve as one of his members.

I also want to congratulate an hon. Minister in this House, a fine young man I have known for a great many years, on his elevation to the very important portfolio of Education. I refer to the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts). I am sure that he is bringing to that portfolio a great deal of ability and judgment, and will prove of great benefit to the educational system of this province.

Another hon. gentleman I wish to congratulate is the member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) who was elevated to the position of commissioner of water resources. He is a young man who, in the future, will make a great mark as he has in the past. His disposition allows him at all times to roll with the punches and take things in a very good-natured, gracious way.

I also wish to congratulate all the new hon. members in this House—that is, on the government side. I think that—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I have not come to the hon. member yet.

I think that the calibre of young men whom we have attracted to this Legislature shows that we are not really barren in this province of attention to political life. The calibre of hon. members who have been elected this time indicates that they are going to make a great contribution to the affairs of this province.

I would also like to congratulate all the new Opposition hon. members. I appreciate them as opponents, and I am sure that they are going to try to do a very honest job. I know they will handle their added responsibilities as well as we are trying to do on this side of the House.

I think I would be remiss if I did not also congratulate the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), for whom I have a great deal of personal regard. He is, I might say, gaining in ability to debate, and in every other way as times goes on. I want to congratulate him for that, and to assure him that I watch him closely and appreciate him as a very worthy opponent.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): He got a lot of votes, too.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Yes, I would say perhaps he did.

I also want to mention another dear friend of mine, the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) who, for health reasons, was forced to give up the portfolio of Education. I think, Mr. Speaker, that every hon. member in this House would join me in saying that he is one of the most kindly, best-educated gentlemen who ever held the post of Minister of Education in this province. He is a true friend and a great Canadian, a scholar and a gentleman.

I appreciate having been his colleague, and I want to say that I hope that he has many years of good health and happiness and that we will have him with us for a long time.

I want to refer to the Throne speech, but before I do so I should, I think, mention that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) gave us a Throne speech that I think was a credit to this province. It is one that has many constructive things in it, and these things give us great reason to think about the tremendous problems we are facing in this House.

I would assure His Honour—and I think I am expressing the sentiments of all hon. members of the government—that those problems will be debated and thought out to the best of our ability, and I am sure to the best of the ability of the Opposition as well.

But I cannot help but feel that we in the north country—northwestern Ontario—have been singled out at this session for very, very careful criticism and attention.

I notice on the order paper where there are 40 questions asked by hon. members, that out of that 40 questions, 19 of them refer to northwestern Ontario. Almost 50 per cent. of the questions on the order paper refer to northwestern Ontario—including the Lakehead, and my own city of Port Arthur—and it just points up the fact how important to the scheme of things in this country that great northwestern Ontario has become.

I must say that I was quite delighted today to have with us a great many members of the northwestern Ontario chamber of commerce, who met our cabinet. The resolutions they have presented, and the debate that they held, shows that they are men of great ideas, men of substance, men who can think, and men who have close to their hearts the future of that great part of Canada known as northwestern Ontario.

They came down here, Mr. Speaker, hiring a plane at their own expense. The hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren), the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple), the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden), and myself had the honour of tendering them a luncheon, and I am sure we are delighted at the interest they are showing in the improvement of this province, especially the northwestern part.

I also was quite amused at a piece I cut out of the paper of February 2, 1960—the Port Arthur News Chronicle:

The Port Arthur Liberal riding association brings you an excerpt from the provincial Legislature debate February 2, 1960.

I believe this is a paid ad and I was just wondering—with the coffers of the Liberal party being reduced, which was my knowledge a while ago—how big and how often these things are going to be put in the papers up in my area. However, the hon. leader of the Opposition might answer that. I am quoting him:

Mr. Wintermeyer: Northern Ontario has been the forgotten land of Ontario. The simple fact is that they are not prepared to stand by any longer and have hon. Ministers of the Crown go up and say in effect, "You are a great people and we are all for you; goodbye, we are going back to southern Ontario."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is exactly what happened and I have been up there more recently—

Mr. Reaume: How true, how true.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: How often has the hon. member for Essex North been up there?

Mr. Reaume: Oh, often.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Could I count them? At any rate, I continue:

—and, more intensely than I have heretofore, I can tell hon. members the opinion up there. The simple fact is that we are doing nothing about the development of northern Ontario, except platitudinous pats on the back.

The simple thing that is required even now, Mr. Speaker, is, get a C. D. Howe—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Is the hon. Minister in a position to tell how many Ministers have visited the northwestern part of Ontario, prior to 1943?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Prime Minister did not want to go.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I do not remember seeing, in the days of the Hepburn government, more than Mr. Hepburn, Mr. Conant and the present hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon)—probably 3.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Was the hon. member up there? Well, I did not have the pleasure of meeting him, but certainly they were very rare occasions when Ministers in those days came up there.

Now then, I am very glad to see that our hon. Prime Minister—when they talked about Rt. hon. C. D. Howe, replied and said: "He is a pretty good fellow." Well, I am not going to disagree with that, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister does not dare.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I do not know. I do not think that I own any company of which he is a director. I do not know why I should laud him very much. However, the hon. leader of the Opposition carries on:

—or to get somebody with foresight, to get somebody who will provide action and not vision, to get somebody who will be more interested in action than press releases and Madison Avenue—

What I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, is where Madison Avenue comes in there. Did the hon. leader of the Opposition go from Port Arthur to New York that same night? I have never heard of Madison, we will say it was a printer's mistake.

Now here is what he says he wants:

—who will go up into the north and fill the need that is required to be filled, to use the combined forces that exist in the north and secure the finances.

Well, I am going up tomorrow morning, Mr. Speaker, I will probably see them there. The hon. leader of the Opposition continues:

Where are we going to get the money to help the north? They need it, Mr. Speaker. Investment in northern Ontario would bring manifold results, it would bring back investments and dividends, if one will, in hundred score—

An hon. member: The hon. leader of the Opposition does not know anything about it.

Mr. Wintermeyer:—it would provide opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I am serious about this particular subject. I think the simple fact of the matter is that we have not become Canadians. We are not sure whether we are going to be economic associates of the Americans, or just what we are going to do.

I would like to carry on with a lot of that, Mr. Speaker—I notice that the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald) comes in—but there is one remark I must leave with hon. members, because I am going to follow it up later. The hon. leader of the Opposition said:

Mr. Speaker, may I point this out? It is estimated that, in the next 10 years, the United States will require about 90 million tons more of ore per year than it is demanding at the present time. Quebec, it is anticipated, will produce about 45 of that 90. In Ontario we are producing 4 now. It is anticipated—

Then I asked, “What about Anaconda?”

The simple fact is the information I have from the very people who are complaining that we have no department of northern affairs in his very riding, that geologically speaking there are iron ore deposits in his area, in the Rainy River area, that ultimately could produce 45 million tons of ore, and we are doing nothing about it. This government is not providing—what did they do about freight rates?

Then the hon. member for York South says: “Ask them what they did about freight rates”; and the hon. leader of the Opposition said:

Mr. Speaker, all I say is this. We said we were in a new era. Now, if the hon. leader of the CCF, and the socialists generally, want to be 50 years behind times, then I simply say, Mr. Speaker, we are in a new era and we had better forget about the politics.

That is the end of the quote.

There is some I left out, but I was amazed at that statement, and I would just like to go on to tell hon. members some of the things that happen, and they can verify them through the gentlemen who were down at the northwestern chamber of commerce meeting today.

My mind goes back to the days of the Hepburn government, Mr. Speaker, because I was chairman of relief of the city of Port Arthur, an alderman and chairman of relief. I was also chairman of finance for the city of Port Arthur, so I know some of the things that happened.

In those days, Mr. Speaker, we had an export wood policy—you remember that—when export spruce could be exported out of this country in its raw state. What did we have in that area at that time? We had 4 pulp and paper mills. We had one in liquidation, two closed down with only a watchman in attendance, and one running so many days a week.

A deputation came to me, as chairman of finance of the city, and asked for a 50 per cent. tax deduction to give a few men a week's work a month to keep them off relief. Now, that was our pulp and paper situation in the 1930's when I came on the Port Arthur council. I would like hon. members to remember that. I think that some of them do, but that was the situation.

Now then, our roads were almost non-existent. I would like the hon. members—and the hon. member for Fort William can vouch for this—I think the only road we had going to the United States was over a trail, and it took us about 3 days to get over there. There was nothing east of the city, there was nothing north of the city. Roads in that area were absolutely non-existent at that time.

We tried to start highway No. 17, the trans-Canada highway at that time, and when the Liberal government came back in power in the federal House they closed all those camps down, and they were closed down for years. That is why the north shore of Lake Superior route is not finished today. Let them take the blame for those things, that is what they did for northwestern Ontario.

When our government came in, in 1943, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that the export of pulpwood was cut off, they were given 10 years to clean up. They either had to build mills or else they were out of business. Well, everybody said that such an attitude was hardly fair. However, we stood by our guns and what happened?

Today we have a marvellous pulp mill at Marathon, we have another very fine pulp mill at Terrace Bay, we have had tremendous extensions in all the others. I will tell hon. members about these later. We have highway work going on there costing millions of dollars. We have many new buildings started, details of which I will give hon.

members. They will be tired before I get through telling them what we have done.

Then I remember the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) talking about mental hospitals. Now let me tell him something—

Mr. Reaume: How about Canada Car?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Canada Car is working, and let me tell the hon. member that when I told the people last summer that the Canada Car would never close down, his federal hon. member and the CCF federal hon. member—and the hon. member for Fort William will remember this—had a headline in the paper saying that I was mischievous in what I said, but Canada Car today is working. And let me tell the hon. member something, because he goes about this country crying the blues. The CCF federal hon. member had a big headline in the paper a year ago last winter: "Soup Kitchens in Port Arthur This Winter." These legislators who go about this country disturbing the public mind are absolutely dangerous to this country—

Mr. MacDonald: He will look after—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: And, my hon. friend, the CCF federal hon. member was one of them who said that, when there was no such thing possible—and today—

Mr. MacDonald: In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, the hon. member made a fine job of it last time. He travelled that constituency from day to day, through and through, and how did he turn out? How did he turn out? And I will say that next time, the federal hon. member will be hopelessly through, too.

Now then, we read that there has been nothing done in northwestern Ontario. Let me give hon. members some of the statements of prominent men who live in that district, which appeared in the annual report of the northwestern chamber of commerce, just off the press, about 10 days ago.

Now just listen to this:

Here is a statement from Robert John Flatt, president of G. R. Duncan and Company. He says:

We have the resources, the raw material for great growth. Our cities are expanding. Our region is progressing. We can and will be the Toronto of the north.

All right.

Then let me quote Stanley Ball's remarks. He is the president of the northwestern Ontario associated chambers of commerce.

Now these are in their last report, which is not more than 10 days old.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): But what is he saying about this government?

Mr. MacDonald: What are they saying about the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will come to that. He says this:

Of course the associated chambers of commerce are playing their part in fostering this development—

Is anybody going to ask me what the government is doing? All right, just a minute.

Of course the associated chambers of commerce are playing their part in fostering this development through suggestions to the provincial and federal governments for projects to assist in the expansion of northwestern Ontario.

They have made it a policy to present some 40 resolutions each year to the governmental bodies and, over the years, have been successful in obtaining action on at least 90 per cent. of these resolutions. How does the hon. member like that? How does he like that? And he says the government is not doing anything.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): When did Mr. Ball say it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Ten days ago, I told the hon. member the book just came out. Let him ask the hon. member for Fort William, he knows. He probably got a copy. He is a member of the association.

Mr. Reaume: Tory?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: All right, let me quote Alexander Phillips, the general manager of the northwestern Ontario development association. The hon. leader of the Opposition says there are no roads in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Reaume: He said they are full of holes.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Here is his quote, all right:

Northwestern Ontario now is served by more than 5,000 miles of highways and roads. More are needed and existing ones will be improved as development of the region grows apace.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Let the hon. member listen to this:

Government and resources industries co-operate in providing access roads to new mineral deposits, while similar combinations of enterprise are providing all-weather main haul roads for the forest products industry.

It must be apparent, Mr. Speaker, from the foregoing, that transportation is matching strides with the general growth of the north-west. This trend is bound to continue and expand in the years ahead. This statement is by the general manager of the northwestern Ontario development association, yet some hon. members say there is nothing being done.

Now then, let us hear from P. V. LeMay, president of the northwestern Ontario timber operators' association:

Improved methods of extracting our timber crop, coupled with an adequate labour supply during the year, have combined to give a sense of buoyance to the forest industry in northwestern Ontario that has not been experienced since the latter part of 1956. There is every indication that this general upsurge, though not of boom proportions, will continue well on into 1960. and yet, Mr. Speaker, our opponents would have us think that northwestern Ontario is in the doldrums.

Let me quote from Mr. D. I. Mattress, who my hon. friend from Fort William knows. He is the manager of the northwestern region of the Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Reaume: Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This will be very interesting for the hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: Not from him.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I quote:

No halt to the growth of the northwestern system can be foreseen. Since the end of World War II, Ontario Hydro has expanded its resources in northwestern Ontario by no less than 331 per cent., the largest percentage increase of any of the company system.

Now that is remarkable is it not? Hon. members can prove that, they can get it out of the record.

The long-range planning undertaken by Ontario Hydro in northwestern Ontario is an indication of faith that the future of Canada rests in the development of the northland. It is the expression of a desire to assist the economic growth of what may well be, within the next few decades, Ontario's most important and productive area, Mr. Speaker.

It is recognition of the fact that electricity is the base upon which the edifice of our economy, and hopes for the future, will be erected. Ontario Hydro, I am convinced, will—as it has in the past—meet the challenge for abundant low-cost power.

The record of achievement is so impressive, Mr. Speaker, that, along with the Opposition, I can hardly believe it myself.

Now then, the hon. leader of the CCF has dire things to say, but I want him to listen to the record and we will see whether there are going to be soup kitchens in Port Arthur.

The city of Port Arthur and its twin community of Fort William—and I bow here to the hon. member—occupy an important place in the economy of Canada as a transportation and shipping centre at the crossroads of the nation. Together they are a growing industrial centre whose products are consigned to many parts of the continent; they are a distribution and supply hub serving northwestern Ontario and western Canada.

The population of Port Arthur and Fort William approaches 90,000, and that of the Lakehead area—urban and some rural—is approximately 100,000, or nearly one-half of the total population of northwestern Ontario.

The Canadian head of the lakes and St. Lawrence deep waterway—Port Arthur and its twin community—form the third largest port in Canada in handling tonnage. Now that is amazing. Theirs is the third largest port in tonnage in the Dominion of Canada, yielding only to Montreal and Vancouver and almost equalling the combined tonnage of the ports of Toronto and Hamilton.

That is amazing, Mr. Speaker. I did not realize that myself. Cargoes exceed 2,000 during the shipping season—that is, 2,000 vessels—and total up to 14 million tons of grain, iron ore, coal, newsprint, pulpwood, petroleum products, and general freight. This is surprising.

In the opening experimental seaway season, 131 ocean ships were loaded at the Canadian Lakehead—

Mr. Reaume: That is pretty good.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would say it is a lot better than Windsor.

Mr. Reaume: Tell us about the freight rates.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The freight rates?

An hon. member: Yes. Would the hon. Minister mind explaining about them?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will come to them.

Another hon. member: Well, hurry up.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The twin harbours' avenue covers 40 miles of developed and perfected waterfront, 26 grain elevators with a storage capacity of 93 million bushels, largest of all ports in the world. Twelve transit and storage sheds represent more than 250,000 square feet of space with a combined capacity of 70,000 tons.

Now those are big figures, Mr. Speaker, and I look at some of the Opposition hon. members over there and I hope that this is sinking in, and that they will realize they should not listen to their hon. leader when he says that northwestern Ontario has been neglected.

Under construction is a $7.5 million general cargo terminal to berth both ocean and lake ships with freight and transit sheds, administration buildings and rail and highway access. The two transcontinental railway systems have more than 350 miles of industrial and yard marshaling tracks. Industrial production embraces newsprint and fine papers, kraft and pulp, lakeships, chemicals, and aircraft components.

There is Canada Car, I point out to my hon. friend. Tractor trailers, construction materials, machinery, concrete products, wheat, starch, jute bags, tents and awnings and fabricated metal products. Diversified industry—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will come to that. This government is responsible for every bit of the improvements I detailed because there was none of it there before—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: They just cannot take it. I am sorry the hon. members opposite cannot take it, but that is a fact.

Now then, 4 pulp and paper mills, which I told them were closed down when they went out of power, make the Canadian Lakehead one of the largest producing centres in the world. One of its mills is the world's fourth largest, and that is the Great Lakes Pulp and Paper. Not only is Port Arthur the seat of the Thunder Bay district, but also it is a major distribution centre for northwestern Ontario, which is an immense region of 212,000 square miles that embraces more than half the land and water mass of Ontario. Now there is an amazing statement.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Why, I would be delighted.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Minister why it is that the pulp and paper industry has been so critical of this government's policy with respect to that particular industry.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I do not think they have been critical, to tell the hon. leader of the Opposition the honest truth. I read what P. V. LeMay, of Marathon Paper, said. He does not seem to be very critical, and as I go on, the hon. leader of the Opposition will find out how the government is given credit for these different things.

I have not come to the good part yet. That this big area is growing is evident in the population increase from less than 150,000 a decade ago to nearly 220,000 today. In the increase of manufacturing plants—now listen to this—from 257 ten years ago to more than 330. Now, we cannot compete with Toronto, or Windsor perhaps, but I think we are getting very closely on a basis with Kitchener.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister is behind Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Are we behind it? Well, the hon. member does not hear us hollering about unemployment.

Mr. Reaume: Well, the hon. Minister ought to holler.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The gross value of production has increased from less than $100 million to more than $250 million today. The northwest today has 10 giant pulp and paper mills, 8 gold producers, 3 copper and zinc mines, one of Canada's great iron ore mines and a second scheduled for production in 1960.

Let me say something about that great iron mine, Mr. Speaker. I see the hon. member for Rainy River looking at me, and he knows this. There is one of the greatest organizations in this country, an organization that did not just move into that area and mine the ore out and take it away. They have put a lot of their money back into that community, developing it, and thinking all the time of the welfare of the people. One of their top officials is very, very prominent in the northwestern Ontario chamber of commerce, and they are going to have further large development—and they are the right kind of company, in my opinion, to have it. The Steep Rock people are a great firm.

Mr. Reaume: And they are hollering about freight rates, too.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes, the hon. member is quite right.

I do not mind my people kicking because no one should ever be satisfied. I do not want them to be, and they appreciate the great efforts this government is making and they will keep on pressing them, and with that I have no quarrel. That is the only way we progress.

Certainly they are kicking. And I hope they keep on kicking because that helps me when I come down to the government and say, "I would like some more," and they say, "Oh, look at all you have," and I say, "Look at what my people are saying." And I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition hon. members act in the same way.

Now, I told hon. members that, to meet increasing demands for power, and to anticipate future requirements, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario has developed resources beyond the 600,000-kilowatt mark, the fastest growth in Ontario. The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) the other day mentioned that very thing, Mr. Speaker. These general statistics are given merely to indicate to the hon. members that northwestern Ontario is a significant segment of our country, and that Port Arthur is a vital centre making progress, and that our area has not been forgotten by this government. Indeed, it has been built up by this government.

Mr. Reaume: Then why do they elect Liberals?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I did not get that.

Mr. Reaume: Then why do they elect Liberals?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I did not hear the question.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Well, how does the hon. Minister explain that—why do they elect Liberals if they are so thankful?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: In that area?

Well, I would say that the Liberal hon. member, whom I know very well, Mr. Speaker, is a very fine gentleman. Whether that was a personal victory—

An hon. member: They are all honourable men.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I think that was a personal victory, due to the hon. member's father who was a great man in that area.

But certainly the reason was no criticism of this government, and I can tell him that.

An hon. member: Who told him that?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No criticism of this government. Let the hon. member go up there and he will find out.

Now, today two other factors of tremendous importance increase the region's potential—I refer to the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes deep waterway, and to the advent and impact of natural gas.

The combination of fuel at low rates, and a waterway from the centre of Canada to anywhere in the world, Mr. Speaker, unveils a vista of limitless industrial possibilities when backed by the heritage of forests, minerals, and the soil and water resources of the region. And I think that is a statement that will stand up under investigation because it is so true. Even before it was available at Port Arthur, natural gas served spectacular notice of its beneficial effects in the industrial communities.

I would like some of the hon. members in the CCF benches to listen to this.

One of Canada's largest malting companies, once assured of the reality of the trans-Canada pipe line and the imminent availability of natural gas, changed its decision to expand an eastern factory in favour of doubling the capacity of its Port Arthur plant. This project involved more than $4 million. Natural gas increased the efficiency of the malting process, added to the plant staff, gave the company a better competitive position, and increased municipal tax revenues.

Many other instances could be cited of the benefit of natural gas in our area, yet we heard so much criticism of it in the last session.

The Lakehead and northwestern Ontario pulp and paper mills, within reach of distribution lines, have all converted to natural gas. They report substantial savings and consequently enhancement of their competitive places in the industry.

Similar responses come from commercial and residential customers, whose expenditures for natural gas installations to date is reported to be more than $5 million in northwestern Ontario, and we heard here that it would never be a success.

An hon. member: Who said that?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh, I could name them.

Gratifying to our city has been the increasing interest in the area by industrial and commercial concerns. Availability of natural gas has thus improved our prospects of expanding all avenues of growth, provided our costs can be kept within economic limits—and I do not mean to socialize them, either, I point out to my hon. friends across. We will look after this growth with free enterprise.

For example, a major iron ore company, Premium Iron Ores Limited, now is investigating seriously the proposal to build in the Lakehead area a $10 million plant for the production of high quality pig iron. Contemplated is an initial output of 150,000 tons for western Canada and United States markets.

Such a plant would utilize raw ore from Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited, offer substantial employment even at the beginning of operation, and provide additional and sorely needed tax revenues to the municipality in which it is located. Our government has met them and is working on it.

Now, let me digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker. The other day the hon. leader of the Opposition got up and said that it was a point of emergency to discuss Elliot Lake. With that I agree. Now, the remark was made that none of the northern hon. members got up and spoke about it.

Mr. Speaker, not a week ago I was with the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Energy Resources when we discussed something, with Elliot Lake in mind, that may do a million times more than all the speeches that will be heard in this House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is it doing?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: This is a little part of it now, and I will get on to it in my remarks. We will develop, Mr. Speaker—an industry that will probably employ at the ultimate, 15,000 men.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Where? When?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: And taking 7 for 1, it will take to our population 105,000 people. Now, we do not stand up in this House and talk all the time, we work while the hon. members opposite are talking. We are meeting officials and discussing these things with—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister permit a question?

This is just about the most extraordinary statement that has been made in this House.

I would think that this House is entitled to some explanation. Certainly, to merely make this bald statement that something extraordinary is going to come, without divulging more of the details, I think is unfair to this House.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Speaker, I admire the hon. leader of the Opposition so much that I will not make any caustic remark. But I will say, as I carry along with the speech, that he might catch some idea of what I am talking about. But I am not prepared yet to divulge everything about it.

What I am getting at is this, that the charge was made that none of the northwestern hon. members got up and said anything about it.

Mr. Reaume: That is true.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: We have been working on it for weeks while the hon. members over there have been sitting back wondering what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: I think the members should give all members a chance, when speaking in debate, to explain themselves and their remarks. I am sure that will be acceptable to all members in the House.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I said that our government has met certain people, and is working on this.

All this embraces only the immediate plans of Premium Iron Ores Limited. From the embryo stage, expansion is envisaged up to 3 times the initial production to make it one of the largest operations of its kind in Canada, important to Canada and to my region in the processing of our own raw materials. The Premium company project involves natural gas from Alberta and iron ore from the Steep Rock range, which may be used in the direct reduction process to provide Canada with one of the principal staples of industrial progress.

Lest this projection be deemed fantastic, we cite the Steep Rock range as foreshadowing what is in store for this region of Ontario. This government is providing energetic, imaginative, and businesslike Canadian policy. By the later 1960's, production from the mines of Steep Rock Limited, Tayland Ore Company and Canadian Charleston Limited, is expected to reach between 8 and 9 million tons valued at approximately $100 million a year. I want to give credit to the hon. member for Rainy River, Mr. Speaker, for a lot of this, too—for the tremendously beneficial work that he has done.

Steep Rock alone has produced tremendous wealth in ore, and has mushroomed a tiny rail hamlet into the thriving mining town of Atikokan and injected new prosperity into the lifestream of the whole area.

Now, what is happening on the Steep Rock range can be repeated on a dozen other immense iron ore bodies in northwestern Ontario. Indeed, preliminary work already is underway on several.

I would like to tell the hon. leader of the Opposition something about the plans of the Anaconda Company of Canada Limited, because I have been very close to it since its inception. If these plans are fulfilled, we can expect another tremendous iron ore development in the Nakina area.

Now, these are not dreams, Mr. Speaker. The airstrip is made, the road has gone in—and do not forget that this government has built that road for that property. They have built all of these roads to develop these properties, and I am refuting the remark which was made that nothing had been done for northwestern Ontario.

This great company, implementing a $10 million deal for the property at its inception, now is completing a pilot plant, erecting staff buildings, completing an airstrip and a 40-mile access road with government assistance, to open up an iron ore body estimated—and listen to this—estimated at between one-half billion and one billion tons of ore, rating 30 per cent.

Ultimately another new mining town will dot the map of the northwest. That is what we are doing. Instead of talking about providing employment for Elliot Lake, we are doing something about it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: When?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: South of the gold mining camp of Red Lake, Iron Bay Mines Limited—and that is the hon. member for Kenora's district—has entered into an agreement with an undisclosed United States company for development of its iron ore body estimated to contain more than a quarter of a billion tons, amenable to open pit recovery. Both these ore bodies are medium and low grade ore that would utilize natural gas in the process.

Mr. Speaker, natural gas was certainly a blessing in disguise when we got it in northwestern Ontario. Within the realm of probability, too, is the utilization of natural gas and the smelting of copper and zinc ores in northwestern Ontario. Hon. members have all heard about the production in the Manitouwadge camp.

Let them not think that our government had not a great part in that, the same as with Elliot Lake.

The hon. member for Fort William was a little angry because The Department of Planning and Development had laid out certain plans, and he did not feel that he could adhere to them and wanted some special interest looked after in his behalf.

Several hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): The hon. Minister knows better than that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, he could not adhere to the different plans in the municipality, he wanted something a little different, they would not go along with him and that made him irritated.

Mr. Chapple: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I am afraid that the hon. Minister from Port Arthur is a little wrong there. I feel that the government had no right to build this townsite in the first place. And strictly the way they did, taking over a 144 square miles and running it to the south—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: All right, let him explain his building. That is what he is mad about.

Mr. Chapple: Building? We would not go in there on that solid rock for anything.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: He has a beautiful little town there, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think he has been in there lately to see it.

Mr. Chapple: No, I have not.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Now, what does all this mean—

Mr. Chapple: Who would want to be?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, he contributed more than the hon. Minister did.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: In the estimation of our mining authorities, it simply means that realization of our mining potential will add at least 100,000 more citizens to our population in the foreseeable future through iron ore development alone. That is based on the known ore reserves.

Underway is an intensified aerial magnetometer survey of 70,000 square miles of the Canadian shield in northwestern Ontario by the Ontario government, augmenting a gigantic aerial search by a professional agency sponsored by 15 of Canada's largest mining companies.

New instruments are being developed able to penetrate deep into the pre-Cambrian crust to reveal the secrets of mineral wealth hidden there. It is questionable, therefore, if our favourable geological areas will be thoroughly explored for many decades.

They are tremendous, Mr. Speaker. Our 50,000 square miles of accessible forest wealth today sustain these 10 big pulp and paper mills, plywood, lumber, and diversified forest products industries. These industries form a strong pillar supporting our economy.

All this proves to hon. members that northwestern Ontario has not been forgotten. The pulp and paper industry alone now has the capacity of more than a million tons of newsprint per year, and approximately half that tonnage in kraft and sulphite products.

Availability of natural gas at reasonable rates is bound to accelerate plans of two of Canada's largest pulp and paper concerns to establish new plants in northwestern Ontario. I note that the hon. member for Kenora is not in the House; however, the hon. member knows that Anglo-Newfoundland Development Corporation proposes, as hon. members know, erection of a very large mill in the Sioux Lookout area. The only reason it has not been gone ahead with is because the market at the present time will not absorb it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I beg pardon?

Mr. Chapple: The market is out of line. They cannot fill the mill with the market out of line the way it is. The government did that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The Liberals had no market. If the hon. members opposite want to give us credit for the market being a little depressed, we will take that, but they had none when they were in. That is the difference.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Great Lakes Company Limited, which recently completed a $35 million expansion, proposes to build a new mill to produce cellulose products, other than newsprint. However, some of our tree species, not now being used, will provide opportunities to industry for the manufacture of explosives, plastics, alcohol, fibreboard and cellulose products of many kinds.

When one realizes that more than 4,000 products today are made from the tree, then the limitless potential of our forest resources, in meeting the requirements of an expanding Canadian population, are apparent. Natural gas is bound to play a significant role in the greater diversification of our forest products industry providing that its cost, as I say, is maintained at levels that make new enterprises economically feasible against growing competition from other countries.

Now, nearly two decades ago, Mr. Speaker, Stephen Leacock in his history of Canada made the following observation on northern Ontario. He said this:

Perhaps the brightest page in these annals is the record of the discovery and exploration of the incalculable mineral wealth of the central wilderness of Canada between Hudson Bay and the Great Lakes. This means far more than the wealth itself, great though it must be. It removes from our Commonwealth its fatal defect of an uninhabited and seemingly worthless central area which broke east and west apart forever. The touch of King Midas is turning desolation into fairyland.

Mr. Speaker, how true that is. How true it is coming to be.

Hon. members will remember Rt. hon. Prime Minister Diefenbaker's vision of a greater Canada—

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal hon. members have their fun about the vision of a greater Canada, of railways and highways pushing into the country's northern regions to unlock its wealth of natural resources and people its valleys with pioneers.

The Rt. hon. Prime Minister's dream of frontiers ever rolling northward, of giving depth to the nation's development, has stirred anew the imagination of fellow Canadians.

But our Ontario government is not seeking the extremities of Canada to apply this enunciated policy of development. Here in mid-Canada, Mr. Speaker, in the northwest part of Ontario—from Lake Superior to Hudson and James Bays—is the real challenge to the imagination.

The resolution and the audacity of the federal administration—not at its back door but right at the centre of Canada—is confronted with unlimited opportunity to expedite the development of a mighty middle area. This development will bind our nation more firmly with economic links, giving perpetual strength.

Our provincial government, Mr. Speaker, is constantly meeting with these business leaders, assisting in every way possible these great developments that are ever going on.

Northwestern Ontario in 1959 gained new stature in the economy of Canada in a dual role: as a terminal seaboard area for world shipping, and as a wider gateway for western Canada to all oceans and continents. The dream of decades, Mr. Speaker, of a very deep waterway to the Atlantic, is now a reality.

Mr. Whicher: And who did it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Bob Saunders.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The Royal standard, Mr. Speaker, proudly streaming in the breeze off our shores, the flags of a dozen nations in our ports, attest to the fulfilment of the major phase of the seaway. More than 18 months ago, we proposed to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada that no other event would so focus world attention on the seaway than a Royal voyage through its length.

So far as we know, it was a suggestion that originated at the Lakehead, and it was vigorously pursued to finality by the greatest leader this province has ever had—our hon. Prime Minister. Little did we then realize, Mr. Speaker, that by mid-1959 the prow of the Britannia would cleave the waters of Lake Superior and Thunder Bay, and that Queen Elizabeth would step ashore on historic ground in northwestern Ontario, really 2,300 miles from the open Atlantic.

Reference to the Royal voyage is made here only to point up the significance of vision and imagination in our approach to the problems and opportunities inherent in the growth and development of northwestern Ontario.

What we do now will determine the pattern of our progress in the years ahead. In truth, it may be said that our people of northwestern Ontario are endeavouring to play an effective role, in accelerating the tempo of that progress, by actively associating ourselves with most constructive movements that are basic to growth.

Where our people have not initiated projects, we have identified ourselves strongly with other regions in Ontario in advancing the general interest of the northwest in various fields. We have maintained close co-operation with other public and business groups, and with our federal and provincial Parliaments.

There have been a number of major milestones recently in northwestern Ontario development. One has already been mentioned—the St. Lawrence seaway. Then there is the decision of the federal government to proceed with the seaway dock. Also there is the solemn assurance—listen to this—by none other than the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario that the present single highway artery to western Canada will be completely rehabilitated and transformed into a top standard roadway—

Mr. Reaume: That is old stuff.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Not so very old.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, it is all full of holes.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Concerning this progress in highway projects, the hon. leader of the Opposition said there was nothing being done for roads.

Mr. Reaume: No, they are all full of holes up there.
